For 30 years Miss Gifford's bought her hats at a shop here where she calls in and says, "I need a black hat, a blue one, and a red one." When they're found Miss Gifford goes downtown from her Frazee Hall office on campus to make her selection as she does with dresses.

For 30 years she's had the same hairdresser. Miss Gifford's not about to start putting on airs for anyone. Those 11,000,000 under her command will see, as always, an imposing, well-groomed, friendly woman of distinction.

"There's a hoary story on me about my performance at a club meeting in Indianapolis," Miss Gifford grins.

"All these skinny fashion models were parading during the program, and I had to leave the room. The only exit was right along the models' walk through the audience. As I passed one clubwoman she reached out and nabbed

Dear to Miss Gifford's heart are the recipients of Kentucky-federation scholarships; with her above is Miss Young Won Lee of Korea, who will get a master's degree in education in June. Since 1943 when Miss Gifford suggested this means of doing something tangible about the clubs' international leanings, Argentina, France, Turkey, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, and other countries have sent collegiate emissaries to Lexington for study at U. of K.

Unofficial headquarters downtown for Miss Gifford is still the Lafayette Hotel, where she meets convening clubwomen, talks for fund drives, greets hundreds of friends. She was born in Mount Olivet, 50 miles west of Lexington. To bring together heads of the larger groups of women in the state Miss Gifford started a presidents' council (now inactive) to act as a clearinghouse for their activities and projects, hopes to revive it.

me. 'At last, a dress my size! Honey, how much is that dress of yours?' she asked. Without a break in my step I said, $89.50,' and sailed on."

Miss Gifford can entertain without fountains of champagne, files of servants, impressive surroundings, though she appreciates them. No cook herself, she eats her favorite caramel pie (or most of the portion served) and proceeds from food to more conversation. The exchange of ideas is always the attraction to her; when she's a hostess in Washington it will continue to be.

Her army of women may think there's something of the bearing of a judge about Chloe Gifford.

When she was the only girl among 150 boys in law school at U. of K. Miss Gifford, daughter of a tobaccoman, wanted to become a juvenile judge. Barely 21 when she passed her Kentucky bar exams, she was told on a job-hunting visit in Illinois that she was just too young to be a judge.

She turned to teaching at Sayre, and to becoming in 1939 the youngest woman ever to become president of the Woman's Club of Central Kentucky, her first club post.

Once a reporter in Washington called to ask her if she minded being referred to in his story as a maiden lady.

"Heavens, no," Miss Gifford boomed. She will be the first unmarried woman (and the second Southern woman, and the first professional woman) ever to head the general federation.

Come In, Ed Murrow! Well, a Man Can Dream, Can't He?

"Are you there, Gordon?"

"Yes, Mr. Murrow. Right here in the living room. Pull up an ash tray and join us, won't you?"

Gordon

WELL, IT HAPPENED to syndicated columnist Inez Robb Friday night. Mrs. Robb, in her New York apartment, was Person-to-Person'd by CBS-TV's Ed Murrow.

If the children can believe in Santa Claus, this reporter can believe that some day, somehow, ole Ed will bring his cameras into the Gordon manse. Just as he did for Mrs. Robb.

Hark! Can hear it now—

MURROW (after deep drag on cigaret): Hello, there! May I ask what you are doing in the attic at this time of night? Aren't you a bit cramped up there?

GORDON: As a matter of fact, Ed, we aren't in the attic. This is the living room.

MURROW (with nervous laugh): Oh, I'm sorry. I should have known it was the living room. Now I can see—that beautiful picture on the wall. Obviously an art treasure.

GORDON: Yes, she IS lovely, isn't she?

MURROW: Early Cezanne, I presume . . .

GORDON: As a matter of fact, Ed, it isn't. This is Lone Star, 1958. Like I always say, you can't beat the breweries when it comes to picking calendar models. Her name is Prunella.

MURROW (lighting another cigaret): You have a fabulous place there. That IS a house, isn't it? Would you mind showing our viewers around?

GORDON: As a matter of fact, Ed, it will be a pleasure. Just follow me. We're very proud of it.

MURROW: Ah, I see. That truly is a beautiful garden. But it's a trifle narrow, isn't it?

GORDON: Actually, Ed, as a matter of fact, this is not a garden. It's the alley. But we love it. Not having a patio we entertain all our friends out here during the summer. See this garbage can? It is inscribed—a gift from friends who are grateful for the good times they have had out here. Naturally, this can is very dear to us.

MURROW: It's a lovely can. (He lights two cigarets.)

MURROW: Any hobbies? Golf? Stamp collecting?

GORDON: Oh, nothing that unusual. We pick up a shrunken head here and there, have built up a fair collection. That's all. Would you care to see the heads?

MURROW: Anybody I know?

GORDON: If you mean HIM, no. No TV critics in the collection.

MURROW: That's too bad.

GORDON: Ed, we'd like for you to meet the family. This is James Lee, our son. Say hello to Mr. Murrow, son.

JAMES LEE: You promised Matt Dillon! Who's Ed Murrow? I wanna meet Matt Dillon.

GORDON: Ha, ha. Terrific sense of humor, that boy. And now, if you please, I'd like to introduce the wife . . .

MURROW: Oops, sorry, but I'm out of cigarets. And you know how it is, man—without a fag ole Ed's a drag. Good night.

GORDON: As a matter of fact . . .

MURROW: Good . . . NIGHT!

Paar Nixes 'Place to Place' But Still Eyes '62 for Late Nite Windup

Jack Paar insists he'll stop doing his nightly stint for NBC-TV in 1962. Host of the latenight program, which is worth in excess of $12,000,000 annually to his network, explained that his contract ends in two-years and that he is concerned about his health.

Since he returned from a three-week "vacation" some two months ago, the question of Paar's allegiance to the old "Tonight" stanza has not been loudly raised. Paar had threatened to quit in mid-February, but ultimately bent his own will and gave in to NBC.

Because of fears about his health and because he cherishes his weekends, the $5,000-a-week NBC star rejected hosting chores on a once-weekly half-hour program called "Place to Place." Stanza, which was until last week tentatively slotted by NBC-TV for 10:30-11 Sundays, is the brainchild of John Aaron and Jesse Zousmer, who fathered "Person to Person" on CBS-TV.

"I thought about it one night," Paar said late last week, "and I did say yes." He added a second later: "But my health is important to me."

Paar said that if he chose to do the program with Aaron and Zousmer, he would have been in line for a half ownership of the package. (It's understood from other quarters within the network that the proceeds from salary and ownership equity in this weekly 30-minute stanza would have probably exceeded his salary on "Tonight.")

The tv personality, in a conversation on Thursday (5) afternoon shortly prior to taping that night's edition of "Tonight," explained about his weekends in a bit more detail. "I cherish my weekends. I can't wait for tonight's show to be over because I don't have to be back until Tuesday next week." In general terms, Paar explained that he does four new shows one week and three the next for NBC, and the week upcoming was the week for three instead of four appearances.

When he spoke of "Place to Place," Paar talked in a tone that was appreciative. "It's the kind of show I want to do—maybe I will in a year." Details of the new "P to P" format were not available, but it is understood that it would have required the services of the host no more than three to four hours on any given Sunday.

Paar's contract on "Tonight" commenced in July of 1957, and—from what he said about a five-year deal—it should end sometime around July, 1962. He acknowledged that someone on a high NBC echelon had warned him about the damage he might do to his health by assuming the additional responsibility of "Place to Place." He maintained that his well-being was the network's principal concern in broaching the subject.

This might be construed as a sacrifice by NBC, since there reportedly were at least three sponsors seriously interested in underwriting "Place to Place." One was Richard Hudnut and another was Allstate Insurance, which, in the week since it became clear that Paar would not go through with the Sunday show, firmed up alternate week half-hours of a program on CBS-TV.

On Unabashed Love for America

Critics Who Called Her Testimonial 'Cheap Flag Waving' Get an Answer

The repercussions from one of Edward R. Murrow's "Person to Person" television shows have been, I think, significant. On May 28, Murrow took his audience into our home in New York and there he, my husband and myself had something under 12 minutes of conversation, about which I am still hearing.

These shows are largely concerned with personal questions about how one lives, works, etc. The program has no script. Murrow suggests subjects, but one has no advance knowledge of exactly what questions he may ask.

In the course of our brief conversation, he remarked that I, having lived much abroad, must feel at home in many countries. I replied that I had paid prolonged visits to many countries and had lived several years on end in two; that I had never visited a country without finding things to admire. Yet, I said, I had always been homesick, and I tried to explain what I had missed, and why I loved my homeland above all others.

I cannot now repeat exactly what I spontaneously said. I spoke, I remember, of the beauty and variety of its landscape, of its vast breadth and stir, and of our people—their utter lack of servility, their generosity toward strangers—and perhaps of some other things I cannot now recall.

What is interesting is not what I said but the public reaction. Letters poured in, the great majority of them expressing joy that I had so spoken of America.

But others took me to task because I had not pointed out our flaws, and still others said I had indulged in cheap flag-waving, obviously knowing what would "go over with the audience."

All this puzzles me.

Is there anything extraordinary in publicly avowing love of country? Do the flaws and shortcomings of our society change the fact of that love? Is it not a cause for gratitude that our land is bountiful, beautiful, wide and free? And why the notion that anyone who speaks or writes is calculating the effect?

I do not speak of "democracy," or other abstractions. Nobody loves an abstraction. American democracy, to me, is not best expressed in the law books, but in the mien of our people as individuals; in their expectation of being taken for what they are and granting the same in return; in their love of conversation, which they will open with a total stranger; in their recognition of natural superiorities in persons, without any obsequiousness toward classes. There is a free give and take here which just does not exist anywhere else.

Why is it "flag-waving" to assert a peculiar attachment? I do not wish my country to rule over other countries, or strive to export its "way of life," which elsewhere may prove intolerable. Because I love my country, I respect the attachment of others to theirs. Patriotism does not divide mankind. It is a feeling all men share.

We feel a peculiar attachment to our families in full recognition of their flaws. To love "in spite of," is the only way any of us can love or be loved.

Love expresses itself in the assumption of responsibilities. My responsibilities toward other nations are limited by inherent circumstances. It is largely a negative responsibility—not to meddle and not to harm. My responsibilities for my own country embrace all the obligations of citizenship and more.

A vague sort of internationalism seems to afflict certain minds, gnawing at the roots of natural attachments and normal responsibilities. It seems easier for some people to love "all mankind" than to get along with their next-door neighbors.

But as for me, my country is myself, my home, as close as my own breathing, and if anyone asks me how I feel about it, I shall testify.

Millions See Queen Mary in CBS-TV Show

Captain Sorrell Interviewed on 'Person-to-Person'

On a coast-to-coast telecast over the CBS network on January 22, the distinguished radio-TV personality Edward R. Murrow interviewed Captain Donald W. Sorrell, master of the Queen Mary, on the program "Person to Person." By means of an intricate remote hook-up the show came directly from aboard the giant Queen Mary in her New York berth, and was viewed by millions across the nation.

Captain Sorrell, who won admiration on both sides of the Atlantic early last February when "in a superb and daring exhibition of seamanship" he docked the 81,000-ton Queen Mary without the aid of tugs, showed his "visitors" something of the complicated mechanism on the superliner's bridge and discussed some of the details involved in ferrying thousands of people across the Atlantic on his weekly express runs.

Edward R. Murrow, who became famous during the second World War for his intrepid on-the-spot radio broadcasts from danger spots in Europe, and has continued with dynamic Monday-through-Friday evening news broadcasts and two half-hour weekly TV shows, "Person to Person" and "See It Now," is on cordial-to-intimate terms with most of the important people in the United States and Britain. He is renowned for his choice of dramatic situations and spectacular events and his interview with the famous master of the world's second largest super liner on his half-hour TV program thrilled fans who have met through him many of the famous people of the day.

When Ed Murrow, famous radio-TV commentator, interviewed Captain Sorrell, prominent master of the famous Cunard liner QUEEN MARY, on his coast-to-coast CBS-TV show "Person to Person," there were great preparations involved. The show was done live aboard the ship herself, with a mobile unit set up on the dock, and vital microphone and camera cables were passed from the truck up to the ship (Picture 7). Cameras and equipment were set up in the captain's quarters (Picture 1), on the bridge (Picture 6) and on deck (Picture 9). In Picture 4, Captain Sorrell is shown being initiated by the director into the intricacies of his microphone, which was concealed inside his shirt. In Picture 3, Ed Murrow is seen chatting to Captain Sorrell in the latter's stateroom prior to the show, admiring a sample of the captain's art work—his hobby—a black and white sketch of the MAURETANIA. Picture 2 shows the view millions of tele-viewers across the nation had of the QUEEN MARY and Mr. Murrow at the beginning of the show, Picture 5 the introduction of Captain Sorrell, who handles the huge 81,000-ton ship and up to 3,500 souls normally carried on board, and Picture 8 the captain in his own quarters with family pictures and lucky black cat, a gift from his wife.

Beautiful New Resort Hotels Seen On Sunshine Cruise Routes

Passengers sailing on the last two of the winter's Sunshine Cruises— Mauretania ventures to the West Indies and South America leaving New York March 11 and March 27—will have opportunities to sample life at some of the finest resort hotels in the glamorous Caribbean area in addition to all the sightseeing, shopping and entertainment pleasures the itineraries offer.

One of the most outstanding of these hotels is the new Tamanaco at Caracas, Venezuela, now reached in just 25 minutes following the completion of an excellent new road from the port La Guaira. The Hotel Tamanaco is located high in the beautiful Andes Mountains overlooking Caracas. Very modern in style and luxuriously compact, the hotel features plate-glass walls and sweeping terraces, giving a feeling of cool airiness and freshness, with magnificent views. Patios, tropical gardens and a large, gracefully-shaped pool with colorful cabanas and a sandy beach add to the general spaciousness. In addition to beautiful guest rooms and richly-furnished lounges, the modern dining room and terrace are an inspired setting for luncheon.

In the Canal Zone, passengers from the ship have the opportunity of a gala evening at the Bella Vista Salon, high atop the glamorous new Hotel El Panama. Dinner and danc-

Italy Lowers Off-Season Costs

American tourists visiting Italy prior to March 15 this year will find the cost of their stay considerably lessened: 25 percent reductions on the Italian Railways and other means of transportation and ten percent reductions on hotel and restaurant bills have been instituted to encourage off-season travel in Italy.

'ROUND THE CLOCK

by TROY GORDON

EDWARD R. MURROW has Person-to-Personed just about everyone who is anybody and a few who aren't. He's going to have to start calling on a few peons.

Since we're definitely in that category, I thought I'd present a preview of how that visit would go.

Murrow—Tonight we call on Troy and Joanne Gordon, columnists, parents and members of a great American group known as "the middle class."

There you see their 7-room house in Tulsa, Oklahoma. They paid $11,900 for it but have poured considerably more in to rebuild it as their four children hack away at the foundation.

Good evening, Mrs. Gordon.

Mrs. Gordon — Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

Murrow — Good evening, Mr. Gordon.

Gordon — Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

Murrow—Are you in the living room?

Mrs. Gordon—Yes, Mr. Murrow.

Murrow—It has a rather interesting decor. What do you call it?

Mrs. Gordon—I've been sick.

Murrow — (Chuckles) Well, it does have that lived-in look. What is that object you're holding, Mr. Gordon?

Gordon—What? Oh, it's a beer can. I guess I forgot to hid it before we went on the air.

Murrow — I understand Oklahoma is a dry state but you have now voted repeal, haven't you?

Gordon—Uh huh.

Murrow—What difference has that made?

Gordon—That's what I'd like to know.

Murrow—You mean there has been no change?

Gordon—Well, I understand the price of whisky's going up, it'll be harder to get and then you can't drink it legally.

Murrow — Mrs. Gordon, where are the children?

Mrs. Gordon—They're locked—uh, they're in the back room.

Murrow—May we see them?

Mrs. Gordon—Certainly.

(She walks through a door into the back bedroom).

These are our children. Linda, Vicki, Don and Susan. Linda's the one painting on the wall, and the other three are throwing modeling clay at each other.

Murrow—It looks like a happy family.

Mrs. Gordon—Oh, it's happy, all right. We just finished a 3-week bout with the measles. I haven't laughed so much in years.

Murrow—That's an unusual type of wall, Mrs. Gordon. What is it?

Mrs. Gordon—Concrete block.

Murrow—But isn't that dangerous? What if the children fall against it?

Mrs. Gordon—We thought of having plaster, but we decided the children will heal and the plaster wouldn't.

Murrow—Yes. Now will you show us the rest of the house?

Mrs. Gordon—No.

Murrow—No? Why?

Mrs. Gordon—I just had time to clean these two rooms and the others look like pigpens.

Murrow—Well, good night, children.

Linda—What does he mean, good night? Doesn't he know it's only 9 o'clock in Tulsa? Doesn't the big oaf know we don't have daylight—(Screen suddenly switches to a shot of Mr. Gordon in the living room. He is removing a shoe).

Gordon—Oh, I thought you'd gone. Let me get this shoe back o[illegible]

Dear Ed:-

We knock ourselves out, over here, doing what our audience says is good radio, and getting a thrill out of doing it ... and along comes SEE IT NOW to shock us into realizing just how wonderful TV can be. Now radio has all the kick of stale beer.

To yourself and Fred and everyone in your crew a hundred hosannahs for something fresh and bright and good. And, a prayer that the moguls let it alone.

Sincerely,

Lou

Speaking of old teams learning new trades, we have been wondering if there is anything special that Reuters might do to be of service to you on the TV side. Frankly, we are not sure where a news service fits into the TV picture. We have talked to Sig Mickleson about it, and have hopes of something developing whereby Reuters can be of service to CBS-TV.

If there is anything that we can do for you, just sing out. On the radio side, we hope the news service is living up to your expectations.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I don't recall being so moved by the power of restraint and cold steel silence and simplicity -- not since the motion picture of Ernie Pyle where in the grey of the dusk, the mule slowly makes its way down the mountain slope with the limp body of the infantry captain slung across its back -- than I was yesterday by the last part of your television program. Too often, the TV producer loses complete cognizance of the rugged strength of the simple facts themselves without the fancy embroidery or the flowery bursts of editorializing that tend to distract and divert, and as a result, wage war on the real purpose and object of emphasis.

Your treatment of tracing blood to the stricken Marine PFC at the front made a person feel humble and deeply sympathetic and sorrowful. Yet, with these emotions, there was a feeling of accompanying proudness for a lot of little things too many of us do not have "time" to think about.

Congratulations for your very fine programs. I have been a radio admirer of yours for a long time ... but undoubtedly like too many of your listeners, it's taken me a long time to tell you so.

Very truly yours,

Warren Vierow

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Company-TV

New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your show last Sunday, on which coal was featured, was naturally of intense interest to me; first, because of its subject matter; and second, because of BCI's part in obtaining the necessary permissions for Ed Scott and the cameraman to go to Grant Town to film the mining sequences there, and more recently arranging with the B.&O. for the live pickup at the Baltimore docks last Sunday.

Mr. Adams, our staff photographer, accompanied Mr. Scott to Grant Town and was there during the shooting; and subsequently Adams and myself had an opportunity to see the rushes at the Eastern Sound Studio in advance.

Our effort was not wholly disinterested. Naturally we wanted the audience to see modern coal mining and the present day young and alert mining crews, who are skilled machine operators and who take pride in their occupation.

We had no wish to glamorize the miner or to present an untrue or unbelievable picture; but on the other hand, to present a picture of mining as it is, not as so many persons are inclined to think of it. The foregoing is said with the full realization that it was your picture, not ours, and that the decision as to what it would contain would be with you.

We talked about this with Mr. Scott who assured us he sought only to give well balanced, unbiased, objective scenes with true life characters, and no slant.

Mine management at Grant Town, miners, townpeople, all cooperated very fully. A camera crew below ground during operations is no simple matter. I speak from experience as we have just been through six months of it in the new color film on coal, "Powering America's Progress," which has just been completed for us by the March of Time organization.

When I saw the Grant Town rushes I congratulated Mr. Scott on the underground mining machine sequences. I wished that some of the miners in the above ground close-ups were more typical of the younger generation.

W[illegible]ame to the dialogue I was sorry to hear a miner say that "mining is a [illegible]gerous, dirty business, that the atmosphere in the mine is bad, and I don't want to work in a mine," or words to that effect. Another conversation in the Grievance Committee sequence, Meline Serdich (as recorded at the mine) was heard to say, "With conditions as they used to be I would not want any son of mine to go into the mines, but with today's modernization and machines I would be glad to have my son study coal mining as a career," or words to that effect.

There are plenty of young men today who are working in coal mines from choice, rather than necessity, and are proud of their jobs and going ahead. Many young men are going to trade schools studying to be coal miners or taking courses to be coal mining engineers. We are constantly seeking to bring this fact to the public notice. We are constantly seeking to acquaint the public with these facts.

So, it was keenly disappointing in viewing the program last Sunday to hear Serdich speak the first part of his lines, "I want no son of mine to go into the mines," and then cut ; especially to have the entire picture end on that note. Similarly, the editing of some of the other shots seemed to me to give an over-all picture less favorable than was justified, or than was needful, in view of the Grant Town sequences originally shot.

Sincerely yours,

Ralph C. Mulligan

Sketch of Mr. Black's Interview on "Chronicle" TV Program

Main Discussion Heading: World Bank's activity throughout world — promoting economic development.

Subheadings: Bank is a self-supporting institution.

Observations on trip to Far East.

1. You have just returned from a swing around South and Southeast Asia — What did you find out?

I went to Pakistan, India, Ceylon, Thailand.

The most interesting thing I found out is that real progress is being made in that part of the world. All of these countries have one thing in common: agriculture is their backbone. We made a point of looking at the farm areas, and found that farm populations are doing a good deal to improve their conditions. People are generally pretty well off. This isn't a snap judgment — we checked our impressions with people on the spot who have been studying the development of the new countries in Asia.

Another interesting fact: These countries are following financial and fiscal policies which are generally sound and conservative. I haven't heard this point discussed much. I don't mean that they have adequate amounts of capital for their needs. But there is a realization of the importance of putting available capital to good use.

Their main needs are increased food production, basic facilities such as electric power, and technical advice.

2. What is the Bank doing in that area?

It is helping countries obtain some of these basic needs. Bank's activity in India is a good illustration. So far we have made three loans to India to meet three main needs: 1) Agriculture — Kans grass is a major problem for India's farmers; if this can be licked, India can greatly increase food production; Bank's loan is financing heavy tractors and deep plows -- probably the only effective way to lick kans grass. 2) Transport -- another loan is helping to improve railways, so that India can transport its food and other products. 3) Power -- a third loan is financing largest steam power plant in India at Bokaro in Damodar Valley, 300 miles north of Calcutta; here workers have literally cut two new communities out of jungle; increased power supply will have wide effects on India: it will mean more production of coal, steel, cement for industries, fertilizer for agriculture, new locomotive shops, electric lights for villages and adequate water supplies to raise health standards.

3. Are these the kinds of things the Bank is doing elsewhere -- and where is it doing them?

The Bank is trying to help its member countries throughout the world in very practical ways. What we are doing in India is typical of our world operations. Like any bank, our main business is lending money. You can gauge the scale of our operations by this comparison: the power loan to India which I mentioned was for $18½ million. To date we have loaned a total of $1 billion 300 million; we have made more than sixty loans for projects and programs on six continents.

Our first loans were a sort of blood transfusion to help reconstruct the economies of certain European countries before the coming of Marshall Aid. These reconstruction loans amounted to about $500 million. We have already loaned more than that -- about $800 million -- to promote the economic development of our member countries. Now and in the future development is our business.

Most of our development loans finance the basic necessities of development -- such things as electric power; highways, railways or ports; irrigation works and agricultural machinery. These things are the foundation from which a country can develop along many different lines.

Capital is important in development. But it is not the most important thing. Many countries need a sound program for development more than they need money. They need to know how they can use their own resources, as well as foreign capital, to their own best advantage. They can't simply import "development" like a piece of machinery. The Bank therefore is giving its member countries a good deal of assistance in planning the kind of development a particular country needs. More and more countries are asking for this type of aid.

A good case in point is the Bank's relation with Colombia. At Colombia's request we sent a survey mission which appraised Colombia's entire economic potential, and which made practical recommendations for a broad development program. The important thing is that the matter didn't just stop with this mission's report. Colombia set up a non-partisan body of eminent citizens, called the Economic Development Committee, to do something about this program. It is drawing up development projects, based largely on the mission's recommendations, in many fields. One of these projects, for a badly-needed highway network, looked sound to us and the Bank has made a loan to help carry it out. We may help to finance other projects. A survey mission may be only the beginning of a country's relation with the Bank. We try to build a lasting Bank-client relationship. We can give both advice -- and money.

4. At the present time, what is the main objective of the activity of the Bank?

Our main objective is to promote economic development.

You can see by the case histories we have been talking about that we try to do this in several practical ways.

We provide some of the capital that is needed for development. I have mentioned some of the specific projects for which we lend money. We also make loans to help finance integrated programs of development as a whole. We made such a loan to assist the 10-Year development plan of the Belgian Congo. This is a practical over-all plan which should result in striking advances in the Congo -- a rich source of minerals and other valuable products. In one way or another we expect all of our loans to bring tangible results -- to help increase a country's production, to develop its natural and human resources.

We are trying to help underdeveloped countries pay their own way in economic development. We make no grants of money: we don't give money away. We make only business-like loans which we are satisfied that a country can repay through its own efforts. This kind of lending builds self-reliance, helps a country to become independent of foreign aid.

5. Where does the Bank get its own money from -- what are the Bank's resources?

Some of our lending funds come from the capital subscriptions paid in to the Bank by its member countries. Only a small part of a country's capital subscription, however, can be used for lending; the bulk is a sort of guarantee fund to back up the Bank's own bonds.

We are obtaining more and more of our lending funds from the bonds which we sell in the private investment markets -- in the United States and other countries. In this way we channel private capital into the financing of sound economic development. We operate in a broad partnership with private investors.

The Bank is not dependent on further appropriations from the United States Congress or any parliament. We do not operate on tax-payers money. The Bank pays its own way out of its own operations. Our operations have resulted in substantial net earnings to the Bank. These earnings are running at the rate of about $15 million a year, and have now risen to well over $50 million. The Bank is a self-supporting institution.

There are two other important "resources" of the Bank. One is intangible: the fact that the Bank is an international organization. It is owned by its 51 member nations. It tackles problems of economic development objectively. It is not open to the charge of trying to exploit an area for the benefit of any nation. Some of the advice the Bank may give an underdeveloped country may be unpleasant advice, hard for a government to follow. If necessary, the Bank can talk to a member country like a Dutch uncle. The Bank's international character tends to make its advice respected.

Another important resource in promoting development is that the Bank can lend in various currencies. Most of its loans have been made in dollars, but it can lend in other currencies as well. Part of each member nation's capital subscription is paid in local currency, and this can be loaned provided the member gives its consent. We have been obtaining an increasing amount of these local currency releases recently. We also obtain currencies other than dollars by selling our bonds in various countries. I think that there will be more and more opportunities for lending in non-dollar currencies. Loans must be repaid through normal trade channels. The pattern of a country's trade may be such that it could repay loans in non-dollar currencies, when it could not repay a dollar debt. The availability of these other currencies therefore broadens our lending opportunities.

6. What is the over-all effect of the World Bank's operations on the world situation?

The Bank is one organization which is helping to promote economic development, and the whole question of economic development has become a major one in world affairs. Development of the undeveloped areas means many things. To the industrialized nations, it means new sources of raw materials and new markets. To the free world as a whole, it means added strength and economic balance. To the underdeveloped countries themselves, it is likely to mean their entire future.

People in many of these areas are going through a real awakening. They are trying to throw off the poverty and backwardness of centuries. This is a powerful force today. Communism is quick to try to exploit this force to its own ends. What the peoples in these areas want is economic progress and human freedom. They can achieve both through economic development along realistic lines. The Bank is helping to make this kind of development a reality.

Standard Hour Presents Preview of TV Program

By JAMES ABBE

The Standard Hour is heading into television. A few months ago in the Sunday edition of this column, you may have read that Standard Oilers were building sets, installing TV cameras and rehearsing ballet girls in the Richmond Memorial Auditorium. They were spending quite a few pretty pennies—and still are—attempting to learn how that daddy-of-them-all concert programs will look on your TV screen. Not merely as you have seen it in real life at the San Francisco Opera House, or in Richmond or Berkeley; but after it had been filmed with people arriving in the foyer of the Opera House and in their boxes. All this with a select group of dancers from the San Francisco Ballet School.

Last Friday Standard Oil staked us of the radio-TV columns to a luncheon at the Palace Hotel in San Francisco. Then they reeled off on a living room size TV set, what is earmarked as the very first televised edition of The Standard Hour. It is tentatively scheduled for public projection some time next autumn.

Standard has not yet decided to substitute the TV Hour for the old tried and true radio version.

program was produced by the man who has done some great "March of Time" shows.

Watching poorly lighted shots of our Secretary of State Dean Acheson speaking the words we had read in last week's Tribune, and had heard over many radio programs, did not add anything to their significance.

Soviet Russia's Foreign Minister Vishinsky, after having his sarcasm filtered from Russian into English, on the week-old tell-tale gray film, just did not appear the villain he really is.

Disinterred invective, which might live forever in print; loses a lot of its muzzle velocity, after being embalmed on film, flown across the ocean, edited, spliced, then telecast cross-country.

Nor did it help to have a superimposed commentary by a commentator who might be threatened with adenoids for all I know. Perhaps if Edward R. Murrow and his CBS crew had undertaken that U.N. Assembly job, it would have been better. Maybe it will get better anyhow.

ACROSS TWO OCEANS

Come to think of it Ed Murrow's first two-way transcontinental Sunday program, titled "See It Now," carried films from across the Pacific as well as from across the Atlantic, and both were excellent. The playing of televised reportorial ping pong between New York City and San Francisco, as we watch first the New York and then the San Francisco sky line; listening in on Murrow conversing with Sandy Spilman over at KPIX was all like endowing us televiewers in the Bay area with supernatural powers to see as well as hear who was saying what to each other and what was going on 3000 miles apart.

"See It Now's" camera work could hardly be improved upon. Certainly not until color TV is available. Murrow is one of the few real commentators who not only looks good, but looks the part of the good commentator he is. CBS has started something with this new Murrow program that is likeley to stampede all the other TV networks into doing, or trying to do. And yesterday's show lost something, too, by not being able to go through with Murrow's interview with Governor Earl Warren. Maybe we'll get that next Sunday if the Governor is recovered from his illness.

So, for the very first two-way transcontinental job of televised journalism, onto my score card goes "A" for effort and "B plus" for achievement.

On the air this evening.

When I turned off my television set on Sunday I had only one thought - that if I didn't use my set again it was worthwhile because at last I realized through you my dream of the utilization of the greatest mass medium that has been given the human race. We can only hope that it will be used as wisely, as forcefully, as powerfully, as you showed it can be used. If I seem to be running over in my praise its because I still am under the spell of your excellent show.

More power to you and warm friendly greetings.

Dear Ed:

Many times in this business we become so pre-occupied with our interests and problems that we fail to do those things which are proper and called-for when a fellow broadcaster does something deserving of praise. This is one time I do myself ppoud.

Ed, my family and myself saw your "See It Now" TV show last Sunday. We all enjoyed every minute of it, from the history-making beginning right through to the end.

We liked the Korean films especially well, because they were different.

Your commentary was excellent. I thought your blood donor climax was very effective. Please accept the thanks of my family and myself for such a terrific show. You and your associates deserve a great big bunch of orchids.

Many times I have thought about your visit to Akron a little more than a year ago which afforded me the opportunity of watching you work, broadcast, and lecture.

I have enclosed a little clipping from the local paper pertaining to that visit which may give you a chuckle. The story is not accurate as you will no doubt recall.

With all kind wishes for a successful "See It Now" TV series, I remain

Would like to add my congratulations, and thanks,(to those of everybody else) on the productmion, delivery, films and commentary of "See It Now". Sunday's program was excellent - and important to TV as a medium and to the nourishment of viewers.

The film clips, your commentary, and the sound-track about F Company in Korea touched me deeply --the fighting conditions and the boys were real as I've never seen before in pictures; their names and the locale were new of course. Part of World War II, I was captain of a rifle company - and it seemed again I saw and heard the waiting and dying and routine and despair and bravery of Company B in the mountains of Italy. I felt a "homesickness" for those harsh days.

All the hard work of your associates and yourself were rewarded; for in every home the program must have presented the thrill of actuality, the impact of unforgetable authenticity.

EFFECTS OF WORLD BANK LOANS

(Using Bank films, still pictures, slides, models)

STEEL FOR EUROPE:

Five new steel plants are now in operation on the continent of Europe -- financed by the Bank's reconstruction loans. Two are in France, two in Belgium, one in Luxembourg. Modern American methods of producing steel have been introduced in Europe at a time when Europe is hungry for steel.

ELECTRIC POWER:

In many underdeveloped countries, power is the key to economic development -- the essential base from which industries and agriculture can expand.

Mexico: effects of Bank's loan to Mexican Federal Electricity Commission -- New dams, power plants, transmission lines are filling demands for power in booming industrial areas; also opening up entirely new rural areas.

This means: turning new factory wheels, irrigation pumps for agriculture, hospitals with X-ray machines, lighting for schools and streets in villages which have never had electricity.

The greatest part of all the Bank's development loans has gone for power projects -- in Latin America, Iceland, Europe, Africa and Asia.

TRANSPORT:

Highways, railroads, ports are arteries and nerves of development.

Ethiopia -- one of the most undeveloped countries on the earth: A Bank mission found Ethiopia's greatest need was for roads. Found trucks were taking 5 days to cover a distance of 25 miles between key points. Found trees growing out of middle of roads. Made loan for highway building, maintenance, and training of Ethiopians.

This will mean farmers can get their products to internal markets and export points. Ethiopia has many untapped resources.

Bank also made Ethiopia loan for telegraph and telephone network. This will bind country together.

Bank has made many kinds of transport loans in many areas.

AGRICULTURE:

Part of Bank's loans are for direct aid to agriculture -- such things as modern farm machinery, grain storage equipment, irrigation.

In Colombia farmers are being taught to raise a new crop -- cotton; this has opened a new frontier.

In India, some 2 million acres of land are being cleared of kans grass, with a fleet of 200 tractors and deep plows.

In Thailand, Bank is financing a large irrigation project which will greatly increase production and export of rice.

GENERAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS:

Recently Bank has financed a number of over-all programs of development.

Yugoslavia: Bank loan (made entirely in European currencies) is purchasing equipment for key parts of a manageable development program: electric power lines, coal mines, famous Bor copper mine, factories, farm machinery, railroads. These projects tie in closely with one another.

Belgian Congo: potentially one of the richest areas on surface of earth. Recent Bank loan is tieing in with Belgian and local resources to carry out 10-year development program. Emphasis is on transportation, to open up variety of important resources of "Dark Continent."

WORLD BANK

(Some suggestions for television interview with Robert L. Garner, Vice President)

Men and machines -- science and skills -- can be put to work for two main ends. One is war and destruction. The other is peace and a rising standard of living.

The World Bank is one institution which is helping free nations in many areas of the world to build their strength. Fifty-one nations are members of the World Bank, which is a unique kind of international organization.

Purposes -- first, to help in reconstruction of war-damaged countries; that has been done. Now, and in the future, to aid in the vast business of "economic development."

The Bank gives its member countries a very practical kind of assistance. Its main business is to make loans -- loans to develop economic and human resources, raise standards of living, help nations to help themselves.

To date it has made loans of more than $1 billion $200 million in major areas of world.

These loans are affecting economies of nations, lives of people.

The Bank also gives member countries a practical kind of "technical assistance." It helps a country appraise its total economic resources, map out a comprehensive development program.

But the Bank is a bank. It operates along business lines, makes only productive loans for which it expects to be repaid. The Bank is not dependent on appropriations from the U.S. Congress or any parliament. Its lending funds come partly from the capital subscriptions of its member countries, partly, and increasingly from bonds which the Bank sells to private investors. The Bank pays its own way -- it is operating at a profit.

It promotes the kind of economic development by which a country also pays its own way.

EFFECTS OF BANK'S LOANS ON STEEL PRODUCTION IN WESTERN EUROPE

Loans made by the International Bank to France and Luxembourg (in 1947) and Belgium (in 1949) have been used partly for the reconstruction and modernization of facilities for producing steel. Normally several years are needed to finish large projects of this type. By the Spring of 1951, all five of the new steel plants which these loans helped to finance were completed and were in varying stages of production. Two are in France, two in Belgium and one in Luxembourg. A total of $28,600,000 of Bank loans was used in the construction of the new plants: $10,800,000 in France, $10,300,000 in Belgium, and $7,500,000 in Luxembourg.

The new steel plants had not yet reached their full productive capacity. For the most part, they produce flat rolled steel. In some cases, shortages of raw steel ingots were keeping down production; and the large new French mill at Denain, which produces the hot strip to be fed into cold finishing mills, was not expected to get into full industrial production until the ~~end of 1951~~ middle of 1952. By June of this year, however, the effects of the new plants were beginning to be felt. While each plant fills a particular need, their main combined effects were the following:

1) Increasing the output of rolled steel products which are basic to the industrial economy of western Europe. This is expected to lead to increased productivity in a wide range of European industries, and may encourage the establishment of new industries.

2) Introducing for the first time on the continent modern methods of steel production developed over the last two decades in the United States. These methods include the continuous rolling process, requiring heavy equipment stationed in a long line, which makes possible mass production at high speed.

3) Providing western Europe with particularly high grade steel products at a time when the demand for them is heavy. The new French mill at Montataire, example, is producing the best quality of cold sheet in France; and the quality of tin plate produced by the Belgian mill at Tilleur is unique on the continent.

A description of the operations at each of the five plants follows:

Denain, France. The plant at Denain, near the Franco-Belgian border, is owned by the French steel combine, "Usinor." It is the first continuous hot rolling mill to be built on the continent of Europe. It produces hot strip, the raw material needed by cold rolling mills in order to manufacture finished steel sheets.

Denain uses the continuous rolling process developed in the United States. The mill consists of five roughing stands and six finishing stands stationed in line. An ingot goes into the mill at one end and comes out the other as finished strip. The value of this system is that it allows for production of one type of product at high speeds. The heavy machinery needed for this process is at present manufactured only in the United States.

Denain is a very large plant. Some idea of its size may be had from the following figures of certain of its requirements: roughly 850,000 square feet of covered floor space, 16,000 tons of metal construction, 8 million cubic feet of earth excavation, 3.25 million cubic feet of poured concrete, 16,000 tons of mechanical equipment, 6,000 tons of electrical equipment, and 190 miles of electrical cables.

The productive capacity of the mill is high — 800,000 tons of hot strip annually.

Operation of test runs started at Denain in March, 1951. Because of various delaying factors, such as the time required for adjusting machinery, the plant is not expected to come into full industrial production until the end of the year. When its productive capacity is reached, some 300,000 tons of the hot strip produced annually will be shipped to the new French cold rolling mill at Montataire, and the remaining 500,000 tons will be available for sale on the market.

Montataire, France. The "Usinor" company's plant at Montataire, about 30 miles north of Paris, is the first continuous cold rolling mill on the continent. It produces a high quality of finished steel sheet which is considered the best on the French market.

Like the hot strip mill at Denain, it uses a continuous rolling process, perfected in the United States, which permits high-speed production. In the case of the cold rolling system, exceptionally powerful rollers and motors are required, and this type of equipment at present is made only in the United States. The mill at Montataire is equipped with the most modern installations.

Montataire's productive capacity is 300,000 tons of high grade cold rolled sheet annually.

Now in full production

The plant was completed in January, 1950. Its operations have been restricted, however, by a shortage of hot rolled strip which it requires as raw material. It has been importing some hot strip from the United States, but recently supplies from this source have been cut down. The mill has also obtained some hot strip from Denain, but not in the quantities it is equipped to use. As Denain gets into industrial production, Montataire should reach its full productive capacity.

The finished steel sheet produced at Montataire is used in many different kinds of industry. There is a great demand for this product in France, and in the Spring of 1951 Montataire was taking orders for delivery up to two years ahead. One of the main users will be the automobile industry, since high quality sheet is well suited for making automobile bodies. The French Renault works are expected to consume a good deal of the output. Montataire's production is expected to benefit other manufacturing industries as well.

Dudelange, Luxembourg. The plant at Dudelange is owned by the "Arbed" company. In this case the need was not for the mass production of one type of steel product, but for a plant which could produce a variety of types of products for the export market. Instead of the continuous rolling process used in the French plants, therefore, Dudelange employs reversible rolling mills, in which the same equipment is used over again in different ways to produce different products. The Dudelange plant contains both hot and cold rolling facilities and produces hot strip and various types of rolled sheets. Its installations are highly efficient.

The productive capacity of the plant is 400,000 tons of hot strip and 180,000 tons of cold sheets annually.

The cold rolling mill was completed at the end of 1950 and the hot rolling mill began operations in March, 1951. The Dudelange plant has been operating well below capacity, however, because of a lack of ingots which it needs as raw material. The "Arbed" company is taking measures to increase its own ingot manufacturing capacity.

When the Dudelange plant reaches its productive capacity, it will absorb 180,000 tons annually of its hot strip to produce cold sheets, and the rest of its strip production will be available for sale on the export market. Most of its production of sheets will also be exported, and these can be manufactured in various forms — thick or thin, wide or narrow — to meet specifications. The production of the Dudelange plant will therefore increase Luxembourg's exports. The country normally exports 90% of its steel production.

Ougree, Belgium. The plant at Ougree, in the industrial area of Liege, is owned by the Ougree Marihaye company. The need of this company was for a new blooming mill which could step up the production of semi-finished steel for use finishing mills existing in the same plant. The old blooming mill at Ougree had too low a productive capacity, and had the additional disadvantage of requiring the use of many different sizes and weights of ingots.

The Bank therefore helped to finance construction of a modern reversible blooming mill to replace the old installation. The new mill uses only two types of large size ingots, and Ougree has therefore been able to standardize its entire ingot production. The blooming mill processes these ingots into different types of billets and slabs to meet the needs of the various finishing mills, which produce structural steel, merchant bar, plate, etc.

The mill began operations in March, 1950, and by the Spring of 1951 was operating at the high rate of 950,000 tons of semi-finished products annually. This compares with a rate of 650,000 tons annually which are the latest production figures for the old mill.

Tilleur, Belgium. The plant at Tilleur, also in the Liege industrial area, is owned by "Ferblatil", a subsidiary of the John Cockerill company. This is a modern reversible cold rolling mill. It produces two kinds of products: cold rolled sheets, and tin plate. Both of these products are of exceptionally high quality. For the production of tin plate, the new plant has installed the latest process of a continuous tinning line which is unique on the continent of Europe. All of its installations are efficient.

The productive capacity of the plant is 60,000 tons of tin plate and 25,000 tons of cold rolled sheets annually.

The cold mill began operations in July, 1950, and the tinning line in March, 1951. Production has been held down, however, by the difficulty of procuring adequate quantities of hot strip which is needed as raw material.

The high grade products produced at Tilleur have not heretofore been manufactured in Belgium. Demand for them is heavy. They provide a possible basis for development of a Belgian canning industry, and are used in many different kinds of manufacturing industries.

Dear Ed:

I tried to reach you on the 'phone Sunday to tell you how much Blanche and I enjoyed your new TV show. We got a real thrill out of it.

It is an axiom in show business that premiere performance "needs smoothing, "needs polishing", etc., but this one contradicts this axiom. It was a fine original performance and if there is any polishing that is needed it is probably a minor technical one. It appeared to me that there was too much light on you and that you looked 'burned' on close-ups. If there were any other technical imperfections then they added to the show.

We will look forward to future Sundays with great anticipation.

My best regards to you and Janet.

Cordially,

Leon

The tag-line sentence of the New York Times review of "See It Now" — "Television had a taste of its true glory yesterday" — is for my money one of the great understatements of the year. Re: See It Now

November 19, 1951

By now you are probably fed up with Monday quarterbacking. But, since you have asked for my opinion, here it is:

Congratulations. You are the first to achieve the zenith of a genuine personalized news show on tv. Others have tried and failed though their own inadequacies have been cloaked in gimmicks and techniques.

On SEE IT NOW, what I heard of your interstitial commentaries (damn it — a traffic jam made me lose the first seven minutes) was for the first time as important as what I saw. In other words, the commentator made a definite contribution. And here is a for-instance:

That whole Fox Company documentary piece paid off with your closing remark to the audience about blood-giving: "Can you spare a pint?" There was bite and sting the way you said it; the camera caught a look on your face that must have made civilians ashamed of their comfortable unconcern. And, brother, that's good.

The editing job in this sequence was tight, encapsulating the GIS' grim businesslike grind, hardship and pluck. It was the first Korea picture report that actually brought the war home to us. A few times the roving camera seemed to segue jerkily from scene to scene but even that contributed to dramatic tautness.

There is a downright sincerity in your presentation which, combined with that diplomat's Homburg air, convinces poet and peasant alike.

Stick to it, Ed, and don't let the experts alter your style or confuse you. Perfectionists fuss with details, generally miss the big point. The news must remain inviolate. You just can't ham it like Swayze, orate it like HVK or recite it like a dozen others do.

SEE IT NOW will continue a great tv show if it and you keep measuring up to what I saw and heard yesterday.

Congratulations on your "See It Now" must be stacked nearly as high as Mt. Wilson on which the KNXT transmitters are located.

Quite frankly, Ed, it is so far superior to anything else being produced that comparisons are unfair.

Personally I like your sincerity and frankness and the way in which you do not pose as a "television expert" or pretend that you know all the answers to all the problems.

I have seen and heard your first and third shows and unfortunately missed the second one.

I have heard numerous people make reference to your comment on Sunday's program about the news policy of Columbia and your interpretation of the fancy words and terms employed by lawyers to mean that "We shouldn't get too big for our britches."

Congratulations, Ed, and good luck.

MR

Sunday, Nov. 25, 1951

Dear Ed Murrow:

I watched "See It Now" today for the second time and I was so impressed that I felt you might be interested to know how a member of your audience reacted to it.

It seems to me that your's is the only news program, and one of the few shows of any type, that really uses television and uses it creatively. You take advantage of television's immediacy just as you always took advantage of radio's immediacy; except that now you are doing it in a more difficult medium. I think it's a superb job. That brilliant juxtaposition of Truman and MacArthur today, speaking about their families; the wonderful comment on Taft's campaign in your simple, revealing use of Mr. Taft himself (not at the end so much as in the filmed stuff); and the great shot of the Texas singers behind Taft at a banquet becomes real Americana.

There is a lot of grace and intelligence in the way you handle the show and your format seems particularly apt. Fortunately for those who have always followed you on the air, seeing you amply corresponds to hearing you and I'm sure you know what a tribute that is.

I feel television is the greatest political medium because whatever a man is that is what shows. I've seen McCarthy, Bertrand Russell, Acheson, and a lot of people I never heard of before and they all came across with impact of one sort or another because suddenly the values were plain to see, clearer than any newspaper could make them in a straight news account, or any radio broadcast. The dramatic shows cannot begin to compare in drama to this.

You may remember me. I was once married to Irving Reis, and many years ago the four of us spent an evening together and wound up in a police station backing a taxidriver in his effort to see justice done. Irving may not have told you but we related the incident to Irwin Shaw one night and it subsequently appeared as a story by him in the New Yorker.

Good luck to you.

Sincerely,

Meta Rosenberg

TELESCREEN: A new and wonderful adventure has been added to our televiewing.

Or have you seen "See It Now" (KPIX, Sundays, 12.30 p. m.)?

Edward R. Murrow

It is a TV counterpart of "Hear It Now," one of the finest of all radio reporting shows.

The key men are the same. Ed Murrow is the calm and convincing nar- Fred Friendly who formerly produced NBC's splendid "Voices and Events" program.

When Friendly moved to CBS about a year ago he and Murrow created "Hear It Now," a recorded roundup of the week's most noted newsmakers.

In the visual medium they use the same technique. They do not necessarily seek spot coverage of hot news, Rather, they bring to the camera the people, events and places that frame the course of history.

On their first program they linked San Francisco with New York via microwave. On the second they televised Cincinnati, Senator Taft's home town.

Last Sunday, from his home base, "Studio 41" in New York, Murrow switched the microwave connection to a tank factory in Detroit and to a fighter bomber assembly line on Long Island so that we could "see it now" as the tanks and planes were being made.

Came filmed telephoned interviews with Vice President Alben Barkley in Tokio, General Omar Bradley in Rome, John Foster Dulles in Washington, and a filmed trip to Hawaii where Announcer Webley Edwards visited the wreck of the USS Arizona ten years after Pearl Harbor Day.

Most effective, though, was the longer episode in which CBS cameras followed a pint of blood from the arm of a donor across the Pacific to Korea where we saw it used in an operation to help save the life of a wounded marine.

Using films, and the microwave whenever possible, Murrow and Friendly treat their subjects with reverent respect. They are not bombastic shouters of headlines. They are qualified veterans of important reporting.

In three weeks they have

That little fellow you once offered to send through college--in case you didn't hear--got himself slightly wounded last month but not enough to leave the Battalion area. He has been on the line in Korea for four and a half weeks, but in his last letter said he was hoping to be relieved, if only to get a bath. Dear Ed:

I just want you to know that I watched last Sunday's "See It Now" and feel it is the very best series ever produced by American television. Its form is excellent and its substance enormously interesting. I liked the way you had Taft at the beginning as a teaser, and the wonderful old sea-dog who recited "Old Ironsides" behind the announcer's description. The closeup of Taft's receiving line was remarkable; and the juxtaposition of MacArthur's sainted mother with Truman's red-headed grandmother was superb.

Now I've run out of adjectives, but it is certain that you have really opened the windows and given television fresh air to thrive on.

All the best.

Mr. Walter Winchell
Daily Mirror
235 E. 45th Street
New York City

Dear Walter:

I read with great interest your item of praise for Ed Murrow's TV program the other day, and your needle for NBC's local TV programs.

Because I know you are careful to give proper credit to people who do things first, let me say that we had already done everything Ed Murrow did, on our own local program. He looked at two oceans at the same time on TV -- we jumped over two oceans by shortwave and radio photo, first when Jinx went to London to cover the opening of Mary Martin in South Pacific, putting Mary and Dick Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein on right after their curtain went down, to talk shortwave to the cast of the New York company of South Pacific, on camera, while RCA radio photo flashed stills of the opening onto our TV cameras.

Once a week, we get a picture report from our own Air Force reporter, now in Europe, soon in Asia.

And on Thanksgiving day, we worked the two ocean trick -- a GI in Berlin kissed his wife by shortwave, on camera here in New York.

Cameras caught the overwhelming emotions of a girl here on our stage talking to her husband in a hospital in Tokyo, as he told her..."Honey, I'm flying home tomorrow morning..."

A little girl in New York beamed as her brother in Rome told her he would send her a rosary blessed by the Pope for Christmas...but that she was much too young to ask him if he had met any nice girls in Rome.

And thousands of New Yorkers wept along with the family of a GI in Paris, who is mess sergeant to Eisenhower, because he got lost and couldn't get to the studio in time to keep his date with his mother on our TV show.

These are things that did use the magic of television, teamed with the infinitely greater magic of human imagination -- and it was on a local show that it happened.

And as for the future, beginning January 1, our half-hour show five nights a week will become a full-fledged news program, in name as well as content.

Beginning also in December, we will start a weekly TV news program for the whole country on film through Telenews, which now serves most TV stations with daily film coverage of the world. It will be the same thing I started and had to stop when I went into the Air Force, working with the same company, but for TV now instead of newsreels.

And in the new year, Jinx and I start putting our column, "Closeup" on film too, By Spring, we'll be doing a children's newsreel for TV together.

News is my business, as I think you know. I learned it in the same school from which you graduated cum laude. And I heartily and angrily agree with you about the lack of news on TV, networks more than local. They have left room for nothing but vaudeville in the most serious times in our history. To so cripple the most powerful medium since the invention of the printing press, in sheer "vidiocy" and the people responsible are "viodiots".

Thank you for using a square needle on them. And please, hurry up and get into the business yourself.

Sincerely,

Tex

The key men are the same. Ed Murrow is the calm and convincing narrator. His producer is Fred Friendly who formerly produced NBC's splendid "Voices and Events" program.

When Friendly moved to CBS about a year ago he and Murrow created "Hear It Now," a recorded roundup of the week's most noted newsmakers.

In the visual medium they use the same technique. They do not necessarily seek spot coverage of hot news, Rather, they bring to the camera the people, events and places that frame the course of history.

On their first program they linked San Francisco with New York via microwave. On the second they televised Cincinnati, Senator Taft's home town.

Last Sunday, from his home base, "Studio 41" in New York, Murrow switched the microwave connection to a tank factory in Detroit and to a fighter bomber assembly line on Long Island so that we could "see it now" as the tanks and planes were being made.

Came filmed telephoned interviews with Vice President Alben Barkley in Tokio, General Omar Bradley in Rome, John Foster Dulles in Washington, and a filmed trip to Hawaii where Announcer Webley Edwards visited the wreck of the USS Arizona ten years after Pearl Harbor Day.

Most effective, though, was the longer episode in which CBS cameras followed a pint of blood from the arm of a donor across the Pacific to Korea where we saw it used in an operation to help save the life of a wounded marine.

Using films, and the microwave whenever possible, Murrow and Friendly treat their subjects with reverent respect. They are not bombastic shouters of headlines. They are qualified veterans of important reporting.

In three weeks they have easily reached and surpassed anything else we have seen in TV news programs.

But to fully appreciate it now, you must "See It Now."

"SEE IT NOW," MURROW-FRIENDLY NEWS SERIES,
MAKES DEBUT OVER CBS TELEVISION NOV. 18

Aluminum Co. of America To Sponsor Program
Beginning With Broadcast of December 2

"See It Now," produced by Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly, the ultimate sight-and-sound development of an idea and collaboration that began with the widely-acclaimed "I Can Hear It Now" albums for Columbia Records, makes its debut as a weekly news program over the CBS Television Network, Sunday, Nov. 18 (CBS-TV, 3:30-4:00 PM, EST).

Two weeks later, on Sunday, Dec. 2, the Aluminum Company of America begins sponsorship of the program.

"See It Now," television successor to CBS Radio's "Hear It Now," which won a George Foster Peabody citation last season, projects into the medium of sight and sound the Murrow-Friendly technique of presenting the news through the people who make the news. Persons and events on the front pages during the week will be seen and heard on "See It Now." The program will be in effect the news magazine of television.

With Murrow as on-camera editor, the news will be presented through live pickups of events, and with motion pictures specially filmed for "See It Now." The news will include personal interviews, overseas reports, biographical features, human-interest stories, documentary features and late news breaks.

The program will be backed by the news-gathering facilities of CBS Television News. There will be reports from the top news agencies; films from CBS Television News correspondents abroad, all of whom are equipped with movie cameras; clips from CBS-TV's own local and free-lance camera crews, and from newsreel companies covering the world. Still pictures will be available from the wires of a specially leased International News Photo circuit and from the CBS Television Network's huge files. Graphic illustrations - animated charts, maps, diagrams, special effects - will be provided by CBS-TV's own staff of news artists.

In addition, "See It Now" will have the exclusive use of four mobile camera crews, each consisting of a reporter, cameraman and soundman. One is in Korea, another in Washington, a third accompanied Murrow to Europe in his coverage of the British elections, and the fourth, at this writing, is on roving assignment in West Virginia.

Edward R. Murrow, who narrates "See It Now," has been radio's outstanding reporter on the international scene since the Nazis marched into Austria in 1938. His program, "Edward R. Murrow and the News," is heard five times weekly over CBS Radio (Mon. thru Fri., 7:45-8:00 PM, EST). He has won two George Foster Peabody Awards, three National Headliners Club Annual Awards and three Overseas Press Club Awards.

Fred W. Friendly, collaborating producer with Murrow on the three Columbia Records albums of "I Can Hear It Now" and the CBS Radio "Hear It Now" program, is a veteran radio producer and writer who, among other notable achievements, wrote and produced the famous documentary on atomic energy, "The Quick and the Dead."

Agency for the sponsor is Fuller & Smith & Ross, Inc.

SEE IT NOW

A HALF-HOUR OR AN HOUR TV PROGRAM THAT WILL BRING TOGETHER IN COHESIVE FORM FOR EYE AND EAR THE EVENTS THAT PEOPLE ARE TALKING ABOUT, LAUGHING AT, PRAYING FOR, FEARING, WHISTLING AT, WISHING FOR, AND POSSIBLY NEVER EVEN THOUGHT OF.

IN ADDITION, SEE IT NOW WILL EVALUATE, PUT IN PERSPECTIVE, ESTABLISH A POINT OF REFERENCE FOR THE 1000 STORIES THAT MAKE UP A WEEK OF LIVING.

SEE - If it can be filmed, we will film it or we will get the guy who saw it, or film the fellow 10,000 miles away who was in the middle of the thing we couldn't film in the first place.

We'll show you a map of it or an animated visualization of it. Maybe we will be able to bring it into our studio; if not this studio, our studio in Washington, Boston, Chicago or any place else the coaxial cable goes. Perhaps something about it was filmed some time ago. If so, we'll find the film and show it to you, and we'll fill you in on every detail. But you will See It Now.

IT - Might be a man or a fad, an atom or a statement, an idea or a Paris gown, statesmen in council, airplane crash, war in Korea, a hearing in session, guys in sports or gals in shorts, monkeys, parades, fires, furs - how the great man said it when he said it, or what the bad man did when he did it. Whatever it is, you will See It Now.

NOW - Sunday evening at 6:00 will be Now.

Cameramen around the world have sent in their film.
The correspondents have collected their thoughts, reappraised their analysis and rehearsed their commentary.
Editors and cutters have done their job well.
The writers have submitted their scripts.
The artists and animators have finished their last map and chart.
The interviews, features and live pickups are ready to go.
The producers are exhausted, their fingers are crossed.

Dear Peter:

Here are the lists of SEE IT NOW, PERSON TO PERSON, SMALL WORLD, and CBS REPORTS.

Although the lists don't show it, Collingwood took over for Ed on PERSON TO PERSON in 1959 when Murrow was on Sabatical leave. Ed continued to do SMALL WORLD because he could originate it in Europe and Asia. His last film was "Harvest of Shame" even though two others were later in release.

Let's talk more when you get down here.

March 10, 1952

Dear Hubbell:

This is a note I've been wanting to write for some time. I hope you will think well enough of it, and the intention behind it, to ask Mr. Van Volkenburg and Mr. Falkner to read it.

We are trying to level off the costs of "See It Now." The work is getting a little easier, and we know now which faucets to turn on to get us the most usable product, and there is less waste and less over-set. However, the challenge to continue to deliver becomes more intense every week. Ed and I find ourselves in the position of trying to make each week's show better than the last, and not have the prestige of the show or CBS or Ed suffer any, and sometimes it costs money and time. I would be less than honest if I did not let you know that for the last nine weeks I have been up for forty-eight hours prior to each air time. This isn't good for me, and therefore isn't good for the show, but it is the only way I know of keeping up the standard.

The purpose of this note, therefore, is to say that I do not want you to be hit by a ton of bricks if and when Accounting shows us considerably over our budget. As I say, and as I think Ed has told Mr. Van Volkenberg, we expect our costs are coming down, but there isn't much more that we can do except to try.

However, there is a more concrete purpose to this memorandum, and that is that we could put ourselves completely in the black if CBS would explore the secondary possibilities of "See It Now." In our first seventeen weeks, we have put more film on the air than the March of Time produced in a year. Because of the Murrow prestige and talent, much of our product is better than that of the March of Time. We could, should and must invade that field. This subject has been discussed many times, but nothing has ever been done about it. "See It Now" could be in theatres, particularly non-TV area theatres, schools, colleges and foreign countries.

In not examining these possibilities, we are as negligent in our duties as I would be in deliberately wasting money. I think CBS could make more money out of the secondary uses than we do from the sale of the time. If and when I am condemned by Management for being in the red, I will feel that guilty as I may be, Management could have gone a long way in preventing it by capitalizing on the secondary uses of "See It Now." It is not too late.

Thanks for the time.

I think the log will show that Duran's figures are somewhat exaggerated. In every case except one where we have lost a commercial it has been due to a mechanical malfunction in telecine or on a remote. Maybe the technical boys can remedy that, I can't.

In every case without exception where we have lost a commercial I have done my best to ad lib one myself which they may not find satisfactory, but it is something I have never done elsewhere either on radio or television.

Dear Ed:

I thought you might be interested in knowing that we have recommended "See It Now" for a George Foster Peabody Award. I am attaching a copy of the brochure we prepared to describe the show, and also a photograph of the entire presentation that we sent to the Awards Committee.

Selecting the shows for these nominations -- out of some 78 on the Network -- is never easy. But we all felt that "See It Now" provided an example of the finest kind of news programming that television has to offer. Congratulations to you and your staff for the really excellent job you have done -- and are continuing to do every week.

With best regards.

Sincerely,

Jerry

TELEVISION CATEGORY 3

3a—"See It Now"

In years to come, November 18, 1951, may well rank with the most important dates in the history of television. On that day, "See It Now" was first broadcast, and, as Jack Gould wrote the following morning in The New York Times, "television had a taste of its true glory."

The distinguished producing team of Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly have brought a new dimension to television news reporting with "See It Now." Using live pickups and film, they document every week the faces and voices that make the news. The program does not attempt to do a "spot" reporting job; rather, it seeks out the features and sidelights that make the world's news more significant and meaningful. Just how successful "See It Now" has been is best indicated in the extraordinary critical notice it received.

Variety wrote that the program "packed a wallop that suggested, for the first time, the video medium's enormous potential in the realm of news-special events when all the proper TV techniques are brought into play....The viewer is treated to a kind of TV excitement that's long been needed."

Mr. Gould called "See It Now" "a striking and compelling demonstration of the power of television as a journalistic tool, lifting the medium to a new high in maturity and usefulness.... In its emotional impact, sensitivity and drama, (Edward R. Murrow's) thirty-minute review of the week's news was in all respects a magnificent achievement — absorbing in its exploitation of video's technical capabilities and human and revealing in its understanding and point of view."

In the New York World-Telegram and Sun, Harriet Van Horne wrote: " 'See It Now' . . . is the best program of its kind that I have ever watched. The production is imaginative, the temper brisk, the mood completely honest."

The Billboard noted that since the end of World War II there had been a gradual diminution of interest in news programming. "With 'See It Now,' " the reviewer said, "television recaptures — in even greater measure — the drama inherent in the news. The program, based upon the week's developments on the national and international levels, makes use of the techniques developed in the great days of radio news broadcasting. To this, however, is added the dimension of sight, used with utmost skill and dramatic effect....This show is a milestone in TV programming."

John Crosby, in the New York Herald Tribune, called the show "enormously impressive," and Newsweek noted that Mr. Murrow and Mr. Friendly have produced "another winner."

In the New York Daily News, Ben Gross wrote that "See It Now" was "the most appealing news review of a week I have ever seen." Hy Gardner, New York Herald Tribune columnist, suspected that the show "will revive the good old-fashioned American custom of passing Sunday afternoons at home. It should send television stock soaring."

Broadcasting magazine reported: "The television entry of Edward R. Murrow and Fred Friendly, who have exploited the reporting powers of radio thoroughly and well, reveals that this distinguished team is more imaginatively aware of the scope (and limitations) of television journalism than anybody else around these days."

Radio Daily said " 'See It Now'...is destined to be one of the top news documentaries of our time....The program makes the conventional TV newsreels and commentaries appear stereotyped." The New Yorker hailed it as "nothing short of spectacular."

Time magazine picked "See It Now" as "television's best and liveliest news show," and Editor & Publisher wrote that it "comes closest to the ideal of video journalism."

But it was Jack Gould, in a special article in The New York Times, who pointed out most fully and clearly just how significant this series is to all television. He wrote:

"It is becoming abundantly clear that there is a field where TV can do a constructive and important job in the realm of journalism. This is in the form of a weekly news summary which is not subject to limiting deadlines and can provide interpretive background on the events of the day . . .

"The point was proved by one of the keenest and most perceptive minds in broadcasting—Edward R. Murrow, the CBS commentator. Together with his colleague, Fred Friendly, he started last week a series entitled 'See It Now,' by all odds one of the major events of the current video season. Mr. Murrow and Mr. Friendly...essentially are bringing to television the one quality for which the medium has been literally starved: original thinking.

"On his initial program last week, Mr. Murrow sat in a control room at CBS and opened his thirty-minute telecast with a 'live' sequence which typified his own approach to TV, and, incidentally, made monkeys of the industry's razzle-dazzle promotional geniuses.

"Ever since the installation of the relay facilities extending TV from coast to coast, video's leaders have futilely sought some means of graphically portraying on the screen the significance of the event. The comedians dutifully screamed that now the American public could see vaudeville everywhere.

"Quietly and unostentatiously, Mr. Murrow decided that there was another way. On the same screen he showed the waters of the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans and the skylines of New York and San Francisco. Never before has television's great power — enabling the viewer to have a sense of being in two places at once — been so simply and vividly detailed . . .

"Admittedly, the success of 'See It Now' in large measure depends on Mr. Murrow's personality, which, if anything, takes on added dimension on TV. As the requirements of the news dictate, he is alternately wryly humorous, understandingly sympathetic, courteously disbelieving, or suavely hard-boiled. But in each case he employs the art of understatement, and if one word will do he doesn't use two.

"In the world of television, so prone to artificial ballyhoo and contrived enthusiasm, Mr. Murrow is a sobering and stimulating influence.

"But the larger lesson offered by 'See It Now' is one which all of television might take to heart. As the medium has enjoyed increasing commercial success in the last year or two, video has tended to become increasingly introverted, content to think only of what could be done within its studio's four walls.

"Actually, television's major raison d'être is that it can take its audience out into the world, and through the vivid instrument of moving pictures, acquaint millions with the issues and problems which affect the existence of individuals everywhere.

"'See It Now' is a most encouraging augury that TV is beginning to recognize this responsibility and opportunity."

3b—United Nations in Paris

From the time the United Nations came into being, CBS has recognized its clear and continuing responsibility to provide comprehensive and effective coverage of U.N. activities. And through CBS Television, perhaps more than through any other medium, the people of America have come to know the names and faces of the men in whose hands lies the destiny of the world.

The Network was especially proud to be able to bring its viewers daily coverage of the United Nations General Assembly sessions in Paris—thereby providing the swiftest international reporting by sight-and-sound of any event in history!

By an exclusive arrangement CBS Television made with the U. N. and Paramount Pictures Corp., a television recording of each session was made in Paris, flown to New York, and broadcast in this country the day following the actual meeting. The historic speeches, angry debates, and earnest pleas for world peace thus came almost directly from the Palais de Chaillot into the homes of Americans thousands of miles away.

This daily series, called "The U. N. in Action," was television's only daily account of the Paris meetings—"a true public service," said Jack Gould in The New York Times, "for which CBS deserves full praise."

In addition to the daily broadcasts, which necessarily were limited to straight reporting, the Network presented "The U. N. This Week," Sunday resumés of the U.N. activities. These were more documentary in nature, tying together the significant speeches and events, picturing the reaction of delegates to important speeches, analyzing the implications of the week's happenings.

Variety commented on these broadcasts: "CBS-TV, which has an exclusive on video coverage of the United Nations General Assembly sessions in Paris, is wrapping up its daily kinescope prints from the French capital into a tightly-edited and well-paced review.... Both the cross-the-board shows and this Sunday wrapup are viewable and informative.... The shows must be chalked up as public service programming, for which the web rates a deep nod."

Walter Cronkite, one of broadcasting's most distinguished newsmen, provided the narration for the resumés. His background of international reporting—in Africa, Holland, Belgium, Germany, Russia, and many World War II assignments — gave him an understanding of and an insight into the developments that made his commentary lucid and enlightening.

CBS Television submits that these broadcasts represent an important contribution towards international understanding, and as such, truly provide an outstanding example of news reporting.

September 22, 1952.

Dear Ed:

I have just had the opportunity to see a film of your June 22 "See It Now" show which dealt in part with Yugoslavia. It was an excellent job. I hope while the copy is still in Belgrade to screen it for a few of the more sophisticated among the Yugoslav officials as an example of the straight-forward information which is presented to the American people over U.S. television.

My complements to Al Kendrick and Bill McClure, who achieved good balance and perspective in the sequences.

I hope you will forgive me for not having been in touch with you before this regarding the Quaker work camp story. I have just returned from Chicago and am only now finding the opportunity to attend to correspondence.

I'm sorry, but I just don't see how we can do the story this year. Our camera crew in Europe already has a pretty tight schedule so I'm afraid all we can do now is keep the story on file for possible use next year.

Please accept my thanks for your letters and the material you sent.

Dear Mr. Morrow:

I know you are busy at the conventions and will not see this letter for at least another week, but I wanted to write you before I leave the country.

I have not heard from you as to whether or not you are planning to have your TV photo team do the Quaker work camp story this Summer, but if you are we would appreciate knowing a little in advance. I assume you received the material that I sent you some weeks ago.

If you are planning to go ahead please contact Barbara Moffett Haworth of this office or get in touch with me directly in the field. A copy of my itinerary is enclosed.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am writing in regard to our conversation of several weeks ago concerning the 300th Anniversary of the Society of Friends. You will recall I was to send you some information on a work camp, held under Friends' auspices, somewhere in Europe not too far from Paris.

Our first suggestion is the work camp near Gaimersheim, described on the attached page. I will be glad to send more complete information if you think this is one which you would like to consider. If not, let me know and we will suggest another. The pictorial aspects of this one appealed to us as one of the best possibilities.

I will be in the office here until July 16th, when I leave for England to attend the Friends World Conference.

AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE

WORK CAMP NEAR GAIMERSHEIM, District of Ingolstadt, Bavaria, Germany.

PROJECT:

A group of work campers of differing nationalities, religions, and races will help a settlement of refugees build homes. The work involves digging foundations, hauling stones from an old fortress nearby, and erecting the homes. Refugees and campers work side by side. The project starts in late June and continues at least through August.

BACKGROUND:

Five years ago the housing standards of a group of refugees, mainly from Yugoslavia, Hungary, and Sudetenland, living in this district were the lowest to be found in Upper Bavaria. Refugees were living among the ruins of Fort Von der Tann, outside of the small town of Gaimersheim. In 1948, the Landrat of the District (similar to Governor) began to work out a program which would enable these refugees to meet their own housing problems. He had in mind a type of construction called "Stampflehmbau," which involved using an adobe-type mixture of earth and ground brick and stone from the old fortress. The refugee families were eager to do the work themselves. In 1949, a sample house was built to prove the feasibility of this plan. In 1950, the government gave funds to help this work. In the summer of 1951, a group of work campers came together in an AFSC-sponsored camp to work with the refugees. The camp this summer will be similar to last year's, and the following material gathered from last year's reports will give a picture of what will take place:

In six weeks the campers, working with refugees, dug 16 cellars, poured about a dozen concrete foundations, and erected the adobe walls for three houses. The campers put in an eight hour work day. The refugees, who put in 13 hours of work on their homes each day, were worried about these young foreigners who were unused to such heavy manual labor and had doubts, which were dispelled, about their ability to keep up even the eight hour schedule.

The campers represented seven countries. In the course of the summer they worked out a sound relationship with the refugees, and it is actually the wish of the refugees that a camp return to work with them this summer.

The Landrat, the moving spirit behind all of this self help activity, was instrumental in setting the tone of the summer's work. A report from the camp gives the following account of the Landrat's interpretation to the campers at the beginning of the summer of what their task was: "He pointed out that the job was not alone that of helping build much-needed houses, but was one of generating a contagious spirit of good will and friendship." The campers' feeling of to what degree they succeeded in accomplishing this goal is contained in the following quotes: "At first our camp was chiefly a curiosity and the people were not certain why we were there. But as the days and weeks passed their curiosity changed to warm friendliness..... The refugees with whom we worked were extremely kind to us. It became their custom to supply our group with a large bowl full of homemade pastry every day. We had two social get-to-gethers with the refugees."

After a few weeks of camp, the work campers wrote: "We can look forward to a full experience from our work here from the standpoint of human relations as well as from the sense of accomplishment on the work project.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

It might be intelligent to identify myself before proceeding further.

I am the one who spoke to you about publicity as you were leaving the dais at the Peabody Awards luncheon today. (It was a three way parley for me since we represent the Peabody Committee, the Radio Executives Club and the Hotel Roosevelt).

I believe we are deservedly considered the outstanding publicity organization in the radio-TV field, numbering among our clients Bob Hope, Guy Lombardo, "The Goldbergs", "Rootie Kazootie", Jackie Kelk and "Young Mr. Bobbin", Kay Armen, Sammy Kaye, Dagmar, "Ellery Queen", Ed Herlihy, Ben Grauer, Kathi Norris, Arthur Murray, etc., etc. and another etc.

I would like to discuss with you the possibility of including you among our clientele. We represent no one with conflicting interests.

I think it particularly unfortunate that your programs, which offer enough showmanship and integrity to win a Peabody Award, have not received the popular acclaim they deserve. Newspaper space, unlike Peabody Awards, are not obtained on merit alone. It requires contacts plus a know-how plus intelligence plus creative ideas on the part of publicity representatives. We have these.

When can we get together for a chat? And, to quote certain department store advertisements, there is no obligation to buy.

ED; SOMEDAY SOMETHING LIKE THIS-- BUT THIS ISN'T THE RIGHT FIRM.

Dear Ed:

Things have been happening in the middlewest that have me a little muddled, so thought I would write to you and tell you what is on my mind.

When C.B.S. television made the change, one of the first things they started to do was organize a film news staff. They hired my brother as one of their cameramen and a couple others outside Chicago. They talk of doing big things in the future. This, of course, reminded me of some of the thingswe talked about several times.

I am happy in what I am doing now, but just looking ahead to the future. I have never put it in writing, but I am sure you understand how much I am enjoying my association with all of you in "See It Now". No matter what the future may hold for me I shall always consider it a very fortunate chance to have the opportunity to be part of your "See It Now".

I feel the same way that I felt before, that some day, someone will come along and really start a great television news gathering organization. When this happens and you are behind the helm, this boy might like to go along and be a small part of it.

At this time I want to thank you and Fred for the posies you sent while I was convalescing from my throat operation.

Hope that in the near future I may get to work another assignment with you, and will try and keep the shots in focus.

With kindest personal regards, I remain

It was very nice talking to you, I had heard that you were hospitalized, tried to call you but you were out. It was thoughtful of you to have called and very much appreciated.

I have heard nothing but praise for the show and many of my own collegues in the business who are most critical voiced the same tribute.

As yet I have not seen the show, that Saturday repeat did not have an outlet here. I have hopes that when a Kinescope is available I will get to see it.

After hearing what had happened to some of you I thought it best that I get a medical checkup myself. I had a bad cough that did not seem to want to leave. They found I have a small growth on my vocal cords and very soon I am going to have it removed.

Dear Professor:

Having followed with some fascination the difficulties experienced by one Charles (Toujours L'amour) Collinwood with his friend Univac two evenings ago, not to speak of certain admissions of tampering with the latter's cerebration, I feel it is opportune to suggest that in the future, Univac be left to its own devices and that, precautionarily, it be equipped with a gadget which will promptly spot any tampering and illuminate a small sign saying "TILT."

Now that I have disposed of this signal contribution to the success of CBS (for which there is no charge) let me add that you guys really clobbered NBC that evening. I am in a good position to know because I tuned in to NBC every time Betty Furness began stuffing dirty laundry into the maw of her mechanical monster, a process which becomes unbelievably boring after the third time. Not only was CBS on the whole something like fifteen minutes ahead, I'd judge, at all times, but your presentation gadgets were much better and clearer, and Bill Henry was still playing the thing close to his chest a couple of hours after you and Eric had labeled the trend for what it obviously was. I think even Dr. Stoneman would have been complimentary about the whole performance.

You will be glad to know that one C. Andrew Spaatz, equipped for the occasion with pencil, tally sheet and an overload of Gibsons, succeeded in getting himself into utter and angry frustration by jotting down CBS and NBC figures with complete abandon, thus arriving, along about 10:30, at totals below those he'd established at 10:00.

While passing out the compliments, I think Walt Cronkite did a superb job, as he did during the conventions. What an iron man act! Incidentally, everyone down here has commented on the CBS coverage.

These are probably the last nice words I'll ever write you, so treasure.

My compliments to your wife and sprossling,

Dear Ed:

I have just finished reading Alex' critique with really consuming interest. I would take his word on anything to which he had devoted as much time as he obviously did to this, and the picture can only be described as pretty bloody awful.

The programs sound like what the "Voice" used to put out (and still does to some extent, I guess, thanks to congressional and other pressure) in an effort to play up C rane-type civilization and establish the philosophical superiority inherent in the possession of 435 Representatives and 96 (count 'em) Senators.

I recall having asked you whether the document could be passed on to Frank Wisner and your having agreed. Since it was late of a well-heeled evening, however, I want to re-check this with you. I believe Frank should see it, but pending word, it will remain in my possession.

That was a very fine reunion, and please pass on to Janet my appreciation. Give me a shot at you next time.

Dear Ed:

This voluminous document speaks for itself, I trust. I have just gone ahead and reported what I found out. But it is obvious that some of the material is confidential, especially the part about the CIA. As far as I'm concerned, you can use anything you like. I received nothing under a pledge of secrecy or any other limitation. But discretion is indicated.

Only one thing. I have used no names of RFE people in this report. They are friends of mine, and they got a load off their chests. I wouldn't want anything ever to come back to embarrass them.

Needless to say, I was given access to a lot of things I probably shouldn't have seen, particularly the CIA news items with their evaluations. Let's just take it for granted that everything in the report is documented.

Regards to Jesse and Johnnie. Happy Eisenhowering.

Dear Mr. Blair:

You must indeed regard me as a churlish individual for not having answered earlier your generous and gracious letter of January 14. It became lost in a mass of wholly unimportant correspondence.

The response to the program concerning the Children's Christmas Festival was excellent. We were, and are grateful for the cooperation from the members of the staff and from the children. The time we were able to devote to that particular portion of the program was altogether inadequate, but I'm grateful that the school and atleast some of the parents thought that we did that portion in good taste.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It was with considerable hesitancy as you know that we consented to have the Children's Christmas Festival filmed for television. We felt that the experience might have a deleterious effect upon the children and upon the spirit of the Festival. We also doubted if we could do it sucessfully during the busy Christmas Season with our limited staff.

Our confidence in you, however, and the quality of what you are doing plus the assurance from Mrs. Slocum that the filming would be done in accordance with our wishes regarding the children, finally persuaded us that we should make the effort and take the risk and have the honor of having the Christmas Festival of the Children's Home School included in your Christmas program on Sunday, December 23.

On behalf of the Board of Trustees of Child Education Foundation, therefore, I wish to express to you our deep appreciation of this privilege. Unhappily I was unable to see the performance as there was no television where I was spending the holidays. However, I have heard the most enthusiastic comments from those who were fortunate enough to see it. They felt your people had captured the spirit of the Festival as nearly as possible, which was your goal and ours.

We were much impressed with the cooperative spirit of your fine staff particularly their meticulous observance of our stipulation of no interruption of the program during the filming of the Festival. We are grateful to Mrs. Slocum for her part in this. Will you kindly thank Mr. Zousmer and the other members of your staff for us, telling them it was a pleasure and an education to work with them.

We are proud to have had even a small part in your fine effort to show the constructive possibilities of television. As a people we should be grateful for the contribution you are making through so many avenues to the wise molding of our culture.

Dear Ed:

I thought your MacArthur-Eisenhower sequence on "See it Now" yesterday was one of the most effective things I have ever seen. You are really using television as it should be used.

If you need material for future programs, here are a couple of suggestions. First, I can deliver Averell for an interview on any Sunday from now on. Second, Chet Bowles' friends here tell me that he would be delighted to do an interview with you on film. The State Department now has contracts with a camera crew working in India and it would be perfectly feasible to make arrangements for them to shoot from a question and answer script which could be cut into your live questions. If either of these interests you, let me know.

Averell is making a speech in New York on April 17 and I will be going up with him. If I come up a little ahead of time that day, perhaps we could have lunch or a drink together.

Dear Mr. Scott:

Inclosed are fact sheets on Exercise LONG HORN. One is general background information, and the other, phase sequences. I should like to call your attention to three important activities of the maneuver. The first, the airlifting of the 31st Infantry Division into the maneuver area. This will be the first time in military history that an infantry division has been airlifted into a tactical situation. The Air Force will land a plane every five to ten minutes, fourteen hours a day, during this airlift. There will be the dropping of the 82nd Airborne, and the committing of an entire armored division.

I understand from Washington that General Parks either has or is planning to extend a personal invitation to Ed Murrow. We certainly would like to have Mr. Murrow spend some time at Exercise LONG HORN.

We have arranged a broadcast loop from maneuver director headquarters at Fort Hood to A.T.&.T. long lines at Kileen, Texas. These facilities will be at your disposal.

Hope to hear from you at your earliest convenience regarding your plans for "See It Now" at Exercise LONG HORN.

We are providing courier plane service between New York and Fort Hood on an almost daily basis.

Exercise LONG HORN

JOINT PUBLIC INFORMATION BUREAU (JPIB)

Fort Hood, Texas

The following is for your background information only and is not to be released for publicity purposes or publicly discussed. Every precaution must be taken to safeguard this material.

Exercise LONG HORN will extend from March 25th through April 11th. It is divided into three major phases with every attempt being made to create actual combat conditions and realism.

PLAY OF THE AIR FORCE DURING ENTIRE MANEUVER

March 20th through March 25th, the 18th Air Force will airlift elements of the 31st Infantry Division from Shaw AFB, South Carolina, into the maneuver area. An airplane will land and take off every five minutes at Temple, Texas, during this phase (in accordance with weather and flight conditions). In addition to this airlift, the 18th Air Force will air-evacuate and resupply U. S. Aggressor Forces constantly during the entire maneuver, and will make several airborne troop drops for the 82nd Division.

The 9th Tactical Air Force will, during the entire maneuver, be devoted to counter air, battlefield isolation, and/or interdiction and close support of ground troops.

PHASE I

(March 25th through March 30th) — March 31st, Rest and Regrouping.

This phase will occur during the first five days of the maneuver. The U. S. Forces, initially composed of the 47th Infantry and 1st Armored Divisions, will be in a defensive position and under constant attack by the Aggressors. The 31st Infantry Division will be airlifted into the area and assigned to U. S. Forces as reinforcements. There will be the parachute assault by units of the 82nd Airborne (Aggressor Forces), plus a movement through the 47th Infantry Division by the 1st Armored Divison up to the front lines for counter-attack. During this entire phase there will be a tremendous movement of large elements of troops and equipment, plus intensive Aggressor air action.

PHASE II

(April 1st through April 4th) — April 5th, Rest and Regrouping.

This phase will include approximately the next four days and will feature constant ground attacks by Aggressor Forces against prepared U. S. positions. Aggressor and U. S. Air Forces will be tied in a struggle for air superiority. There will be a constant build-up during this period of the U. S. Forces, the seizing of bridgeheads across the Lampasas River and constant preparations for attack. This period will also include vast movement of troops during the night in order to exploit the capture of bridgeheads. The two infantry divisions will be thrown into a double envolopment movement against the Aggressor.

PHASE III

(April 6th through April 11th)

This phase will feature a coordinated all-out attack by U. S. Forces with two entire infantry divisions in a direct pressure attack and the 1st Armored Division in the break-out and exploitation phase, with the mission of securing Colorado River crossing sites.

The entire joint maneuver will be critiqued at Maneuver Director Headquarters on the morning of April 12th.

As you can see, each of these phases will provide constant and sustained action which can be graphically described. There will be unlimited numbers of interviews with soldiers or units in both the ground forces and the air forces. The correspondents will have access to the equipment, such as tanks and planes, of both forces. The wealth of material available for editorial comment, pictures, on-the-spot description, interviews, home town releases and feature stories is limitless.

GENERAL INFORMATION EXERCISE LONG HORN

I RADIO EQUIPMENT PROVIDED BY ARMY

A radio broadcast room will be set-up at the Joint Public Information Bureau with microphones, pre-amphlifiers and a broadcast loop to Killeen Texas. This loop will join with AT&T Long Lines for network or individual station on-the-spot-originations. Power supplies, converters and volt meters will be available for the operation of station tape recorders in the field. The Army will have on hand two (2) Mini-Tape Recorders. These recorders will be used by Army-Air Force correspondents and the marterial on them will be made available to any station or networks. It is recommended that all participating networks and stations provide their own recording equipment.

II TRANSPORTATION

The JPIB will provide transportation for all correspondents throughout the maneuver area. Access through lines and to all units can be accomplished at the request of the correspondents.

III MESS AND QUARTERS

Quarters and Mess facilities will be available at Fort Hood, Texas. Correspondents will have access to, and privileges of the Officers Club.

IV COURIER FLIGHTS

The Air Force will provide courier flights to Dallas, Washington, New York and San Antonio. Correspondents may use these flights for transport to and from the area within space limitations, and to send pictures, tapes, or other material to their home offices.

V PRESS-PICTORIAL-RADIO-TELEVISION-NEWSREEL ASSISTANCE

The JPIB will provide a staff to assist the attending correspondents in every way possible. Briefings will be made daily of the maneuver situation in order that the correspondents may be informed of activities in all areas. Escort and orientation of correspondents when necessary will be provided. Access to planes, tanks and other Army-Air Force equipment will be provided upon request. The 301st Signal Photograph company will support the JPIB. A photographic Laboratory will be set-up in the JPIB for the use of civilian photographers. This Laboratory will process and print all still pictures within the limits of its production capacity.

COMMUNICATIONS

The JPIB will provide the following minimum equipment for the transmission of information and news copy.

a. One direct telephone line (voice-commercial) to AT&T long lines.

b. One broadcast loop (Killeen Texas)

c. Two teletypewriter lines

These facilities will be increased.

MISCELLANEOUS

Facilities will be available for (75) correspondents at one time. Invitations to correspondents will be made by JPIB or the Department of Defense, Washington D.C. All correspondents will be properly accredited and will wear plainly identifiable insignia (available at JPIB) and will carry the prescribed "Press Card" to be issued to them upon arrival in the area. All correspondents will be treated as neutrals and will be allowed free passage through tactical lines. The JPIB will operate on a twenty four (24) hour basis during the maneuver.

SECURITY

The usual four (4) hour delay in the release of names of actual casualties to press, radio and television will be observed.

SUGGESTED FEATURE DESCRIPTION AND PICTURE MATERIAL FOR EXERCISE LONG HORN

1. AIRBORNE LANDING OPERATIONS.

Several phases of Exercise LONG HORN will thoroughly test current doctrines, equipment and organization for airborne and air landing operations. The bulk of the 301st Infantry Division will be air transported into the maneuver area during the initial phase of the exercise. This division will also be air-lifted out of the maneuver area. It is believed that correspondents could go to the division staging area, see the planning and organization necessary to air-lift a large ground unit, both on the Army's part and on the Air Force's part. The correspondents and photographers could probably accompany the unit during the air-lift, the landing phase and the entrance into the maneuver as a reinforcing division.

While the 82d Airborne Division, acting as aggressor troops, will be largely a ground unit, several practice parachute jumps will be made prior to March 25th. Other combat jumps will be made during the play of the maneuver as the tactical situation warrants.

One of the basic objectives of this maneuver will be to test the current airborne division in extended ground operations. This will offer a good test of organization, equipment, communications, etc, in the airborne division, once the division is on the ground and operating as a conventional infantry division.

All phases of aerial supply and evacuation will be tested in LONG HORN. This will include the use of helicopters, and the support of an armored division in a deep penetration by aerial resupply.

II ARMY AVIATION

The operation of the new helicopter company and the use of individual helicopters and light planes for artillery spotting, reconnaissance and courier work will be tested during Exercise LONG HORN. Different stories may be developed pictorially as a feature or a combination and may cover the entire field of Army aviation or new developments in the use of the helicopter transport company, both as a means of supply, evacuation and for troop transportation in a tactical situation.

III AIR-GROUND COOPERATION.

The use of a large aggressor force and an aggressor Air Force will permit a realistic play of air-ground cooperation. Air-ground liaison officers, both in J3 and J2 Sections, are determined to make this play as realistic as possible. There will be no faking or artificial situations created.

IV PSYCHOLOGICAL AND GUERILLA WARFARE

As a training device and as a further test of current doctrine, psychological warfare will be actively played during this maneuver. Propaganda teams, loud speaker and leaflet warfare will all be used to break down military efficiency and resistance of participating forces.

Special guerilla detachments will be established by aggressor forces. These units will have a dual mission, that of testing our concepts of enemy guerilla tactics, and keeping American forces alive to the necessity for anti-guerilla measures at all times.

V MILITARY GOVERNMENT

It is contemplated at this time that military government units will further their training by actually taking over and running some of the smaller localities in the maneuver area. This story would have excellent possibilities for showing the public our current concepts of military government.

VI NIGHT OPERATIONS

Based on current experience in Korea, all phases of night operations will be thoroughly tested in Exercise LONG HORN. These stories, both in text and pictures, will bring out the difference between day and night operations, what types of missions are suitable for night operation, the differences in equipment and preparation, and what we are doing tactically to prepare ourselves for night combat, as well as the use of special night fighting apparatus such as sniperscopes, listening devices, and battle-field illumination.

VII AGGRESSOR FORCES

Exercise LONG HORN will have the largest aggressor force ever assembled. This force will include the 82nd Airborne Division, tank units, fighter bomber support, and other supporting troops. The general background of the aggressor concept, its previous use in maneuvers, and the vast amount of time necessary to convert an American unit of this size into a "foreign force" will be good story material. The 82nd will become a completely new organization with special appressor names, uniforms, background, etc.

This aggressor force makes possible a realistic intelligence play in a tactical situation that is as close as possible to actual combat. In addition to realistic maneuvers, it provides a force constantly in being for the testing of new and original tactical concepts and trains our troops to fight against an enemy different in name, organization, equipment and doctrine.

VIII MODERN COMBAT INTELLIGENCE

The use of an aggressor force permits a realistic intelligence play and the proper realistic operation of an intelligence section. LONG HORN will be an excellent opportunity by means of feature stories, pictures, etc., to show the American public our general methods of gathering intelligence on the battlefield. General information on the organization of an intelligence section, interpretation, dissemination, can be shown in a realistic manner during LONG HORN. General operation of special teams, such as photo interpretation, order of battle and prisoner of war interrogation teams can be graphically described and illustrated showing the large organization that goes into the production of combat intelligence.

May 20, 1952

Dear Mr. Harshbarger:

I am sure that you know better than I that there are more than five hundred Mock Political Conventions conducted by colleges througout America. We had to select one. Our first choice was Oberlin College; our second, Washington and Lee. We settled on the latter because it took place on a Monday and Tuesday, therefore giving us five succeeding days in which to edit the film and prepare it for our Sunday broadcast. If we had used the Oberlin Convention, we could not have possibly gotten the final scenes in until Sunday morning. We need a minimum of two days in which to edit an essay which runs eight minutes.

I would not presume to advise you as to how you can make sure your 1956 Convention gets on television. After all, "See It Now" is but one of many programs. By 1956 we may not be on on Sundays; as a matter of fact, we may not even be on at all. Or you yourself, or one of your classmates may be running the program and have to decide if it is the showplace for the 1956 Oberlin Convention.

Should "See It Now" be on in 1956, and should this tired old man still be in the position of making such decisions, you may tell your descendants on the campus that we shall look favorably toward the prospect of covering Oberlin for '56.

Respectfully,

Fred W. Friendly

May 5, 1952

Mr. Fred Friendly
CBS - TV
485 Madison Ave.,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Friendly:

On last May 2 and 3 Oberlin held its Republican Mock Convention. Beginning with the Parade on Friday afternoon with Senator Morse riding on one of our elephants, the Convention was filmed by CBS television. As you know, we went to a lot of work to bring this, the biggest and oldest, Mock Convention to your attention. We talked with your office, other people in CBS and Alcoa. But, the May 4th "See it Now" show did not carry our Convention.

This raises a question in our mind which we sincerely hope you will take time to answer.

As you can guess, Oberlin will be having another Convention in 1956. As the retiring Chairman, I want to leave them with good advice. The question to be answered is, should they even try for any national television coverage?

On your May 4th program you used the Washington and Lee Mock Convention. As we watched - we could see that it had many desirable features for a broadcast that wants to - or perhaps has to - conform to the prevailing national political views. The Washington and Lee Convention had strong Taft and Eisenhower blocks - with the final decision going to one of the two major candidates.

We talked to a man from the National Youth For Eisenhower office in New York who came to our Convention. He told us our Convention was no longer a first rate Convention - that Washington and Lee state delegations try to follow a balloting procedure which their counterparts at the National Convention will follow. For that reason, he felt they were more realistic. He also said that for that reason he was able to help sway that Convention to Eisenhower by convincing their Pennsylvania State Delegation that on the national level it would go for Eisenhower.

We can also see that it was technically easier for you to gather the movie film into a meaningful story with their Convention coming earlier in the week.

These three points we recognize as possible factors in affecting your choice. Oberlin's Convention differs from the Washington and Lee Convention in the following ways.

The Oberlin students work for almost three months on a very detailed platform and a suitable candidate. Out of the 18 nominations this year, the two major candidates did not have the same balance of power as they do on the national scene.

The Oberlin State Delegations follow their own feelings - not necessarily the feelings of their own states. The students are acting as if the burden of picking the country's next Republican leader was on their shoulders. Some states back candidates which have a realistic chance on the national scene - others back candidates which more closely could carry out their views and their ideas as expressed in their platform. This results from the emphasis in the Oberlin Convention for education. The Eisenhower man who came to Oberlin hurt his candidates' chances. His appearance resulted in a negative motivation on the student body as they did not want to be pressured into any candidate by anyone from the outside.

Our Convention is, then, purely an expression of Oberlin students as they are affected by their own thinking and campus politics - just as the national convention is affected by the politicians' thinking and national politics. We have never contended that we were trying to predict the nominee at the national convention.

I think you see the difference between the manner in which our Convention is conducted and the manner in which the Washington and Lee Convention is run. I am certain, on looking at the film taken of our convention, you will have to admit that our Convention was a great feat for students to put on - with no college financial help or aid in any way.

Our convention stresses a student convention for students, in order to show them that what they actually think and do can be translated into a national political choice by participating in politics. The question becomes, in 1956, should we take the trouble to bring our Convention before the eyes of television? Does television want this type of Convention? If our Convention had happened to have two strong candidates in Taft and Eisenhower, would you have used our Convention?

Many people on this campus have discredited CBS for their failure to use our Convention on "See It Now". They feel that you may have censured a free expression of student thought. I doubt if this is the case. I would like an explanation (and possible suggestions) of policy so that we can pass on good advice to future Conventions.

I will look forward to an early reply from you.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It is unfortunate that the occassion on which I choose to write to you is this particular one, since, in the past, I have been on the point of writing to you several times, to tell you how much I have appreciated the wonderful work which you and your outstanding staff are doing on "See It Now." However it seems that most of us are more vocal in our criticism than we are in our praise, all other things being equal. You have more than deserved all the words of praise that have been showered on you and your program by the outstanding critics and journals of the country. There is little doubt that your show is now an important influence on the thinking and political awareness of many millions of American television viewers.

It is for precisely this reason that I write to you about a recent decision that was made on "See It Now", as to its content for the May 4th program. This is in reference to the decision not to cover the Oberlin Mock Convention of May 2d and 3d, although, as you probably know, a camera crew from CBS-affiliate WXEL shot several hundred feet of the Convention, on orders from CBS in New York. Yet this footage was not used, because, according to Mr. Fred Friendly, the nomination of a candidate other than General Eisenhower or Senator Taft would not be "newsworthy." Because of this, coverage was given to the Washington and Lee Convention, which had 'wisely' chosen the General.

Certainly I would not question your right to chose the footage which you run on your program. I would, however, question your decision in this particular case, and what appears to be the decision of many of the organs of the national media, that our Convention was not newsworhty, because our choice was not one of the two major condidates. Senator Wayne Morse, in his address to the Convention, as Permanent Chairman, made reference to the tremendous influence which the mass media now have, as never before, on the choice of candidates for high public office. It is just such decisions, Mr. Murrow, which set in motion, or at least perpetuate the vicious cycle which limits this choice. For, since the press has the power to make individuals major candidates in the first place, because of the mass audience it reaches, and then has the 'responsibility' only to cover such events as relate to these major candidates, it is next to impossible for outsiders, such as our Convention's choice, Governor Earl Warren, to break into the cycle.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Murrow, you may be interested to know that our Convention was antagonized by the knowledge that a certain national picture weekly anticipated coverage only if the nomination of its own editorial choice was obtained. Unfortunately, too many people in other places would be, and are, influenced positively by such knowledge, rather than somewhat negatively, as was our Convention. It seems unfortunate that, because a college group chooses its nominee without reference to the possibility of national coverage, such coverage must be denied it.

I look forward to a personal reply from you, at your earliest convenience. I hope that you will realize that this letter is written in a spirit of friendly criticism, and because of my recognition of your important influence in national affairs, most of which influence I feel has been for good causes. I hope that "See It Now" will once again resume its role of a progressive leader of public opinion, rather than a mere reporter of already-'significant' news. Your program has an editorial influence; may it be a progressive one in the future.

Sincerely yours, Michael Berle

Dear Ed:

Please accept my heartiest congratulations and commendation on your wonderful new show " See It Now ".

I think it is one of the finest programs on television to-day and you most certainly are deserving of the highest praise that can be accorded for producing and putting on this program.

I have more friends looking at it now than seems possible - I tell them all about it and after watching it once they all say the same " I wouldn't miss it for anything ".

We don't see you around here very much - which is too bad for us.

Dear General LeMay:

I regret that I had no opportunity to come see you while in the Omaha area. We were literally shooting film day and night for television coverage of the flood. The program achieved some degree of success and much of it was due to the magnificent co-operation of officers of your Command. I should like to mention Major Lyle Jones, 30th Communication Squadron, who provided us with a generator and moved it into position on the dike; Major Lawrence Casey, 3902nd Air Base Wing, who was instrumental in securing reconnaissance photographs for us; and Captain Robert L. King, 30th Communications Squadron, who aided in making advance arrangements. I should also like to mention particularly the day and night, indefatigable, and always courteous, co-operation of Lieutenant Fred A. Joyce, Jr., without whose aid the job couldn't have been done.

I have knocked around with the Air Force a great deal in England, North Africa, France, Germany, the Berlin Airlift, and Korea and never have I encountered a higher degree of co-operation and assistance. In Washington the other day I took the opportunity of telling General Hoyt Vandenberg about it. While talking with him, I raised the possibility of our doing an extensive television program on a B36 and its crew, and he gave me reason to hope that permission will be granted before too long.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Friendly:

This is to certify that during the period 17-18 April inclusive I lived, ate, slept, drank, walked, rode and crawled with your "See It Now" crew, never letting them out of my sight for more than the time it took to go to the bathroom.

As a fully accredited Fred W. Friendly spy, I herewith submit my report.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow did climb a mountain of mud and clay to interview the pilot of an earth-mover. He did stand on the Douglas Street Bridge until 5 am interviewing philosophers in air-raid hats and making crazy circles in the sky with a $500.00-an-hour searchlight.

Mr. Jesse Zousmer did set the new light heavyweight world record for typing 15 minute radio news scripts while balancing a bottle of Scotch on the head. He also did achieve "LIFE-like" photographs of a two day river-rat-race.

Mr. Ed Scott did locate, drive a truck to, and direct the greatest flood scenes ever recorded on film and sound. He did all this while obtaining only 1 hour and 17 minutes sleep in a period of seven days.

Mr. Martin Barnett did stand out in a cold, driving rain storm from sunup to the going down thereof, photographing flotsam, jetsam and Ed Murrow, and did then retire to his hotel room to dry and clean his richety old camera equipment with hotel towels only to don his sopping trousers and go out into the cold night to photograph dark waters, searchlights and Ed Murrow until 5 am.

Mr. Don Geis did achieve sounds never before heard by human ears with sound equipment plainly marked "General Grant's Army Signal Corps." He did further unwind and rewind mud-covered wires 4,761 times, each time running the wires through his hands to remove the tons of mud clinging thereto.

Mr. John "Shorty" Richardson did, without concern for his personal safety, hang by his toes from a hovering helicopter as the viscous Missouri rushed beneath.

In witness hereof, I hereby affix my signature hereto.

Yours truly,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

If there was ever any doubt in your mind that you would produce one of the most outstanding television news programs ever seen in America, I hope you are now resting easy. Your show of yesterday made all the slogging through the mud, the back-breaking work of moving equipment, and the day and night schedule of shooting worth it many times over. Everyone here was deeply moved by your handling of the story and grateful for your plea at the close. We can only hope it will do the good you meant.

You asked me to furnish the names of the officers on the dike who aided us in shooting the Air Force sequence. Their names follow: Major Lyle M. Jones, 30th Communications Squadron, who moved the generator into position; Captain Robert L. King, 30th Communications Squadron who aided Major Jones and made advance arrangements with me; and Major Lawrence R. Casey, 3902nd Air Base Wing, with whom you and Major Jones discussed reconnaissance photographs of the river.

It was a personal thrill to work with you and your crew and I hope the opportunity comes again during the eight months I am in the Air Force or a later time when I return to public relations in Chicago.

My best wishes for your continued success.

My dear Mr. Secretary:

It was good to have you as a brief visitor on our SEE IT NOW program last Sunday. From the comments I have heard and from radio and press reports, I feel your contribution was very valuable.

We're all distressed here that our planned story on the U.S.S. Sablefish didn't come off as well as it might have.

I must take this opportunity, however, to tell you of the excellent co-operation the officers and men of the Sablefish gave our own television crew. From each of our reporters and technicians, I received the impression that the conduct, willingness to work at all hours, and the general spirit of the Sablefish personnel created a strong, new respect for the men of the submarine service and the Navy.

I should appreciate any effort you might personally make to acquaint the men of the U.S.S. Sablefish with our sincere appreciation for their outstanding co-operation under difficult conditions.

We are encouraged by our reception on the Sablefish to schedule television programs from other navy ships sometime in the future.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Ed:

I was in New York ten days ago, and had the rare pleasure of seeing your TV show "See It Now". Needless to say, it was a wonderful program, and I can only echo what all of the others have said about it. I congratulate you on a great job.

We have monthly classes for our own staff on television, and like to show them kinescopes of some of the top shows. We have had quite a number of the CBS kinescopes to show to our staff for educational and training purposes, but the one I most especially want is the kinescope of your "See It Now" show which was broadcast on Sunday, December 2, and had the sequence in it about what happens to a pint of blood. If it would be possible to get this, we would appreciate it very much.

Keep up the good work. I hope some day to have Edward R. Murrow on KLZ-TV.

Kolodin, Irving

S/N.

April 17, 1952

Dear Irving:

I must confess that both Ed and I were slightly confused as to exactly who you were when we saw you at the Algonquin the other day. After you left, Ed said, "Isn't that Irving Kolodin who helped us with our original music when SEE IT NOW was HEAR IT NOW?" Of course he was right, but by then you were out on 44th Street. Please forgive us; we're still very grateful to you for your help at that time.

We were both quite intrigued with your suggestion of the Metropolitan Opera and the Circus and even went so far as to check the itineraries of both companies to see if and when they would ever be in the same town on the same day. Unfortunately they will not. We had thought of doing a Circus piece, but have given it up, at least for this year, because of Mr. DeMille's rather pretentious effort in this area.

More specifically, we are fooling with the idea of doing something on a symphony orchestra on tour or in rehearsal, and if we ever get around to it, we may bother you for assistance.

Ed had asked me to check the itineraries of the Circus and the Opera, and I am, therefore, taking this opportunity in his name and mine to acknowledge your very kind letter, and I hope that we will have the pleasure of working with you again. As you put it,

The Metropolitan company leaves on its annual tour next Monday with a week in Cleveland followed by one in Boston. This, of itself, could be an interesting subject for one of your feature spots --what the Met. company looks like out of town, how it travels, etc. If, by any wild chance, it would be moving in a course parallel to the circus tour, a comparison of the two could be entertaining--each with music, ballet, prima donnas (two and four-legged), etc.

Dear Ed:

Having written a number of complimentary Murrow pieces through the years I claim the right to bark at you for the Gift Silver drivel you had on the air last Sunday.

Just having the horse on the race track for the 78½ Derby was simply pure corn and unworthy of your show. However, I thought I could detect your tongue firmly in your cheek.

The implication that the horse was denied its rights under the American system which guarantees all ends of all horses certain privileges was in extremely bad taste, I thought.

The facts are that Gift Silver had never been to the post, had not schooled from the starting gate, and was to be ridden by a high school boy with no experience. The stewards run the race track. They have a perfect right to bar any horse which in their judgement constitutes a danger to other animals and persons. They do so bar horses day after day on every track in America. There is a schooling list in effect at almost all times. This consists of horses which the starter reports need education in the gate before they can be allowed to start.

Our stewards say that they did not put pressure on the owners ~~to~~ OK refuse Gift Silver. They DID say, they claim, that the 17-year-old high school boy could not ride. In this they were also justified.

What would your reaction have been if Gift Silver had been allowed to start, had crossed over his field at the start, piled up a few horses and maybe killed a rider or so?

I don't complain about you using the feature. We all felt very sorry for the engineer, his wife and the horse, too. I thought the whole business was corny and I was surprised. But I do think that any implication that us hardboots done wrong by the beast was unjustified.

You have a hell of a fine show, Ed. Maybe that's the reason I hate to see you corn it up with stuff like Gift Silver. I couldn't help but compare this broadcast with the one about the Chinese and the Statue of Liberty verse. Could they have been done by the same guy?

Very sincerely,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your March 18th letter arrived just after I had left on a month's trip which kept me almost entirely out of contact with office and mail. I want you to know how much I appreciate your invitation to appear on the television program. I hope you will understand when I say that I am most anxious to continue living and working quietly, and have therefore, for some years, declined all invitations to speak or take part in public occasions.

It was very considerate of you to write. Many thanks.

Sincerely,

Dear Colonel Lindberg:

The Saturday Evening Post people were in to see me about doing a portion of our television program, See It Now, in conjunction with your forthcoming series of articles. We told them we would be very interested in doing something with Colonel Lindberg and that if that would help them so much the better. They are all for it, but feel the invitation to you must come from us.

It is my suggestion that you and I could sit down around a table and chat for an hour or so about your Paris flight. It would be my intention to film the entire conversation and then you and I could view it together and determine which sections would make the best historical document. If you so desired, the entire interview could be done at your home in an hour or two. We have done similar interviews with President Eisenhower and Senator Taft and feel we are equipped to do it with a minimum of inconvenience to you and your household.

I shall hold myself in readiness to discuss this with you further and should be delighted to come talk to you.

Sincerely yours,

Now that Management has decided that it does not want to buy a station wagon for the "See It Now" European operation, it puts us right back where we were several months ago when all our correspondence began. At that time McClure wanted to borrow $2,500 against his salary to purchase a station wagon himself and then to charge CBS on a per mile basis. This request was answered by a decision on the part of Management to investigate the possibilities of CBS buying a station wagon. For this reason McClure was told to cease and desist until a decision had been made. CBS does not wish to purchase a station wagon, so what do we do now? McClure's Kaiser automobile does not function. Will we, as requested in my memorandum of October 14th, arrange for him to borrow the money which should be amortized in less than three months? It has been ninety days now since McClure has been without transportation of his own. This is one hell of a way to run a railroad, but it would appear that I am the prisoner of other people's decisions. I am not inclined to write another memorandum about this subject. I have left McClure's last three cables unanswered. I will not answer him until I have some way of knowing how we will solve this dilemma.

Dear Ed:

It sure made me feel proud to be one of the team that produced, "This is Korea - Xmas 1952", when I saw it at the Pentagon screening friday. Andy Berding's background talk before the showing reflected the defense department's pleased attitude that this documentary was made. Joe did a good job in thanking the various services for their cooperation and after the showing there was a spontaneous burst of applause.

I certainly ran the gamut of emotion while viewing it. That poor kid on the stretcher being interviewed by Ed Scott. I think I felt every twitch of pain he had. The Irishman with the magnificient brogue, so thick you could cut it with a knife, and the Frenchman, so realistically nonchalant. The kids and the GI's - each scene and sequence moving so smoothly into place. Fred sure did a superb job of editing. To repeat myself, I am proud to be a part of the team that accomplished such a great first in television journalism.

Now to get back to some unfinished business. Enclosed is attached my check for seventy four dollars. At one time I passed off my poker loses with that old cliche - unlucky in cards, lucky in love - but now that I am old and worn out, it's finally dawning on me that I am just a lousy poker player.

With all good wishes for the New Year and hoping this finds you in the best of health for the inaugural merry-go-round, I am

Thank you for your letter of March 31. I am afraid I am the culprit rather than the production people in Pittsburgh. I tried to cover too much ground involving an exceedingly complicated subject in too little time. We shall not, I hope, make that same mistake again.

You may be interested to know that we have not received any volume of complaints regarding that particular program, but I am prepared to believe that the absence of complaints may result from the fact that most of our viewers were less personally interested and less perceptive than you were.

Thanks again for writing with such refreshing candor.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I felt compelled to sit down to write to you concerning your program which was telecast yesterday afternoon. The general reaction around here, and I am not speaking for anyone at WDTV but the public in general, was very unfavorable. My own personal reaction was one of disgust for your poorly produced TV show.

After telling father and Mr. Murray each had four minutes, you cut the time considerably and thereby interrupted the prepared and important statements which they had to deliver. You even messed up the first question you put to father! Frankly, the show was what our small town local producers here in Pittsburgh would call a "sloppy production," and I don't think I'm mistaken when I tell you that ALCOA received more than one call on it.

You are still, in my estimation, an exceptionally outstanding commentator, but I think it would be to your advantage to do something with or to the lousy production of that TV show of yours.

Dear Carl Sandburg,

To put our phone conversation down on paper:

1. We invite you to be in Washington, Sunday, 10 February, to appear on "See It Now," Ed Murrow's show. Air time is 3:30 - 4 PM, eastern time. Your portion will run about three minutes.

Program tentatively is this:

Murrow will talk of Lincoln's birthday. He will say we asked Carl Sandburg, where would Sandburg take us for memorable places in Lincoln's life. Thereupon film will be shown of: a) log cabin, Hodgenville, Kentucky, birthplace. b) New Salem, restoration, store Lincoln kept. We'll pick the Offut store. c) Springfield, Illinois, Lincoln's home, house he lived in. d) White House, looking from Lincoln's room to Potomac.

Behind these pictures will be Sandburg's voice which we will record ahead of time, possibly when you're in Chicago. A few words on each place. For instance, the birthplace picture ... "So came the birth of Abraham Lincoln the 12th of February in the year 1809, in silence and pain from a wilderness mother on a bed of corn husks and bearskins ..." Or, also from your Prairie Years, the commentary on the New Salem Offut store, Offut's remarks: "Some day he will be President of the United States ... he can outrun, outlift, outwrestle and throw down any man in Sangamon County." You may of course wish to write new commentary for eadh place. This is merely illustration.

2. For the actual broadcast time, we are thinking of having you speak some of your Lincoln poetry from the Lincoln Memorial statue hall as our cameras pick up the statue and yourself. You may of course wish to write completely new lines.

3. Mr. Murrow's people have agreed that for your services they are to pay you five hundred dollars for the broadcast, plus travel expenses to and from Washington - Charlotte, North Carolina, plus hotel expenses here in Washington. I assume the method of payment will be worked out before broadcast time.

We will call you with complete details in sufficient time. Meantime, if you could work up four brief lines to describe the four places you've chosen, we could then arrange to record your voice speaking these lines, and dub the voice behind the film.

Take good care of yourself and we'll be seeing you.

Affectionately,

Joe Wershba

DAVID SCHOENBRUN
PARIS CORRESPONDENT

April 8, 1952

Dear Ed and Fred,

Someone ought to tell Ike the facts of public life. Those eminent chowder-heads, Buck Lanham and Cabot Lodge, either don't know or are afraid. The latest story about Lanham around here is that he isn't really a yes-man for Ike. Any time Ike says no, Lanham says no too. And that's most of the time.

I fought myself out with Lanham and had one medium-sized bout with Ike himself about the NATO report. I pleaded with him to set a decent release time and predicted that his 0001 time would in any case be violated, as it was. I also tried to get him to do a radio recording separately from the TV spot, but Ike was stubborn as a Kansas mule. He hates both radio and TV and suffers from the delusion that he can virtually do without them. He has the strange complex about TV particularly, that it is purely a publicity medium for publicity-seekers, and it offends his sense of propriety to stand before a camera. I asked him what the difference was, publicity-seeking-wise, between a press conference without cameras and one with cameras and he couldn't honestly explain the moral principle involved. He just doesn't like it.

I am now engaged in a fight with Lanham about calling a news conference, with cameras, as soon as the announcement is official that Ike has requested relief from duty. Our association has made such a request and I'm again the pool man on it. That jerk Lanham says Ike's letter will speak for itself. He insists there will be no more appearances by Ike for us until the day he leaves at a big farewell press conference. And he refuses to discuss the possibility of Ike making any TV or radio addresses on some special trip home, for one of the three occasions mentioned in a previous report of mine. That's up to Ike, says Lanham, and just pushes the papers through to Ike's aide and you never hear about it again.

I think it would be a good idea for Ed to get in touch with Paul Hoffman about this. It is the only way I know to line up Ike futurely. And he is certainly going to need a radio-TV campaign manager, with some authority, or he'll make some bad enemies in our media. God help the man who takes the job. Ike will be very tough to handle, I think.

I'm sorry about the Notre Dame Easter spot. I pulled every possible string to get permission. Philippe Barrès, whose father was one of France's greatest Catholic writers, and the Count de Leusse, of the Quai d'Orsay, a socialite Catholic leader, both called the Archbishop of Paris himself to back up my request. Through them I got to talk to him about it, and he was extremely pleasant. Monseigneur Feltin, the Archbishop, told me the request came too late to be granted. That is, it came just before the beginning of Holy Week, with special services and conferences of the French bishops in Paris all week long. He told me that he would however grant us special permission to make a film inside Notre Dame, with him and the choir, the organ, the bells, processions, almost anything we liked, after Holy Week. I have an appointment with his film director, Father Pichard, next week to discuss this. I think we ought to make a Notre Dame film, perhaps the Easter Service and the Christmas Eve Service, that is, the highlights of each, for future use. I don't think we ought to use Feltin himself, however, for that could date the film should something happen to him.

I would also like to start working with McClure on a Paris tailpiece spot for SIN, a dateless feature piece that we could work on in between other assignments. I am working on a suggested script now which I'll send to you in a few days - a sort of working outline of the project.

Enclosed, you will find two letters to Buck Lanham in which I requested some material for a spot on Ike's resignation. Lanham has already told me it's very unlikely that he can put it through, but I'm going over his head and behind his back on it as discretely as possible, hoping to get something on it. I also have requests pending for exclusive statements (about 30 seconds each) from Foreign Minister Schuman and Defense Minister Pleven on what Ike's resignation means to France. Ditto a plan with Pierre Lazareff to film the extra edition of his paper France Soir (biggest in the country), that he intends to bring out when the news breaks. We can get a short shot of the paper coming off the presses, the front-page headline in French over Ike's picture, and a news-vendor running out of the building hawking the story on the boulevards.

Some one of these ideas ought to come through for us, I hope.

Meanwhile, best regards to you all from all of us.

Dear General Lanham,

We would like to make a suggestion to General Eisenhower which we believe would be of considerable public and historic interest.

The suggestion is that the General dictate his letter of resignation on a dictaphone machine, rather than to a shorthand typist.

In that way, we would have a permanent voice recording of this extremely important occasion. It could become, perhaps even to the General himself, a very precious souvenir.

For the American public, it would certainly be of the greatest human interest to hear the General's own voice dictating his letter.

The Columbia Broadcasting System would like to use such a recording in a special documentary report which we are preparing on the occasion of the Supreme Commander's resignation.

Naturally, we understand that any such material would be given to us only after the official announcement of General Eisenhower's request for relief has been made.

It is also understood that this request is in line with your official policy that exclusives may be given when the report requested originates with a correspondent and is unique, which, I believe is the case with this suggestion.

We urge you to give this matter your most serious consideration, and would appreciate your cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

April 8, 1952

Dear General Lanham,

C.B.S. is planning to do a special television report on the occasion of General Eisenhower's request for relief from duty as Supreme Commander, if and when the General does so decide.

There are certain personal and material elements that we need for this report and for which we would greatly appreciate your assistance.

We would like to have short statements, recorded on film at SHAPE, from the following personalities:

1) General Alfred M. Gruenther
2) Field Marshal Montgomery
3) General Juin
4) Admiral Caponi

As you see, we would like to get the international flavor in the comments. If any of these officers are not available, could the comment be forthcoming from some other high ranking American, French, British and Italian officer.

We also want very much to interview the person who actually has typed Eisenhower's request for resignation, such as, for example, Warrant Officer Good or Wave Helen Weaver.

We want also to interview you on the way the news broke over here, including such items of interest as transatlantic telephone calls, telegrams, etc. In that respect, do you or can you make recordings of transatlantic calls that are coming to you on this subject, which we could use for our own radio show which we are planning to do on the same topic.

On the material side, we need certain props for the television show:

1) the pen which Eisenhower uses to sign the letter.

2) an exact carbon copy of the letter itself.

3) the typewriter on which the letter was written. We would like to have Mr. Good or Miss Weaver re-enact the scene at the typewriter, filming over the typist's shoulder the letter as it is being typed.

We intend, of course, to stay within your restrictions on politics at SHAPE, limiting SHAPE's participation in the show strictly to the question of what it means to have the Supreme Commander leave.

We would greatly appreciate your cooperation in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

General Charles T. Lanham

October 20, 1952

Dear Mr. Schwartz:

Thank you for sending me a copy of your letter to Dr. Stanton regarding my television program in which Robert Pierpoint made certain comments about the Hollywood films shown to American troops in Korea. Pierpoint was there and I was not, and under the circumstances, I must go along with the foreign correspondent in the field. You may recall that the locale for this particular piece of film was a small island in Wonsan Harbor, some seventy-five miles behind the front. It may well be that the Army's system of distribution of the films made available by the film producers is inadequate.

Subsequent to the receipt of your letter I queried Pierpoint by cable regarding his comments. His reply indicates he was reflecting the attitude of the men on that island with whom he had spent seven days. I cannot, as editor of the program, utter the correction which you suggest without impugning the veracity of one of our foreign correspondents, and Pierpoint does not feel that in that particular piece he did any violence to the truth.

May I add that in the course of attempting to report three wars, it has been my experience that front-line troops complain about the mail, the rations, the movies and the broadcasts they receive.

I assure you that it was no part of our purpose to publish by way of television any indictment or disparagement of the efforts the film industry has made in the direction of supplying films for the armed forces. And I can't help wondering what your reaction would be if the television industry should ask for the correction or retraction of "Dreamboat". I found it highly amusing.

Such an application would of course be premature at thistime. However, I understand that you are to be in Hollywood briefly, in which case it might be opportune to arrange a few moments' conversation as a preliminary to future communications.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow

Dear Ed:

I realize that you going to have a terrific amount of political material for your TV show beginning in September. However, the CAA, in cooperation with the Air Transport Association, the Coast Guard and MATS has been conducting some very interesting experiments in evacuation of aircraft downed at sea.

We have about completed these studies, during which we shot a considerable amount of film. It is our intention to edit the film and prepare a commentary pointing out the problem and the methods by which an effort is being made to cope with it. Our principle problem is we don't want to scare passengers so therefore the script treatment is most important.

If you believe you would be interested, we would be happy to run off a showing for you of the film and supply the material for the commentary which we, of course, must clear with the cooperating agencies. It will be several weeks before we have it in viewable shape.

Trust you have recovered from the Convention. Apparently most of us as yet have not.

Thank you for the opportunity to discuss the atomic-bomb films with you. I forgot to mention at our meeting that my thought was to shoot matching film in many instances in an American town of parallel size with emphasis on people and their homes...thereby bringing even closer to home with striking clarity the "before" and "after" effects of the atomic attack.

By the way, I have just learned today that effective with the last telecast of "The Ken Murray Show" my staff services with CBS are to be terminated. Apparently, without any intent on my part, I have become involved in the high level politics of network programming.

In any case, I want you to be assured of my complete cooperation in this project. The officer we discussed is: Captain Dan McGovern, 1st Photographic Squadron, Air Pictorial Service, 200 King Street, Alexandria, Virginia. If I can assist in any way, please call upon me at any time. My home address is 8 East 76 Street; my telephone number: REgent 7-3979.

First, I'd like to congradulate you on an excellent job of vividly presenting documented stories of people and events that shape our lives on "SEE IT NOW". In my mind, these fine presentations achieve maximum impact because they are backed by your outspoken personal convictions.

In the human-interest story of the atomic bomb, which TV vaguely attempted to reveal to the American people last week, is still inherent the most dramatic story of our times. A pictorial record of a bomb exploding in the desert, even with the best technical reception, cannot alone tell this story; it can't possibly personalize the meaning of this great power to the lives of a hundred and fifty million individuals. Neither can statistics alone do the job. Who can visualize 100,000 people killed by one bomb or the devistation of a square mile of city blocks?

Daniel McGovern.

Commencing several months after the atomic bombs were dropped in Japan and continuing for more than a year, I directed motion pictures in Hiroshima and Nagasaki...supervised films that documented the medical, morale, and physical damage effects of the atomic bombs in terms of individuals, their lives, and their homes. My orders from the President directed me to spend a month on this project. Yet, I felt that what I saw and could photograph was unique. Consequently, I remained in these cities many more months to capture on film the only existing visual record of the effects of these bombs on people and their lives. From these motion pictures, I later prepared for the President a three volume photographic documentary report entitled "Japan In Defeat".

U.S. Strategic Bombing Survey - Motion Picture Project.

It is my feeling that you can utilize this unreleased book and these unique motion pictures to tell a vivid, documented account of the atomic bomb on "SEE IT NOW". The complacent attitude of the American people towards the need for a well-organized civilian defense corps and their lack of realization of the power of these weapons might decidedly be affected favorably by such a presentation.

My only purpose is that I strongly feel there is a real need for such a presentation...and you have the proper frame to present it on "SEE IT NOW". With this in view, I would appreciate an opportunity to speak with you at a time convenient to you to discuss this matter. "The Ken Murray Show" occupies my time from Wednesday to Saturday. Would some time on Monday or Tuesday be convenient for you?

In checking over the motion picture footage which might be of use in showing the Valley as it was in the past I discover that a good deal of what appears to be some of the best material in this category is in color. I know so little about television that I have no idea whether or not this color film can be used in black and white transmission. Before sending any of the film to you to look over I would like to know if you can use that which is in color.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

In your oral remarks on your "See It Now" program of Sunday, November 23, 1952, in connection with a telecast of a portion of the Board of Education meeting held Thursday evening, November 13th at Harrison High School, Harrison, New York, you made some comments which are contrary to the facts. I am sure that these comments were unintentional on your part but, nevertheless, they were misleading and unfair.

I am convinced that in the interest of accurate, unbiased and factual reporting, you will want to correct anything which yousaid which was in error. Let me analyze the statements you made in the light of the facts. You stated that the parlimentary procedure at the beginning of the meeting when the Board discussed part of the loyalty oath was peculiar, or words to that effect, implying that the Board passed the motion re the loyalty oath that evening prior to the discussion and you implied further that there was something strange and odd about the whole procedure.

Actually, the Board resolution regarding the loyalty oath was passed at the regular monthly meeting of the Board of Education held on October 9, 1952. The Board of Education meeting on November 13th was not a public hearing, it was the regular monthly meeting of the Board of Education held the second Thursday of every month in accordance with the By-laws of the Board of Education. At this regular meeting held on November 13th, the Board of Education merely clarified the intention of that part of the resolution passed on October 9th which referred to the use of school facilities by outside organizations. Since the agenda for each regular meeting is prescribed by the By-laws of the Board of Education, the regular order of business would have called for those desiring to address the Board to wait until after the regular business meeting of the Board had been transacted. Thus, following the regular procedure would have delayed for an hour to two hours those present desiring to speak on the loyalty oath. In order to be as fair as possible and not compel those present to sit through the regular proceedings of the Board, the Board decided to waive for the evening the regular agenda and call on those desiring to express their reactions to the loyalty oath.

I believe you will agree that the television audience needs to be informed that the original resolution re the loyalty oath was passed on October 9th and not November 13th and that what took place on the part of the Board of Education at its regular meeting of November 13th was a clarification of their original resolution of October 9th, in order that there be no doubt as to what the Board of Education had in mind when they passed the original resolution. The implication of what you had to say about the peculiar action of the Board of Education at the beginning of the meeting would leave the impression with those who tuned in on your program that the Board of Education had done something shady and unfair. Naturally we were disturbed by this part of your statement.

I am calling these facts to your attention because I am sure you will want to correct the unfair impression you gave.

Sincerely,

Joseph A. Vassallo

October 8, 1953

1. Ever since "See It Now" began its new time, we have been faced with a new problem -- THE KIDS -- The children no longer get to see our show, and this is reflected in the mail and in so many requests from schools that we can't even keep up with them. One of the most satisfying things about "See It Now" for its first two years was the impact it had on kids between the ages of eight and sixteen. They can't stay up till ten-thirty.

2. Friendly and Murrow both think we ought to do something about this. We ask you to consider the possibility of doing a special "See It Now" on say Wednesday or Thursday morning, beamed specifically for classrooms throughout the country. This would be a sort of special "CBS School on the Air," and we might even work out some kind of a mimeographed question form that the classes could use. It would be most unfortunate, for example, if our piece on India for last Tuesday night could not get to the youth of the country.

3. We both hope this previous plan is possible. If it is not, then we submit that it is time that we did something about the secondary rights to our material. The "March of Time," now out of business, is still making money by syndicating its old films, while we, with current films superbly shot and well edited, do nothing with them.

We await the opportunity of discussing this project more fully.

Dear Ed:

Merrill Panitt kindly sent me on your letter of October 7th, regarding our editorial in the October 9th, 1953 issue of TV GUIDE.

Have you any comment on the concluding paragraph of that editorial, which I am quoting herewith:

> "It is unfortunate that many youngsters, whose minds are uncluttered by prejudice and misinformation, were denied seeing the Berlin documentary and will not see future SEE IT NOW offerings. In the East, at least, the program has been scheduled at 10:30 P.M. on Tuesdays, a school night. One less comedy or crime show at an earlier hour in the CBS weekly schedule would make room for SEE IT NOW, a program that should be a must for junior high and high school students."

We regard this as a wholesome suggestion and earnestly hope that you share this view.

Walter

Dear Mr. Hall:

I have your letter of February 19. I enjoyed the interview with Mr. Murrow and the opportunity which it afforded me to allow his large audience to see me in my home.

I can assure you that there was no guile in my reference to copper cooking utensils. It was an utterly spontaneous remark, which must at least have served the purpose of proving to your audience that these interviews are unrehearsed.

I shall be glad to put to use the set of Wear-Ever aluminum cooking utensils, which you are kindly sending me. They may wean me away from my use of copper.

I send my thanks to you rather than to the Secretary. After all, he merely answered questions, and I must say appeared to enjoy it, but you permitted us to invade your lovely new home with an uncommon amount of technical gear. If any damage was done, particularly to the new carpet, you will please permit us to compensate you.

The reaction both to your house and the Secretary was universally favorable, and perhaps you will say my thanks to Mr. Dulles. Mrs. Murrow joins me in sending all best wishes to both of you.

P.S. An amusing sidelight, and for your own information, my informants tell me that my sponsors, the Aluminum Company of America, were startled out of their usual complacency when Mr. Dulles spoke of his pleasure in polishing copper pots and pans. It seems copper competes with aluminum in the area of household utensils, a fact of which I was not aware. So if ever you want any aluminum utensils, I'll get them for you wholesale.

Thank you very much for your kind letter and comments on SEE IT NOW. I am delighted to hear of the pupils' response to the program on which Joe Martin and Sam Rayburn appeared. When we get a reaction like that, we begin to feel that we are doing something toward accomplishing the task we have set ourselves.

I, too, am sorry that SEE IT NOW and PERSON TO PERSON will not be shown in Cleveland this season. Unfortunately, there is nothing that I personally can do about this. If the sponsor doesn't purchase the requisite time on the local station, then that station is at liberty to insert whatever program it pleases. It seems to me that in expressing your disappointment to both ALCOA and WEWS, you have already done all that is possible. Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Company
New York, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Murrow:

We are very disappointed that our local Columbia T. V. Station WEWS is not planning to carry your "See It Now" program during the current season. In the past we have made this program required listening for members of our Civics and Social Studies classes. We believed this was justified because of the moral and spiritual values of citizenship which you stress and because of the thought-provoking nature of your program. You would have been thrilled at the pupils' response to the program last season on which Messrs. Martin and Rayburn appeared. "They act like good friends", "They weren't mad at each other" and "They respect the other fellow's ideas even though he is from a different party" were some of the comments in classes I visited after the telecast. You can well imagine the wonderful work the teachers were able to do with this program as a background.

Since 1948 we have maintained that it was not proper for schools to demand TV channels for purely educational stations until we first learned to use fully the many fine programs now appearing on the commercial stations. In fact it was my privilege to advance this viewpoint in a panel discussion at the Convention of the National Association of Secondary School Principals in Los Angeles last February.

We had been looking forward to having again "See It Now" and "Person to Person" as aids in developing good citizenship. We are very disturbed that they will not be shown in the Cleveland area. What can we do to secure these programs on our local station?

Very sincerely,

Gentlemen:

I am very disappointed that our local Columbia TV station will not be carrying your "See It Now" program. We have used it in the past as a homework assignment for our Social Studies classes. Teachers and pupils enjoyed this program. What can we do to secure the return of this program to one of our local stations?

Will the film of the "Berlin" program of September 22nd be available for school use at some time in the future?

Sincerely,

Principal

Gentlemen:

We are very disappointed that you are not planning to carry the Edward Murrow "See It Now" and "Person to Person" program during the current season. In the past we have made "See It Now" required listening for members of our Civics and Social Studies classes. We believed this was justified because of the moral and spiritual values of citizenship which were stressed, and because of the thought-provoking nature of the program. Teachers were able to use this program as a background for some excellent teaching.

Since 1948 we have maintained that it was not proper for the schools to demand TV channels for purely educational stations until we first learned to use fully the many fine programs now appearing on the commercial stations. In fact it was my privilege to advance this viewpoint in a panel discussion at the convention of the National Association of Secondary School Principals in Los Angeles last February. There certainly can be no comparison either in interest and value between "See It Now" and "Adventure of Inspector Hornleigh" or similar English movies.

We had been looking forward to having again "See It Now" as an aid to citizenship developing. We had also anticipated "Person to Person" as another valuable experience for our pupils. We are very disturbed that they will not be shown by your station. What can we do to secure their program on your station?

Very sincerely,

Principal

Dear Miss Jeffrey:

Thank you very much for your letter and the photostats you enclosed. I, too, am sorry that SEE IT NOW is not on the air in Detroit, but unfortunately there is nothing that I personally can do about it. The whole matter rests between the local station, the network, and the agency. All I can do is hope they may eventually work out a solution to the problem.

Thank you for your interest.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I think you might be interested in knowing that a considerable number of people in Detroit are most unhappy that the CBS affiliate here, WJBK-TV, is not carrying SEE IT NOW. You probably have received some mail on this but, since most of the effort to get SEE IT NOW back on the air in Detroit has been directed to the management of WJBK-TV, perhaps you are not aware of the full extent of the SEE IT NOW support.

From personal experience, I know that community leaders in education, parent organizations, human relations, civic and fraternal groups have complained to the station. The station places the major blame for its inability to carry SEE IT NOW on the network stating that "the network programmed SEE IT NOW on local station time." The station also states that they have offered 6:00-6:30 PM on Fridays for a delayed broadcast to the agency but that the agency had turned this availability down.

If there is any advice which you could give those Detroiters who are most eager to see your program back on the air, we would appreciate it greatly.

For your information, I am enclosing photostats of some of the letters which have appeared in the DETROIT FREE PRESS television section for the past three Sundays.

Sincerely,

Mildred Jeffrey

Missing Murrow

To the Editor: Nine nights a week, the kids tie up the TV set with whodunits and war pictures. There's little chance for intelligent viewing or adult entertainment. A week ago, we all enjoyed the Ed Murrow report on Berlin. The children, both teeners, sat through without a single trip to the kitchen. When the program was over, the announcer told us we'd see, See It Now the following week at 10:30 p.m.

Imagine my disgust when instead of Murrow there was a bad film drama. Is all TV programming to built around the tastes of beer buyers? There are so few programs of See It Now caliber, every effort should be made to have it seen locally.

To the Editor: Can't something be done to get Detroit Edward R. Murrow's programs this year? We put up with so much, surely someone will see that we get Murrow. When friends sneer at TV I have heretofore been able to say, "But there's Edward R. Murrow!" Please, ONE intelligent program.

To the Editor: WJBK-TV is doing a great injustice to Detroit viewers by their cancellation of Edward R. Murrow's shows. If there is one worthwhile program on TV it is See It Now. Is there anything that can be done about it?

Dear Captain Johnson:

Thank you for your letter of October 1 and the material you sent with it.

Dear Mr. Friendly:

I enjoyed meeting you yesterday. I'm glad we reached a decision about filming, for television, a regular meeting of the Aaronsburg Story Committee.

As you agreed, you will cover our next meeting to be held Tuesday, February 17th, at 8:00 p.m., in the Salem Lutheran Church at Aaronsburg, Pennsylvania. We'll expect one of your staff reporters on the preceding Friday, February 13th, and have made arrangements for him to stay at the Nittany Lion Inn, State College, Pennsylvania. We'll take care of all of his transportation at State College and Aaronsburg.

You also told me your photographic crew would arrive on Monday, February 16th. I've assumed you will send two men and have made reservations for them at the Nittany Lion. If there will be more, will you please advise me so that I can make the necessary arrangements?

I would also appreciate your letting me know if you are going to take any pictures of Governor Fine and/or Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower both of whom, particularly the Governor, as you know, are active in our program. If you plan this, I would have to know in advance because of their time schedules.

I understand that your filming of our meeting does not necessarily mean you will be able to develop material sufficiently interesting to use on "See It Now."

I have attached transportation possibilities.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I'm perturbed at the turn of events in your proposed televising an Aaronsburg Story Committee meeting. Although I'm at home and do not have our correspondence before me, I think I can recall the sequence of events.

About a year ago I gathered a list of this country's "most distinguished" Americans. Your name, quite properly, appeared thereon. In our several subsequent conversations and in your widespread activities, nothing has occurred which would alter my opinion. You may recall that Governor John S. Fine, for whom I work, sent you (and the rest appearing on this list) a letter telling briefly about the Aaronsburg Story, its history and objectives.

You were gracious enough to answer the Governor and to offer your assistance within the limits, of course, of your time. You also gave me an interview in which we explored the potentials of the Aaronsburg Story. You seemed impressed with the program and aware of its significance. We did not discuss publicity. Both the Governor and the Aaronsburg Story Committee were elated with your opinion of our program.

I made my rounds and interviewed the rest of the distinguished Americans on our list. This past October I learned you were in Harrisburg. I wanted to say "hello" and to let you know a little bit about our progress. We met in the lobby of the Penn Harris Hotel and you mentioned the possibilities of putting our program on "See It Now." The idea sounded interesting to me and you suggested that we "toss around" the idea when I was next in New York.

A few weeks later in your New York office we talked at length. At the conclusion of our conversation, you told me you would make a film of our next meeting, although you naturally could not guarantee that material sufficiently interesting would be developed to make the results attractive enough to present on your show. That, you said, would depend upon what took place at the meeting. You told me to get in touch with Mr. John Aaron to work out details.

ARTHUR H. LEWIS
6605 NORTH 10TH STREET
PHILADELPHIA 26, PA.

I cleared your idea with the Governor and with the Aaronsburg Story Committee. I later met Mr. Aaron in New York and we went over the program. Instead of covering our December meeting he thought it would be better to postpone it until January. This was entirely satisfactory to me. I was to call Mr. Aaron on December 29th. This I did. He told me that because of your Korean trip and your illness it would be more expedient to let the program ride until our February meeting.

I talked to Mr. Aaron again (January 12th or 13th). He told me that you were tied up with the inauguration and that I ought to wait until this was cleared away. Yesterday when I phoned Mr. Aaron he switched the call to Mr. Friendly, whom I do not know but who, I understand, is your co-producer. Mr. Friendly was most courteous. However, his approach was, "What's it all about?" He wanted me to explain everything to him right then on the telephone. I find myself in the untenable position of selling your idea to your colleague. I think you will agree this is hardly fair.

I am unable and, perhaps unwilling, to attempt to promote the Aaronsburg Story over the phone. I suggested talking to Mr. Friendly on Tuesday, January 27th, in his office. I'll be there at 3:00 p.m. In the meantime, Mr. Friendly said he would see you.

Believe me, we all appreciate your interest in our program and are aware of the enormous public relations value of our appearance on your show.

I know your reputation for integrity. I'm therefore at a loss to understand the rapid dissipation of our plans.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We have scheduled the next regular meeting of the Aaronsburg Story Committee for Tuesday, January 6, at 8 P. M. in the Salem Lutheran Church at Aaronsburg.

While I'm quite certain there must be a fair amount of anticipatory excitement within our stolid Pennsylvania Dutchmen, it doesn't show. And from your point of view I guess that's good. They took my announcement of your proposal to televise our meeting with considerable aplomb - perhaps much in the same calm manner in which they are assuming the responsibility of preserving our democracy and the rights of free men even if they have to do the whole job all by themselves.

I'll be in New York from Tuesday, December 9 through Friday, December 12, and if you'd like me to talk to your news man (I think you said his name was Mr. Aaron), I'd be happy to speak with him and try to work out some of the details.

Incidentally, our conference of fifteen experts whom we brought to Aaronsburg last week to determine the practicability of our idea was wonderfully successful. All the sessions were tape recorded and I'll have much of that material available.

If you receive this in time I'd appreciate your letting me know a convenient time for me to get together with Mr. Aaron, providing you think it would be a good idea. If I don't hear from you I'll call Miss McDonough when I get to New York.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The present world situation is a challenge to every one of us. There is today widespread unrest among nations; there is a rising tide of nationalism among those we used to regard as benighted peoples. The past twenty years have seen the resurgence of bigotry, persecution, and intolerance in the world. I could cite an unending series of examples of man's inhumanity to man.

I am sure that all thinking people of good will want to understand these forces and the tragic consequences which can overtake us if we in America do not take aggressive measures to prevent their growth. I am firmly of the opinion only governments can establish the climate for understanding, and that individuals must be given the opportunity to participate in effective action to halt the spread of intolerance. It seems to me that there are wide areas of agreement from which men of various races and creeds can embark on a program of mutual trust and action not only for the benefit of America but also for the better understanding of world problems.

In view of these desirable objectives and because of the great need for common understanding I will appreciate your reading the enclosed draft, which Mr. William S. Paley has suggested I send to you. This outline of a program known as the "Aaronsburg Story", which we will later pursue, is a thrilling attempt to give substance and permanency to an idea carried out two years ago during Pennsylvania Week at Aaronsburg.

In a short time Mr. Arthur H. Lewis will telephone you for an appointment. If you would arrange to see Mr. Lewis and give him your comments and criticism of our contemplated project, I would greatly appreciate it.

With best wishes,

Cordially,

Encl.

FIRST DRAFT OF AARONSBURG STORY PLANS

A stronger America, and a world truly at peace, will become a reality only when there is complete religious understanding and a perfect friendly coordination among peoples of all faiths, beliefs and backgrounds.

While we recognize these concepts as self-evident, most of us give them only lip-service. Basically, they do not exist to the universal point where it can be said that every man is a brother of the next. If they did, there would be little unrest in the world and rare cause for strife in the United States.

Of course there have been efforts made to produce this idealistic condition but the present state of world and national affairs is shocking proof that the attempts have not been of sufficient strength.

There is the United Nations, world peace organization, striving desperately to improve relations among nations with some measure of success. Yet, the negotiations are carried on by diplomatic officialdom, of necessity weighted down by language barriers and protocol. This is an effort from the outside in, but nowhere is there an organization seeking complete peace where the common, average man - the inner core - is trading his thoughts and hopes and ideals with his counterpart from other sections of this great nation and from other lands - the inside working outward.

Leadership for such an organization is needed and it is obvious that this leadership must come from within the United States, whose constitution and bill of rights are dedicated to a series of fundamental freedoms.

On October 23, 1949, in the tiny town of Aaronsburg, Centre County, Pennsylvania, more than 30,000 people gathered to witness a program whose sole aim was to exemplify the ideals of American freedom as expressed in religious understanding among peoples of all faiths and colors. The Aaronsburg message was heard throughout the United States and in many foreign lands and its success was hailed by participants of representative levels of our populations.

This simple, one-day experiment in a gathering of humans to deal with a vital social problem - groping for the keystone of a stronger America and true world peace - has inspired a project which would turn that event into a perpetual program designed to spread those ideals, working toward heightening the dignity of man and toward eventual understanding so that freedom in all of its concepts comes to America and to the world at large.

Why is Pennsylvania chosen and why the tiny town of Aaronsburg?

It will be remembered that William Penn, a Quaker, came to the New World to escape religious persecution in his native England. Spurred by the hope that men of all faiths could live together in harmony, he founded what later became the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, where people then and now worship the God of their choice and pursue their way of life without fear of harm or persecution.

Why Aaronsburg? The town was founded late in the 1700's by Aaron Levy, a Jew who migrated to Philadelphia from Holland for the very same reason as William Penn. He quickly fell into the spirit of this new land of opportunity, when he presented a large tract of land for the erection of the Salem Lutheran Church so that residents of the town named for him, though of a different religious faith, could have a place to worship. He also provided land for a school and a Lutheran cemetery and a gift of pewter communion service still cherished - and in use - by the congregation.

This example - Aaron Levy's unselfish action and the cooperation among peoples of varied faiths to establish a place to worship - led to the presentation of what was to become known as The Aaronsburg Story on that day in 1949, the 150th anniversary of Levy's gift to the Lutherans. There were simple religious and partiotic services, participated in by representatives of every faith and every race. And farmers, laborers, executives, political leaders, the rich and the poor, the young and the aged, rubbed elbows in the day-long migration to Aaronsburg.

Those on the program included such diversified and outstanding leaders as Rabbi Philip Bernstein, United States Mediator Ralph Bunche, General William Donovan, Pakistan Foreign Minister Mohammad Zafrulla Khan, Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter, Rev. Daniel A. Poling, Dr. Abram Sachar, Reverend Frederick Stamm and scores of other prominent clergymen of the various faiths. The theme of the early morning service, three open discussions and a colorful pageant with more than 1,000 men, women and children from this rural area in its cast, stressed America's heritage of religious freedom and understanding as a basic necessity for world peace. Senator James H. Duff, then governor of Pennsylvania who was an active chairman for the program, proclaimed the last Sunday in October as Pennsylvania's Tolerance Day as a result of the program's success. The present governor, John S. Fine, has continued Tolerance Day and has pledged complete support to the ideals of The Aaronsburg Story making available Commonwealth facilities in efforts to perpetuate its message.

A committee composed entirely of residents of Centre County, living within a 30-mile radius of Aaronsburg, handled all the details for The Aaronsburg Story. It is this same group which has conceived and is carrying out the present plans to make Aaronsburg a 365-day-a-year working shrine dedicated to religious and intellectual understanding.

The perpetuation plan includes:

1. A constant series of meetings for seminars on all phases of the humanities with the single purpose of brotherhood for peace and freedom.

2. An educational program enveloping instruction and learning designed to spread light where there is darkness.

3. An annual pageant to present graphically this historical background of America's freedoms and their role in national serenity and world peace.

The meetings, discussion groups, and seminars, both patriotic in theme as well as religious and embracing all of the humanities, would bring together the representatives of the average American - and later on, peoples from other lands - to exchange knowledge, ideas and projects to strengthen freedom and understanding. There would be meetings of selected groups of clergymen from all parts of the nation, a gathering of youth groups, labor leaders and organizations, industrial representatives and so on into every phase of modern living.

The educational program would include the sponsorship of a chair of learning at the Pennsylvania State College and the provision of many scholarships for special study in all religions and races and human relationships so that educated young Americans would be able to spread the ideals of Aaronsburg. The Pennsylvania State College was selected because of its proximity to Aaronsburg, because of the prominent role it played in the 1949 presentation, and because of its status as a Land Grant College - an institution geared to public service for the average resident of the Commonwealth.

While these projects - the meetings and the educational program - are year-long propositions, it is planned, too, to add a summer presentation of an historical pageant displaying with all the color and imagination of the original effort the story of American freedoms in the graphic manner which often-times is grasped more clearly than are other methods of telling a story, supplementing the academic approach with a visual appeal to the grand masses of people through dramatic representation.

The Aaronsburg perpetuation project is an ambitious one, requiring considerable funds and inestimable planning and plain hard work. Motivated solely by the tremendous objective of creating a better nation and world, all members of the committee are contributing freely of their time and skills and efforts. All faiths are working together on the committee, spurred by the encouragement offered by those who participated in the 1949 Aaronsburg Story, by the hundreds of messages received from parts of the world, and by the realization that here exists an opportunity for a group of average Americans to put into active practice the ideals that all men are equal, that a man is worthy of all the dignities that should be accorded to man regardless of his religious or racial background; that here is a chance to launch "intellectual atomic bombs" to bring about a world truly at peace under the leadership of an America untorn by differences of any origin.

I'm sold on it.

Dear Ed:

I am writing to you once more about a subject previously discussed.

This year we will be celebrating our fifth year of "Lp", and I again wonder if you cannot do a similar show for records as you did for the Sam Goldwyn filming of "Hans Christian Andersen".

I still feel that recordings would make an ideal television story and, as I indicated earlier, "I Can Hear It Now" could certainly play a prominent part.

Please give this top echelon consideration (even if it means getting an O.K. from Thomas Edison himself).

All best.

Thank you for your letter of October 16th addressed to Mr. Murrow. I fear it was somewhat delayed in reaching us since it was sent in care of the National Broadcasting Company instead of CBS.

Dear Sir:

I am writing to you on behalf of the Debate Council of Brooklyn College. On March 12 and 13, 1954, Brooklyn College will hold its Seventh Annual Invitational Forensic Tournament in which student representatives of all the major eastern colleges will debate the topic "Resolved That The United States should adopt a policy of free trade".

We of the Debate Council feel that as a general rule the realities of American campus life are not always portrayed with scrutiny by writers and newspapers. Particular attention seems to be directed towards sensational aspects of student behavior. For example, the Yale "Survey on College Drinking" received great national publicity in the public press. Likewise the recent unfortunate murder on a mid-western college campus of a young woman was featured in all papers.

Our annual debate tournament will reflect an accurate picture of the attitudes and values of today's more serious collegians. We would appreciate an opportunity to discuss with you the possibility of an appearance on your program, "See it Now", of debaters from all the major eastern colleges attending the tournament. We believe that a recorded visit on your program would offer the country a view into this aspect of college life.

If you feel that this opportunity can be afforded us, we would be very grateful to you.

Respectfully yours,

Marcia Sandra Marker

Dear Ed:

For your sake, I am glad you have changed the time of "See It Now", because I assume it gives you a decent week-end. But it comes too late for this commuter, so I have to depend on Jack Gould.

I was delighted with what he said Sunday about your Radulovich broadcast. I have always had the suspicion that courage paid off and I am glad you're around to keep my optimism alive.

Before the early train blacked you out in Wilton, I caught that superior Berlin broadcast and Nehru's magnificent face the following week. That was a fine thing you did at the end of the Nehru broadcast on Reuter. I don't think I shall ever forget Reuter's comment on Churchill: "All his life he has been a man of imagination". I loved the way he pronounced the last word.

If you can spare a lunch hour from your many civic obligations, I should like to oblige.

Lord Bilsland of Kinrara has been called "Mr. Scotland." He is to be in New York during the first week in November.

You may know Bilsland already. If not, I earnestly suggest that you allow me to bring him to see you. He is the great force behind Scotland's efforts to raise herself by her own bootstraps.

The idea in the back of my mind is that you might be persuaded to record this dramatic Scottish renaissance on one of your programs.

I have found that most people in the United States are emotionally well-disposed towards Scotland - a democratic country inhabited by sturdy citizens. And a very picturesque country.

The enclosed brochure SCOTLAND TODAY may suggest some angles to you.

I would love to have you as my guest at the luncheon which we are giving for Lord Bilsland on November 4th but you might prefer a private meeting in your office. - CBS Board

Dear Mr. Murrow:

This is merely a follow-up of a letter I sent you a week or so ago, relative to the possibility of your making an appearance here for our salute to the "Flood Fighters of 1952".

I talked to Harry Burke, Manager of the CBS outlet, Station KFAB here in Omaha, and Harry told me he had talked with you and that if at all possible you would try to put in an appearance here on the 14th of April.

If it would be impossible for you to be here in person, would it be possible for you to make a short film, greeting those in attendance and then introducing the "See It Now" telecast you had on TV during the flood - followed by a short film with a few brief remarks at the close?

My idea of the thing and I sincerely hope it will meet with your approval "provided you are unable to be here in person" would be to have our Commander, Ephraim Marks, introduce you as the gentleman who gave us considerable publicity for the work we did during the flood.....and now through the medium of motion pictures we give you, Edward R. Murrow; the lights in our main dining room will be turned down.....and we would flash the short of your introduction, your film "See It NOW" - with a few appropriate remarks from you at the close. However, these are all details which can be ironed out when we hear from you further.

As I mentioned in my previous letter, this meeting is a salute not only to the flood fighters in Omaha but also the gallant workers to the east, our neighbor, Council Bluffs.

I know you are a very busy man. Any one who does the first class job you do is bound to be busy. However, I would appreciate it sincerely if you would let us hear from you as soon as possible in order that we can start the wheels to move.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

You have received letters from this office in the past as regards possible material for your "See It Now" show. If memory serves me correctly, we exchanged correspondence with Fred Friendly prior to our November Post meeting. At that time, we dedicated our meeting as a Salute to Korean Veterans in this area and flew three men from Korea as guests at this time. Due to previous commitments, neither you nor your staff members found it possible to attend.

Since last a letter was sent in your direction, we have had a Salute to Gold Star Parents, and during the month of February, we had a Salute to the Guardians of Public Safety, at which time our principal speaker was Ned H. Dearborn, President of the National Safety Council.

On the second Tuesday in April (the 14th), our Post meeting will be a tribute to the valiant flood fighters of April, 1952. I know that you devoted considerable time on your "See It Now" program last year to the battle with Big Muddy.

We were wondering if it would be possible for you to be our guest on the 14th of April when we are going to salute the 30,000 men and women from both sides of the river who accomplished what seemed at the outset an impossible task.

We would appreciate hearing from you at your earliest convenience, so that we can advance our plans accordingly.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

One of our staff members saw a portion of what he thinks was called "The Shreveport Story" telecast by you on a Sunday in the early part of last June. He reports that from the part he saw, it was a compelling documentary on local conditions and local interracial organizations to tackle the problems outlined. Was this on film and, if so, is there any way our Association could secure prints and permission to use it? I have a vast ignorance on the technical side of television and perhaps my question about use is wholly out of place, but your answer can set me straight.

Walter White is on vacation but is due back in the office September 8 or 9. Henry L. Moon, our Director of Public Relations, is not due back until about mid-September. July 23, 1954

As you know, I have been working for some time on the sale of so-called 16mm rights to SEE IT NOW films. I have talked with a number of organizations in the business of selling or renting films to schools, libraries, community organizations and the like, and I have also attempted -- through Art Duram at the agency -- to determine Alcoa's interest in obtaining the right to distribute such films in its own behalf. Insofar as Alcoa is concerned, I just haven't been able to get a definite answer of any kind, but so much time has elapsed since I first undertook to ascertain their interest that I think we had better assume that they are not going to undertake the project. The McGraw-Hill people seem to me to be our best prospect otherwise. They have been in the business for some time, seem to have a well-organized distribution setup and seem to me to be decent and responsible people. Edward Booher, the vice president involved, estimates that during the first year the twenty-five subjects of widest interest would gross about $100,000 and that they would gross another $75,000 during the first year from other subjects. The second year's gross, he thinks, would run at about the same $175,000 level, and that after two or three years the annual gross would run at about $250,000.

Booher reports that their sales of MARCH OF TIME films (of which there was a fixed quantity, many of them dated) ran at about $100,000 for the first year and $80,000 for the second year. They are now in the third year and believe its sales will approximate $40,000.

McGraw-Hill offers a royalty fee of 25% of the gross if we bear the editing and matching of negatives costs, and 20% if they bear these costs. I think it is very much better to have them handle the whole job and believe it possible that they will agree to do so with a 25% royalty.

If we can get them to that figure I think we should make a deal with them. We might be able to find some other concern which would pay a higher royalty rate, but I believe that McGraw-Hill has better distribution facilities and that your annual income from this source would be greater. There is also the fact that McGraw-Hill is a long-established, respected organization. What do you think?

I assume that we would make a deal through a corporation which would be owned by you and Fred and your and his nominees. The same corporation could handle Mid-Atlantic Parliament. Would the Carl Sandburg album come under the same umbrella?

I think I should remind you that we made an oral deal with CBS Television some months ago under which they agreed that you could use the SEE IT NOW films (which they own -- as physical property) in return for their right to use footage from SEE IT NOW films as background material in their syndicated film service. Sig Mickelson and Spence Harrison said that if you would like it that way, CTD would be willing to pay you 25% of its revenue from the use of such footage in return for CTD receiving 25% of your revenue from the sale of 16mm rights. I think that this would be both unduly complicated and unremunerative to you. Do you agree?

I am sending along an extra copy of this memo and an addressed envelope so that you may endorse your comments thereon and return it to me.

April 6th program did not appear in any market which had not previously carried your broadcast of March 9.

You will note that only Lake Charles, La. chose to carry your broadcast but would not avail themselves of our offer to provide the McCarthy appearance on April 26. Additionally, Cleveland, as the list indicates, carried the first program of March 9 on a kine basis but by April 6 it arranged for a permanent live clearance of SEE IT NOW. This is for the "See It Now" Williamsburg piece of last June which we sold to the Williamsburg people for five thousand dollars. The film was delivered months ago, and this is just a formality. It seems to be in order to my untrained legal eyes.

Under no circumstances should SEE IT NOW pay the attached bill. This is a legitimate charge against the 7:45 program. There is a budget for it. Suggest you ask Mr. Seward to cut straighten.

This is a bill for twelve hundred dollars for Charlie Collingwood's services on the 7:45 while you were in Korea the week of December 21st. This is my year not to get into policy fights, and I don't want to fight this or agree to it without seeking your counsel first. I know you feel that you originate the 7:45 from Korea, but if you would like to compromise on this, I think we can stand to pay one-half the cost; however, I won't okay it until I hear from you.

Dear Ed:

Your NATO story was magnifique, just as your Turks were magnificent.

Since Pakistan, in my opinion, shows promise of being even more than a second Turkey, I wonder how soon you may assign the McClure-Wershba and Co. to do that long-awaited story on Pakistan, our stout-hearted pillar of strength in South Asia.

I am only 50 minutes from your still unsullied citadel on the 17th floor, if you will but give me a ring for a possible story conference.

Because this story is a little off the beaten track, we hope it will interest you, not only from a news angle but also as a possible feature on one of your programs. We have loads of human interest material, case stories, etc., with which to clothe the statistics.

FOR RELEASE: Monday, June 7, 1954

Residents of 10,312 American communities and 95 foreign countries who found themselves away from home and in need of assistance turned up at Travelers Aid desks across the nation during the past year, it was announced yesterday (Sunday, June 6) by the National Travelers Aid Association, 425 Fourth Avenue, New York.

These figures grew out of a "Home Town Study," conducted by the association, which pinpointed the home towns of a group of 1,443,000 persons who utilized Travelers Aid services during the period from April 1, 1953 to March 31, 1954. The association coordinates the work of 109 Travelers Aid organizations and 969 cooperating representatives in providing a nationwide chain of service for people in trouble away from home -- travelers, migrants, runaways, service personnel, newcomers, etc.

According to Laurin Hyde, general director of the National Travelers Aid Association, who made the study's findings public (see Summary attached) the group of nearly one and one-half million represented the "normal" Travelers Aid caseload. Not included were the approximately 600,000 military personnel who received special assistance in 16 Armed Forces Lounges throughout the country which are operated by Travelers Aid and financed by USO. The aggregate figure for persons served by Travelers Aid in 1953 was 2,117,000.

More Pennsylvanians than live in Johnstown, more Californians than live in Pasadena, more Floridians than live in Daytona Beach, and more Kansans than live in Atchison stopped at the sign of the blue-and-white Travelers Aid lamp in railroad terminals, bus depots and airports during the 12-month period in search of information, assistance and guidance. They came from 10,312 U.S. localities, ranging from Abbott Village, Me., to Zillali, Wash., from Ada, Minn., to Zwolle, La.

The purpose of the study, Mr. Hyde said yesterday, was to demonstrate "not only the scope but also the depth" of Travelers Aid services. "We did not need a study to tell us that ours is a nation of moving people," he continued, "but we did want to dramatize the unique reciprocal nature of Travelers Aid operations. At the same time that a city supports a Travelers Aid Society to take care of the strangers entering its gates, Travelers Aid elsewhere is giving service to that city's own residents who may be in trouble away from home."

The study produced some surprises, Mr. Hyde pointed out. For example, such major urban centers as Cleveland, Chattanooga, Seattle, Pittsburgh and Miami stood out as having a larger number of residents being helped away from home than the total number of strangers helped by each town's local Travelers Aid Society. A total of 27 major communities fell in this category.

Every one of the 48 states, the District of Columbia, and practically all of the 3,060 counties in the U.S. contributed to the grand total. The largest group from any one state came from California; 122,570 Californians asked for help from Travelers Aid groups throughout the country. New York was second with 119,060, followed by Illinois (70,530), Ohio (70,020), and Pennsylvania (67,460). At the end of the scale, Nevada had the smallest total -- 1,840, closely seconded by Vermont (2,560), and Wyoming (2,860).

State totals for the most part closely paralleled population figures, with several significant exceptions, the study shows. The District of Columbia ranks 36th in population by states, but it was 19th in Travelers Aid service with 26,390 claiming Washington as their home town. On the other hand, New Jersey, 8th most populous state, was 18th in number of persons aided. Wisconsin also showed considerably less of its citizens asking for help away from home than its size would indicate. Next to the Federal District, Oregon had proportionately the largest number of people seeking assistance in relation to its size.

Foreign travelers assisted by Travelers Aid Societies numbered 90,530. They came from 95 countries in all major geographic areas, including such far-off and exotic locations as Kenya and Ethiopia in Africa; the Marshall Islands, scene of H-bomb tests; Malta in the Mediterranean; the Azores, Portugese possession in the South Atlantic; and Okinawa.

While most of the persons seeking Travelers Aid help had simple requests for information or direction, approximately 227,000, or 15 percent of the total, represented people with more complex difficulties requiring the service of professionally trained caseworkers. Among the types of service for this group are helping newcomers make the difficult readjustment to a strange town; assisting children, aged or handicapped traveling alone across the country; helping emotionally disturbed people recognize the futility of meaningless flight; and working toward resolving the conflicts of runaways of all ages.

The study was made by 102 member Societies and seven specially constituted units of the Travelers Aid chain. For four two-week periods, one in each quarter, a record was kept of the point of origin of each person receiving service at Travelers Aid booths throughout the country. These raw statistics were then weighted for seasonal and other variations and projected on a full-year basis.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow

New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

After listening to your program this evening, I wonder if you might answer a question for me.

Your commentary on the Supreme Court decision concerning segregation was good. However, my question is why you nor any other commentators have not gone further into the real point envolved.

Too many people in this country and in the other countries of the world have an impression that the South is backward in the matter of racial treatment, and that the reason is a carry over from the War Between The States.

You have failed to understand that the basic question as far as the South is concerned is a matter of States' Rights. My question is; how has the decision of the Supreme Court effected the sovereign rights of the individual states. Education is basically a matter for each state to handle as best fits the state. Cannot the danger of centralization of power far overshadow the threats to our country that are now in the headlines? Has our Federal government overstepped its bounds when it moves into the right of a state to run the education of its citizens in a system that is just to all concerned. I cannot feel that the matter of segregation has anything to do with the quality of the education now being received by the citizens of my state nor any other state. I do feel that the court decision is the result of political planning and a line of thought to increase the power of the federal government, not all at once, but over a long peroid of time.

I am interested in the well-fair of my state and my country, and would appreciate an opinion from someone in such a position as you.

With best wishes and kindest regards, I am:

Very truly yours:

and Black does not represent the opinions of the entire student body. He is right. If our editorial page—written by a mere handful of students—attempted to reflect the opinions of everybody it would be a mumbo-jumbo of conflict and contradictions.

"We believe that the students and alumni of the University, while they may not always agree with us on all points, want and need a campus newspaper uninhibited by the slime of state political entanglements. . . .

"Mr. Harris has given us two choices —to stand up for what we believe and lose our voice, or to acquiesce and lose face. We choose the first course. If we yield without a word of protest we commit not only ourselves but all future staffs to a quisling position."

MODEL SENATE

University of California students hold monthly sessions of a Model Senate.

THE PURPOSE of the Model Senate at the University of California is to stimulate party loyalty, to provide a forum for the expression of student views on current national issues, and to learn about the procedures of the U.S. Senate on which it is patterned.

The Senate convenes once each month. The "senators" are selected by the Democratic and Republican party caucuses in the current ratio of the U.S. Senate. Any student may join the caucus of his choice. The project is sponsored by the University YMCA and YWCA in cooperation with the university's Political Science Department. It has a distinguished group of consultants in the community. The headquarters for the party caucuses alternate between the YMCA and YWCA office each month. The invitation to participate in the Senate reads in part:

"Join the Republican or Democratic caucus, whichever you prefer. These caucuses will send members to the monthly Senate meetings to support their respective platforms. Student Senators will debate and vote on real bills concerning national and international issues according to rules and procedures patterned after those of the national Senate. Party representation in the Model Senate will conform to that in Washington. Bi-partisan committees will be organized, as needed, to prepare legislation for debates. . . . You may assume the role of a Senator in defending your caucus' point of view on Tidelands Oil, FEPC, Korea Policy or other timely issues. Subjects for debate will parallel major questions of public policy under discussion in Washington."

MURROW PROTECTS CIVIL LIBERTIES

Twice in recent months Edward R. Murrow has thrown the spotlight of his TV Show, "See It Now" on situations where civil liberties were being threatened.

FIRST-LIEUTENANT MILO J. RADULOVICH wished to continue in the U.S. Air Force Reserve but was advised to resign because he was considered a "security risk." When Lieutenant Radulovich refused to resign with his reputation in question, he was dismissed from the service. Mr. Murrow devoted an entire program to the background of this case, showing the opinions of Lieutenant Radulovich's family, friends and neighbors. He announced that similar TV time was available for the Air Force to state its side of the case. The decision of the administrative board of the Air Force was later reversed by Harold E. Talbott, Secretary of the Air Force. Lieutenant Radulovich is now a member in good standing of the Air Force Reserve.

THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION was organizing a chapter in Indianapolis, Indiana. Permission to hold the meeting in the World War Memorial Building was canceled when the American Legion protested, saying that the principal function of the ACLU was to defend communists. The committee then tried to rent various other auditoriums in hotels, the city YMCA, and the Knights of Columbus Hall, but was refused for various reasons. The Reverend Victor L. Goosens, pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, invited the ACLU to meet in a church building. Edward R. Murrow devoted a full evening program to this incident. He showed the committee seeking a hall and then showed excerpts of the ACLU meeting, alternating with excerpts of an American Legion meeting held simultaneously.

CONGRATULATIONS TO MR. MURROW for his courage in calling public attention to these issues, and to the Aluminum Company of America which sponsors Mr. Murrow in "See It Now" on Tuesday evenings at 10:30 EST.

ORCHIDS FOR A BRAVE LADY

The University of Hawaii YWCA alerted other CA's concerning threats to Portland home-owner who refused to evict her Hawaiian tenants.

HONOLULU NEWSPAPERS carried a story about the threats that came to Mrs. A. V. Clure of Portland, Oregon, because she refused to evict eleven Hawaiian tenants from her apartment house. Strange people called in person and by phone telling her to evict the tenants or take the consequences. One man threatened death.

When members of the YWCA cabinet at the University of Hawaii saw the newspaper account they wrote letters to Mrs. Clure, to the Mayor of Portland, and to newspapers of that city. They wrote also to YMCA's and YWCA's on the West Coast and to the National YWCA, asking them to write letters to responsible persons in Portland.

The City Council of Portland cabled an apology to the Honolulu Board of Supervisors when it learned that the Hawaiian city government planned to lodge a formal protest on behalf of the Hawaiian residents. A Honolulu radio station signified Hawaii's acceptance of the apology by sending 3000 orchids to Portland for Mrs. Clure and for distribution in the hospitals of Portland.

Major channels for accurate and up-to-date information are books, newspapers, magazines and newsletters, radio and TV, and organizations. Drawing on these sources, Ernest W. Lefever has compiled an admirable guide to information on international affairs. (Christian Ethics and U.S. Foreign Policy, an Annotated Reading List and Guide to Current Information. At 35 cents, from National Counicl of Churches, New York 10.

• BOOKS—The Christian Association might help its members choose the few books they can take the time to read.

• NEWSPAPERS—Everyone should read regularly at least one good newspaper. When Edward L. Bernays conducted a poll of 213 newspaper publishers, they listed these as the ten top newspapers: The New York Times; St. Louis Post-Dispatch; Christian Science Monitor; Louisville Courier Journal; Kansas City Star; New York Herald-Tribune; Chicago Daily News; Washington Post; Baltimore Sun; and Milwaukee Journal.

• RADIO AND TV COMMENTATORS—Mr. Lefever lists the following outstanding news commentators, recipients of both the Peabody Award and the Overseas Press Club grant:

American Broadcasting Company (ABC)—Martin Agronsky, Erwin Canham, Elmer Davis.

Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS)—Bill Costello, Charles Collingwood, Bill Downs, Don Hollenbeck, Larry Leseur, Edward R. Murrow, David Schoenbrun, Eric Sevareid, Howard K. Smith.

Mutual Broadcasting System—Cecil Brown.

National Broadcasting Company (NBC)—Henry Cassidy, W. W. Chaplin, Merrill Muller.

• ORGANIZATIONS—A number of national organizations play a significant part in the preservation and development of American life. Among the organizations to which students should be introduced are: The American Association of the United Nations, American Association of University Women, American Civil Liberties Union, Christian Action, Foreign Policy Association, League of Women Voters, League for Industrial Democracy, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, The Urban League. They should also know of the work of the National Council of Churches, and the movements for social action within their denominations.

7. Every criminal however bad is entitled to the help of counsel in his defense.

My dear Mr. Murrow:

I am enclosing copy of a letter sent to Mr. Charles M. Fales, President of the Firemen's Association of New York, regarding the historic fire engine we are trying to have returned to George Washington's Fire Engine Company. I feel the evidence you presented will help to effect the return of this equipment.

I do want to say that I have received letters from all over the country - North, South, East and West - and everyone believes that your testimony proved that the engine in question actually belongs to Alexandria. I have also received wonderful comments about your "You See It Now" program, and I have also heard numerous individuals say it was one of the best they have ever seen.

In the very near future I shall be most pleased to forward a certificate naming you an honorary member of the Friendship Veterans Fire Engine Company.

Dear Mr. Fales:

I have not received any official statement from your investigating committee regarding the fire engine which I have been trying to obtain for the City of Alexandria, and which is presently in the Firemen's Museum at Hudson, New York. I have been made aware through the press, and from Mr. Edward R. Murrow's "You See It Now" program, televised on Tuesday, January 19, that the Board stated it could not discover any evidence that this engine came from Alexandria. As you know, it was captured by the New York Zouaves in 1861.

I feel that many, many citizens, no doubt millions throughout the country, after seeing the evidence produced by Mr. Murrow that the engine No. 289, which is listed in a catalog in the museum stating this equipment originally came from Alexandria, Virginia, are convinced that this fire engine was captured from this City during the Civil War. I certainly feel the record in the catalog is authentic. I have also proven to you by a certified statement, submitted by The Alexandria Gazette, quoting from that paper dated May 25, 1861, that a regiment of New York Zouaves, under the command of a Colonel Ellsworth, had arrived in Alexandria. This, undoubtedly, proves that the Zouaves were here; and with the record in your museum stating the engine did come from Alexandria, I feel it is rightfully ours. Also, The Home Insurance Company of New York, publishers of the book "Engine!-Engine!" verifies this, stating that the records are authentic.

On behalf of the Friendship Veterans Fire Engine Company, which was organized by General George Washington in 1774, we would like for you to call a meeting as soon as possible to review the evidence brought forward on Mr. Murrow's CBS program, and which all of us feel is correct.

It is my hope that the Firemen's Association of the State of New York will see fit to return this historic piece of equipment to its original home as a gesture of good will.

Sincerely yours,

Marshall J. Beverley
Mayor

P.S. Iam not trying to start another "War between the States" but feel that the engine belongs to Alex.Va. Also enclosed is a copy of the Wash.Star a story giving facts from history about the New York Zouaves being in Wash. and Alex. and how they turned the cities upside down and called those devilish fellows.

Dear Mr. Stanton:

Last Tuesday on Mr. Edward R. Murrow's program, SEE IT NOW, the public was made aware of the Armed Forces Information and Education program. A thoughtful member of your staff alerted us that this program would be shown, and as a result most of us here at the Armed Forces Information School stood by to witness same. Since part of the program was filmed here at Fort Slocum, we naturally had an added interest.

I am happy to know that CBS could give the public an understanding of this all-important subject as well as present to the public some of the things we are doing in the Armed Forces in regard to Information and Education. The presentation was excellent.

On behalf of myself and the staff and faculty of the Armed Forces Information School, Fort Slocum, New York, I want to express our sincere appreciation to you and Mr. Murrow for your able assistance.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I have purposely waited until now to write you because I wanted general comments from the field to come in on your excellent SEE IT NOW TV broadcast of Tuesday, November 16th. Now, I am writing not only my appreciation but also the thanks of all the men and women of the Air Defense Command for the efforts of yourself and your staff to gain for us a national understanding and acceptance of the jet and its noises of operation.

All of us have been greatly concerned that something so personal and natural as a man's concern for the security of his family, home, and country should have become so perverted in the public mind as to be considered a community nuisance and an individual burden unnecessary to be borne.

Your program was therefore invaluable to us in the air defense system because it showed that the Air Force may unwittingly increase its problems by not sharing them.

That bell ringing presentation of yours, which summed up all these things so admirably, pointed out the failures of the Air Force and the community alike; illustrated what is possible when they get together and work as one, and could not have come at a better time to advance the public appreciation of how real, personal, and demanding the air defense of this country has become -- as well as what it takes from everyone to have that air defense.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow 29 Nov 54

May I express to you my appreciation for the opportunity given me of presenting my views in the controversy arising out of the actions of the Norwalk, Conn. Post. It was a thrilling experience and I am especially indebted to your assistants who aided me in the presentation.

I could not help but reflect as I was listening to myself speak, realizing as I did that my words were being listened to by millions of people, on the early days when I spoke against communism - which was in the latter months of 1919 and the early 1920's - at which time we were lucky if we had an audience of more than twenty-five people and I am sure that if we had the mediums that exist today, radio, television, etc. at that time, the cancerous growth of communism would have been halted and the movement would never have grown to the proportions that it assumes today.

May I say in conclusion that for many years I have been one of your appreciative listeners and I am certainly happy that I had the opportunity to have been associated in this broadcast with a man of your caliber.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am one of the millions who enjoy your objective reporting via TV and am appreciative of your contribution to clearer thinking through factual information. I recently returned from three and a half years in Europe from Athens to Oslo where I participated in the little known Labor Information program of ECA, where we found trade unionists hungry for information on American labor's share in democracy and for reasons to be opposed to communism. But that is another story.

I am writing you to suggest a project by you on the "wetback" situation in California. This subject has many facets: the need of California's major industry--agriculture--for stoop labor; the opportunity of better pay it affords the underprivileged Mexican; the 416,000 (correct) who are deported annually because of illegal entry; the exploitation possibilities by labor contractors; the birth of their children in this country automatically giving them constitutional citizenship; the drain on California's Aid to Needy Children program and county welfare funds; the by-product of marijuana importation; the open door for potential enemy saboteurs lost in the shuffle of the invasion of workers.

Leading the campaign for a greater public awareness of this situation is Attorney General Edmund G. Brown who will make himself available for you if you would consider this project. It's a complex one that lends itself to your media.

If you are interested just make your plans and let us know what we can do to help you.

Sincerely yours,

Pat Frayne

REALISTIC CONTROL OF 'WETBACKS' IS NEEDED TO PREVENT ENEMY AGENTS FROM ENTERING

If more than 416,000 "wetback" Mexicans can enter our State annually and seep into the far north, working openly in California fields and orchards, there is no doubt in that representatives of unfriendly nations can use the same methods of infiltration.

The danger to our national security is apparent if we condone the entry of illegal labor, if within their ranks there is the possibility that agents of unfriendly powers can also find cover. An iron curtain is not proposed between Mexico and the United States, but a realistic control of those entering this country.

It may not be solely a personal economic enterprise on the part of narcotic peddlers to flood our country with a new moral disease, far more devastating than germ warfare. This might easily be a political technique, used before in our recent war history, to break down the moral fibre of a nation.

Beyond this is the possibility of havoc which can be perpetrated on our many avenues of communication, if we were to be victims of a surprise attack by an enemy power. The presence of enemy agents, not so highly visible as the field workers from Mexico, is a far greater threat. Our railroads, our telephone lines, our radio and television communications, our press, our waterways and our highways could be sabotaged by the presence of enemy agents.

(Edmund G. Brown, Attorney General)

EDMUND G. BROWN

S.F.Bar Association
Sept. 15,1953

A multitude of crimes are hidden under the term "wetbacks" -- illegally imported Mexican labor.

What appears to be an economic problem of getting "stoop labor" to handle the year around harvests, has grown into a grave social problem, involving murder, prostitution, robbery and a gigantic illegal narcotic infiltration.

When one realizes that an average of more than 1,000 Mexicans are slipped into this country illegally, and that 416,000 "wetbacks" were returned to Mexico in the fiscal year of 1952-53, by our Immigration Service, it can readily be seen that we have all the ills and evils of an illegal underground and underworld operation.

It is obvious that smuggling human beings across a border is a more cumbersome job than the smuggling of marijuana, heroin, morphine, opium and knives. It is obvious that those who defy one law -- as brazenly as our immigration law is being defied -- wouldn't hesitate to violate any other law. As a result, California is being victimized by compounded felonies. The reports of our State Department of Justice and the activities of our State Narcotic Enforcement officers disclose a startling increase in narcotic smuggling and use of narcotics.

Last year there were six brutal murders of "wetbacks" in San Diego County alone, the bodies being found in obscure places near the border. It is assumed they were killed for the money they had saved and were returning with to their home villages. Arrested "wetbacks" have been found to be carrying as much as $1000, with average "wetback" bankroll being between $200 and $300. Many of them get what is known as the Mexican standoff -- your money or your life -- and are rolled for their money alone if they don't put up a fight. Even many of those who get back to their home country are victims of robbery.

Those who deal in the smuggling of "wetbacks" are labor contractors who get a take from both sides of the border. The charge for smuggling a "wetback" into the United States is $100 to $125 a head, while ranchers on the American side of the border pay the contractor $25 a head for the labor. The contractor also sets up the so-called housing and the feeding for the "wetbacks" for which the "wetback" pays heavily.

The wages paid fluctuate, although the California State Federation of Labor's investigators contend some "wetbacks" are paid as little as 20 cents an hour.

Pimps and procurers set themselves up in business with a handful of prostitutes, using their automobiles, hidden in wooden places, as brothels. Marijuana and other narcotics go hand in hand with these illicit communities, and expand their operations into other communities.

This malignant growth is a threat to our society, and can only be met by recognizing its existence and taking steps toward its eradication. This requires more personnel to effect more control, tighter legislation and swift justice.

SIN
Jackson, Justice

February 8, 1954

Dear Justice Jackson:

Pursuant to our telephone conversation, I should like to give you a brief outline of the proposed program having to do with the work of the Legal Aid Society.

SEE IT NOW expects to do a report on the work done by the Legal Aid Society. The plan is to do most of this in the field with a Legal Aid Society lawyer as he (or she) goes from client to client making sure that everybody gets fair representation. It is our plan, for example, to take one Legal Aid Society lawyer and spend a week with him when he goes to the tombs to consult the client. We would sit in on the sessions. We would do everything involved with the defense of the individuals with the exception of going into the courtroom. It is our hope that in this manner we would be able to see how the Legal Aid Society works and how it insures a fair "day in court" for every American.

At the end of this report, which might conceivably evolve about as many as ten different cases, we would attempt to tie the entire report and the aims and purpose of Legal Aid together by asking you why and how Legal Aid was first conceived, and how it contributes to our democratic form of life. The mechanics of the interview with you would require about two hours of your time. I would hope to sit down in your chambers or your home and chat. A camera would record the entire conversation. It is conceivable that you might be willing to use the opportunity to expand the conversation in one or two directions of similar nature, but this is a problem that we should be able to work out at the time of the interview.

I very much hope that you may see your way clear to undertake this task. There is no urgency about it, and I am sure we could arrange a convenient time and place.

Sincerely yours,

In case it hasn't been called to your attention, your program will have the honor of being the first program to take advantage of two new television cable circuits to Seattle and the Pacific Northwest.

Next Tuesday the Pacific Telephone Company is placing the two new cable circuits in operation, and your show at 7:30 p.m. Pacific Standard Time, See It Now, will be the first show to come in on a second cable. There will also be a third cable, which won't be in use at that time.

The first cable to Seattle was opened up on July 6, 1952, in time for the Republican National Convention that summer. The first program came from a Chicago hotel and from convention headquarters on the Sunday afternoon preceding the opening of the convention, and was telecast on KING-TV, Channel 5, the then only television station in the Pacific Northwest.

The broadcast, I might point out, was from the CBS-TV Network and over a temporary network erected after payment of a special $50,000 one-time fee, which I believe was paid by the network for the sponsor.

I have been TV editor of The Post-Intelligencer since December, 1951, campaigned both for the first cable; and ever since for additional circuits. This is a real developement for the Pacific Northwest, and gives all three national television networks full-time cable service to Seattle.

Hope you can find time to point out that Washington, a television territory, is at last joining the Union as a full-time television state.

Sincerely,

Bill Jahn

Re: "See It Now"

Dear Wayne:

I regret but the problems involved in securing "See It Now" for local coop use are too great for us to overcome at this time. You have my assurance the matter was thoroughly checked by me personally with Mr. Murrow who indicated his approval if other elements involved in such an operation would similarly approve. Other elements include Program Department, Sales Department, client, Legal Department and the operation of a coop arrangement, which, at this time has not been established for TV's here at CBS. For instance, prices would have to be established for your commercial use of this property and contracts would have to be revised to provide for the disbursement of such fees. Further, it is self-evident that an important program such as "See It Now" would be of sufficient interest to many other stations and that the arrangement you suggested would of course have to be made available to our entire affiliate list.

Someday, perhaps soon, a coop department might be considered by CBS but at this time your request must be denied.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I usually do not pay much attention to awards that are given to radio, TV and movie people, but in the case of the Television Academy I would like you to know that I agree with them 100 per cent on their choice for TV personality of 1953. Congratulations!

My little note probably will not mean much to you, but as a newspaperman with The York, Pa. Dispatch until I joined Congressman Stauffer and the "Eisenhower" team in January, 1953 I can appreciate what you are trying to do on your Tuesday night show. You have vision, and that is the most important asset a reporter can have.

I can honestly say ~~that~~ there are few shows that I re-arrange my schedule to witness, but your See It Now is a "must." First I appreciate your presenting both sides of a critical and important issue, no matter whose feet you might trample on, and second, the objective way in which you do it. At the same the show is entertaining.

One subject you might wish to stick your teeth into is that of Puerto Rican labor in United States. Several hundred seasonal workers come into our county alone. But what is happening, not only here, but Illinois, New York, and elsewhere, is that some of the labor will work for one week, move into the bigger cities. I understand Illinois relief rolls are jumping because of the new P.R. labor. I realize they are American citizens, but they must also accept the responsibilities as well.

Off record, for the moment, my chief has asked the Secretary of Labor to give him the full story on these operations. One young girl, only 14, was brought from P.R. to Florida to York as a "maid." It was first thought she was 18. Original reason she was broughto Florida: Immoral. F.B.I. now checking. If interested, advise.

I find that I have become a steady fan of your "See It Now" program. The recent programs concerning Milford, Delaware, Carl Sandburg, and Eldorado, Illinois were all well done. I congratulate you on the fine public service you are rendering through these programs.

All of us in the Department of Labor were especially pleased with your program on Eldorado. Too often people and communities with problems such as those faced by Eldorado tend to look to Washington to solve their problems, often in vain. Your program should inspire other communities to try to help themselves. This is, after all, how America grew strong.

Again, Ed, thanks for the light touch. I'm glad you didn't give way to mirth until the very end -- when laughter was perfectly in order; in fact, the only possible reaction. Managing to keep a straight face until the sign-off is a tribute to your self-control.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your filmed and recorded television broadcast of your interview with Dr. Reuter, late and very great Lord Mayor of Berlin, brought back memories of the first steps in the founding of the Free University of Berlin.

At the time, I was Chief of Education and Cultural Affairs for the Office of Military Government, Berlin District. One drab winter day, early in 1948, two young men came to my office. They announced themselves as the co-editors of Colloquium, a literary magazine produced by students in the University of Berlin. These young men stated that they were under heavy pressure from the Soviet administration because of certain opinions expressed in their publication. After we had discussed this immediate problem, one of the young men literally exploded the suggestion, "Why don't you Americans start a university where the students can be free? We know thousands of students who would like to attend such a university". I told them that we would see what, if anything, could be done. The suggestion was then discussed with Colonel (later General) Frank Howley, who gave me the green light to explore the problem. The western-oriented German political and educational leaders, including Mayor Reuter and Education Commissioner May, were called together for two dinner sessions in the private dining room of the Military District Officers' Club. Colonel Howley pledged them American support for the project. From that point on, the Americans went to work to find the funds and facilities while the German leadership concentrated on faculty and curriculum. The rest of the story you know.

Let me use this opportunity to say how much I appreciate the maturity and excellence of your television programs. They are making a splendid contribution to America's understanding of herself and of the rest of the world.

Very sincerely,

On your interesting "See It Now" program last night, dealing with Hong Kong, there appeared one Percy Chen. I knew Percy Chen for many years in Moscow and have seen him a number of times in the United States subsequent to my leaving Moscow.

Both Eugene Lyons and I would like very much to have a mailing address for Percy Chen if you could supply it to us. Gene would like to send Chen a copy of his latest book, Our Secret Allies - The Peoples of Russia, and I have some materials put out by the American Committee on the anti-Bolshevik struggle which we think Chen ought to know about. We know him well enough to have an understanding of his mentality. Could you give us an address for Chen?

Incidentally, I have some copies in the office of Eugene Lyons' book and could send you one if I knew that you had not already received it. If you have not a copy and would like to have one, and would so indicate, I shall send it right on to you. Our Committee did not support or sponsor this book in any way, but we consider it an admirable statement of the reasons why there has to be a movement for the liberation of the peoples of the Soviet Union.

Kind personal regards.

Dear Art:

One situation which I didn't mention during our telephone conversation last night is a rhubarb on the sale of See It Now to Pontiac. Ed's radio show was renewed (with an expanded station list) by Lincoln-Mercury in the eleven western states just about the time that the deal was being made with Pontiac. The Lincoln-Mercury sponsorship did not appear on our printed schedule and TV - putting special pressure on the See It Now sale on 20th floor instructions - did not realize that there might be a regional network sale and thus did not check.

Inasmuch as Ed does not endorse either product, does not appear in the commercials nor give lead-ins which imply endorsement, there is some chance that both sets of auto dealers will acquiesce, but Tom Dawson and the west coast CBS salesman believes the Lincoln-Mercury people will be very upset. In the light of this, I have written Jack Van and Tom Dawson to suggest that they try to persuade Pontiac to restrict its sponsorship to the 37 eastern states - this in the light of the improbability that Pontiac will buy the Tuesday and Thursday radio shows. See It Now could then be offered for sale to another advertiser in the eleven western states and the continued broadcasting of the radio show in the west would be assured and the Lincoln-Mercury sponsorship preserved.

Wendell Campbell and Kelly Smith are, of course, familiar with this.

Sincerely,

Jim

With respect to "African Conflict", they will guarantee us a $1,000 return against 50 per cent of the box office receipts and will presumably make similar offers to us with respect to other programs from the SEE IT NOW series which they might select.

I think such an arrangement entirely in order with the understanding that the films would not be edited in any way without your prior approval. If you don't get to this until next week, would you mind telling Paul Rosen how you feel about it?

I would suggest in connection with the final SEE IT NOW show for the spring season on July 5 and with regard to the return of the show in the fall, that you merely say something to the effect that,

> "and now the team of Friendly and Murrow leave for their summer holiday. We will look forward to seeing you upon our return in the fall."

It seems to me that this is general enough to give us the latitude should the opportunity arise to talk in terms of occasional hour shows, to come back with the weekly half-hour format, or to do such other things as might occur to us meanwhile. I certainly think you should say something about returning in the fall.

While this part of it is certainly up to you, if it were me, I would not make the announcement about this being the final show for ALCOA too completely final because, as I am sure you know, the company still has deep interest in you and the program. There is always the possibility that this fall or at some other time, the relationship between SEE IT NOW and ALCOA might be resumed, if another advertiser hasn't stepped in in the meantime.

I was somewhat disturbed to learn that Paul Niven has apparently been assigned to cover the British elections for SEE IT NOW without prior consultation with the Assignment Desk or with the Director of News.

It has been my understanding that assignments have been operating smoothly and with a minimum of confusion since the assignment machinery actually got into motion. If the facts as I have them are true, however, this is a rather serious violation of the policy as it has been established and agreed to by the various elements involved in drawing on the services of our news correspondents.

The problem now is complicated by the fact that our Washington staff will be very short-handed during the first couple of weeks in May. Since John Day is at Las Vegas for the atom bomb test he has not had an opportunity to consider a detailed plan of operations for the British elections, but I am hopeful he will have an opportunity to do so early next week. I am hoping that the Niven matter can then be dropped into the hopper with the other British election problems.

Dave Schoenbrun has a "studio space" problem in Paris. And I'm afraid he won't get additional space unless a studio would be so valuable to SIN you would be willing to share in the cost.

As you can see from Jim Connors' memo, we have been unable to obtain budget approval for additional space. And there is at least good argument that interviews for news programs could be set up just as well in a hotel room as in a studio.

What is your feeling on the subject?

The following is a report of calls received by TV Network Operations during "See It Now" 2/8 program:

"Received a phone call from a Mr. Tom Macdonald of Foote, Cone, & Belding who claims he handles the "Aunt Jenny" program on CBS Radio and others. He objected vehemently to CBS Television allowing the film portion containing Durante's remark, "They can go to hell". He wanted to know whether or not a disclaimer would air at the close, and if not, he would then permit such language on "his Aunt Jenny" program. Informed him program would stand as is on the merits of Mr. Murrow's and Mr. Friendly's editing. He then asked to talk to Mr. Paley where we left him.

Received 5 callers objecting to the Catholic priest being on the program. The Operators directed these calls to the Information Desk."

At the same time, a number of the Fellows at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences asked if one of the prints might be made available for showing at the Center.

"SEE IT NOW" WITH EDWARD R. MURROW

... the most widely-respected public relations platform available to American business today

CBS TELEVISION NETWORK

June 1955

SEE IT NOW -- edited and produced by Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly -- is the most distinguished public affairs program on the air.

In four years, SEE IT NOW has built a weekly audience of over 7 million people ... it has won every significant award in the television industry ... and it has won the recognition and attention of thought-leaders in industry, education, and government.

The company that speaks from this platform, as the sponsor of SEE IT NOW, gains a unique opportunity to broaden public understanding of its role in American industry.

Both SEE IT NOW and television are firmly established as sound, effective carriers of a public relations message.

Since December 1951, SEE IT NOW has been sponsored by Aluminum Co. of America. In this time it has so effectively accomplished the company's public relations objectives that Alcoa can now direct its attention exclusively to the ultimate consumers of specific aluminum products.

As for television ...

Better than three out of four American homes will be television homes in the fall of 1955. And certainly television reaches virtually every important public relations target -- the more articulate, responsible, and important individuals in every part of the country.

Here, in addition to Alcoa, are some of the other leading companies who currently use the power of television to heighten the impact of their institutional advertising:

Aluminium Limited, Inc.*
Dow Chemical Co.
E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., Inc.
Electric Companies Advertising Program*
Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.
General Electric Co.*
The B.F. Goodrich Co.
International Harvester Co.*
Johns-Manville Corp.
Monsanto Chemical Co.*
United States Steel Corp.
Westinghouse Electric Corp.*

* on CBS Television
 on CBS Television starting July 6th

SEE IT NOW best describes itself on Tuesdays from 10:30 to 11 pm. And it is almost a certainty that anyone reading this report has himself seen SEE IT NOW.

As you have probably observed, SEE IT NOW is consistently the most dynamic, searching documentary program on the air. It lights up, in foreground and background, subjects of great current importance and public interest ... and presents the people who figure in these national and world affairs.

Thus, SEE IT NOW has an unusually magnetic appeal for individuals who are themselves actively engaged or personally interested in the topics covered each week.

As a natural consequence, the program's audience is not only substantial in size, but also particularly impressive in its quality ...

This season SEE IT NOW reached 3,268,000 homes per week -- more homes per average telecast than ever before:

Season (Oct-Apr)	Homes Reached
1954-55	3,268,000
1953-54	3,009,000
1952-53	2,459,000
1951-52*	1,387,000

SEE IT NOW appeals to an audience unique in its characteristics. Homes reached by the program have a great percentage of men with

1. The program is widely respected for its role in enlarging public understanding of national and world affairs.

2. It also succeeds in generating a broad general interest in current issues and the people behind them.

3. SEE IT NOW thus earns the attention of both the leaders of public opinion and the public at large.

4. The program next year will reach an estimated weekly audience of over nine million people.

Altogether, the persuasive force of television and the prestige of SEE IT NOW combine to create in this program an ideal platform for an important public relations message.

Dear Mr. Murrow;

Since returning to the country we have mightily enjoyed your Tuesday night shows and wish to add our small thanks. The present show on South Africa is especially timely as many of us have been interested in what if any change might be expected with the shift from Dr. Malan.

We have just recently returned from a two year Point Four assignment in Iran. I would like to commend for your possible attention a program on Point Four in that country. Under the very able and stimulating leadership of Bill Warne a magnificent revolution, peaceful, is underway. Persia is leaping its way through the Industrial Revolution with the help of American dollars and American technicians.

I've had ample opportunities in the months I've been home to learn that my middle western neighbors are hungry and eager for enlightenment on the far-flung parts of the world. Our news media are doing a fair job to satisfy this curiosity but we are, to my notion, in a desparate disadvantage with the rest of the world -- they know so much about us and we so little about them.

I'm sure you would find the Point Four agency in Iran extremely cooperative in helping you get out a dramatic and factual story on the work in that area. I hope that you may be able to include this in your schedule.

SUMMARY-INDEX OF THE WEEK'S NEWS—June 11, 1955

SUBSCRIPTION TV COMMENTS contain brilliant analyses, and put focus on Congress, "tests", demand for oral hearing, danger to free TV (p. 1 & Special Digest).

SENATE INVESTIGATORS' top-priority projects: excise tax relief and engineering study of allocation plan. Uhf group asks freeze, selective deintermixture (p. 3).

COMMUNITY ANTENNA operators' convention encouraged by Comr. Doerfer; business good but satellites, boosters & low-power stations cause concern (p. 5).

ELECTRONICAM CLICKS, says DuMont, pointing to 50% cost reduction in film production & naming Caddigan mgr. of marketing setup for new filming system (p. 7).

TINKERTOY TV SET due from Emerson early next year; CBS-Columbia & Capehart also work on modular designs; RCA, Zenith show lines (p. 10).

APPLIANCE TRANS-SHIPPING is sanctioned by Justice Dept. anti-trust chief, though trade generally regards it as competitive evil (p. 13).

DIVERSIFICATION again featured in decisions, Wichita TV getting final award of Ch. 3, Mid-West TV favored by examiner for Indianapolis' Ch. 13 (p. 4).

COURT SLAPS FCC in old Clarksburg case; Flint's WJRT delayed again; CBS abandons plan to buy Steubenville outlet (p. 4). Notes on upcoming stations (p. 9).

With This Issue: Summaries of Comments on Subscription TV Filed This Week With the FCC (4-p. "Special Digest")

'THE TOLLVISION WAR'—AT DEADLINE: Verbal warfare over subscription TV entered an important phase this week as major and minor combatants filed formal comments with FCC -- but it's by no means the final or most important phase. Chances are future battles will make this week's legalistic give-&-take look like a mere skirmish.

All the 30-odd filings, some extremely voluminous, some revealing penetrating research effort, are digested in a Special Supplement herewith. We've studied them all, to the extent that time permitted, and the conflict -- stripped of all hokum and publicity motives -- appears to resolve itself into several major issues:

(1) Should Congress, not FCC, make the decision?

(2) Should "tests" be authorized?

(3) Should a hearing -- full, oral evidentiary -- be conducted?

These questions are in addition, of course, to the overriding question: "Will subscription TV add to or subtract from today's free system?"

* * * *

Proponents and opponents are lined up officially now, and they're a motley group -- "bigs" and "littles" on both sides, motives obvious. If Congress grabs the ball from FCC's hands, or gets it on a forward pass from FCC, it means long delays and probably the ultimate rejection of subscription TV.

For with all the buildup and fanfare, any Congressional candidate worth his political salt can get a lot of campaign mileage out of vowing to the public that he will keep TV free. There are very few votes in any promise to charge the public for its TV programs -- and the simple fact is that there isn't the popular clamor for "reform" of TV that arose during the early days of commercial radio.

The idea of a commercial "test" could prove to be the most crucial issue of all -- and opponents devoted some of their most strenuous arguments to point out the "fallacies" and "dangers" of any such experiments.

Demand by the opponents for an oral hearing is bound to precipitate a nasty fight, for the proponents know full well how that sort of thing can drag into years -- having fresh in mind the protracted allocation and color hearings.

We've appended street addresses of principals and counsel to the digests of their comments in the Special Supplement herewith, and we urge you to ask them for copies which most of them told us they're prepared to supply -- for we've never before seen such truly brilliant analyses of what TV is under a free system and what it might be under fee TV. In the scant 10 years of TV's life, no one has ever devoted such skill & knowledge to evaluation of its economic, artistic & social aspects.

A study of the comments shows that much of the argument to date had been superficial indeed -- proponents promising pie-in-the-sky, opponents relying on flat assertion that toll TV will kill free TV.

The care and intensity manifested in the briefs make certain that FCC consideration of the issue can scarcely be less exhaustive -- reemphasizing our repeated predictions that final disposition is a very long way off. Moreover, the extensive attention to legal aspects points plainly to ultimate court appeals by whoever loses.

* * * *

The anti-fee forces have been striking telling blows, it's apparent, in their cry that the prime result of fee TV would be to make the public pay for what it now gets free -- for Zenith's comments ask Commission to prohibit networks from charging for programs now paid for by advertisers and to prohibit stations from carrying fee TV programs more than 15% of the time.

Concept of a "free enterprise" experiment, on the other hand, has opponents issuing dire warnings that a test dare not be tried while at the same time urging that other tryout techniques are available which won't jeopardize free TV. Wired system is most frequently suggested as the proper arena for tests. Opponents like NARTB, CBS and theatre-sparked Joint Committee on Toll TV say they have no objections to subscription TV via cable.

Accepting this premise, the largest manufacturer of wired systems for community antenna services, Jerrold, told Commission it's ready, willing and able to supply already-operating systems with "home hookups" for the tests.

Jerrold also stated, however, that the whole foundation of subscription TV -- the scrambling and unscrambling technique -- is fallacious because any broadcast code can readily be broken and the shows "bootlegged", whereas a wired system is secure. Jerrold's claim is that major cities can be wired up for same cost that decoders can be installed for a broadcast system; its pres. Milton Shapp challenged Zenith to supply him with 2 decoders and he would break any scrambled telecast Zenith devises.

The wire-system appeared to appeal even to one of pay-TV's proponents, Paramount Pictures' International Telemeter, whose pres. Barney Balaban and v.p. Paul Raibourn told us they've been urged to try the cable by several interested groups and will do so if satisfied that the economics are right.

* * * *

Movie tycoon Balaban tangled with RCA-NBC Chairman Sarnoff this week, blasting latter's assertions that pay-TV would turn TV into a Hollywood "cash box" (Vol. 11:23). Insisting toll TV is "inevitable", Balaban said:

"One gets a little weary of these pious declarations about the motion picture companies in their relation to TV. No one has a patent on how to make motion pictures. Anyone can make a motion picture who has the talent and money to do so. There is nothing to prevent NBC, or any of the other networks, from investing in quality production motion pictures as we do in our business."

Telemeter came up with novel idea of multiplexing what it calls "marquee" -- technique of displaying to viewers a description of what they're missing at same time scrambled picture is being telecast, all on one channel. At first blush, it was thought Telemeter had devised multiplexing system which could be used to present subscription TV as a true supplement to the existing free system. However, Telemeter engineers stated that multiplexed picture would be "degraded", though it was thought that 2 acceptable pictures might some day be transmitted on the same channel. Raibourn, himself an engineer, suggested this might take 5 years to achieve.

* * * *

Zenith pres. E.F. McDonald also took crack at Sarnoff this week, alleging RCA had sought to buy Phonevision patents 3 times in recent years. Gen. Sarnoff termed charge "utterly false", whereupon McDonald offered to testify about it "under oath".

"The battle of press releases" having gone to higher levels, the chips down, it can be expected that the TV medium will itself be used more freely henceforth to argue the fee-TV subject -- that is, if popular interest doesn't flag.

Another TV debate on the subject is scheduled by CBS-TV -- on Ed Murrow's "See It Now" Tue., June 14, 10:30-11 p.m. EDT. Participants pro will be Skiatron counsel James M. Landis, Brooklyn Dodgers pres. Walter O'Malley, playwright Robert Sherwood. Arguing anti will be CBS pres. Frank Stanton, theatre committee co-chairman Alfred Starr, station mgr. P.A. Sugg, WKY-TV, Oklahoma City.

If the previous TV debates are criterion, public's reaction to pay TV will be generally adverse -- evidenced by fact that tide of letters to FCC turned from pro to con immediately after one such recent debate on NBC-TV. Antagonists were Zenith's H.C. Bonfig (now with CBS) with Cornelia Otis Skinner and Mr. Starr with actress Faye Emerson.

Heavy numerical lead of pro-fee TV letters in FCC files, initiated by Zenith publicity campaign, has probably been overcome by now (Vol. 11:23). Total is now somewhere around 20,000 letters, including results of poll conducted by Newsday, Long Island daily, which reported 5036 anti-pay-as-you-see, only 192 pro.

Next official deadline is July 11, when parties are to reply to one another's comments as filed this week. It's certain some participants will ask for extension because of the great volume of material for study -- and, it being summertime, the chances of extension are considered strong.

SOUND & FURY ON THE ALLOCATION FRONT: The first anniversary of the Potter hearings on uhf finds the air full of "proposals", "plans" and talk of "investigations" aimed at helping uhf in one way or another -- and they all have a familiar ring. Potter subcommittee never made a final report, and none of the "strong measures" suggested have been adopted. One year and millions of words later, outlook is the same.

The continuing TV investigation by Sen. Magnuson's Commerce Committee, under the guidance of chief counsel Sidney Davis, has assigned top priority to 2 projects, both outgrowths of measures once proposed by Potter subcommittee:

(1) All-out drive to eliminate price differential on all-channel sets by exempting them from 10% Federal excise tax. Magnuson already has written letter to economy-minded Chairman Byrd (D-Va.) of Finance Committee, and there's talk of joint meeting of Commerce & Finance committees to discuss plan. Davis feels the measure still has "fighting chance" -- despite Administration's opposition to all tax bills this session. In the House, Ikard tax-exemption bill (HR-4070) is stalled, but proponents will make effort in next 2 weeks to get Ways & Means Committee commitment.

(2) Ad hoc committee of leading engineers, to take another look at allocation plan (Vol. 11:23). RETMA, NARTB, FCC, UHF Industry Coordinating Committee, networks have been asked to suggest members. They're due to be announced in about 2 weeks. Reports that committee's principal function will be to squeeze in as many more vhf channels as possible were strongly denied this week by Davis. He said the committee will be told to approach entire question with open mind.

Davis believes in go-slow policy, and says he won't be pushed into "premature hearings." Best guess still is that the all-encompassing TV hearings won't begin until next fall at earliest, perhaps even next winter.

* * * *

Another ad hoc committee -- plus a freeze and selective deintermixture -- was proposed to FCC this week by group of uhf telecasters. UHF Industry Coordinating Committee, headed by Harold Thoms and Fred Weber, forwarded to the FCC the proposal adopted by representatives of some 45 stations 2 weeks ago (Vol. 11:22). Group has an appointment June 21 to discuss plan with FCC. The 3-part proposal:

(1) Freeze for at least 90 days all TV authorizations and modifications "which will result in aggravation of intermixture of uhf & vhf stations." (2) Establish an ad hoc committee, which will act during freeze to set up new standards "for determining objectionable interference," to serve as basis for new rules permitting drop-ins of new vhf assignments, on case-to-case basis, presumably through use of directional antennas, low power, etc. (3) Commission would resolve all pending proposals for area deintermixture during same freeze.

FCC's "test cases" on selective deintermixture (Vol. 11:14) have been slated for hearing June 27-28. They involve substitution of uhf for single commercial vhf channels in Peoria, Ill.; Madison, Wis.; Evansville, Ind.; Hartford, Conn.

FCC this week served notice it will discontinue its policy of extending CPs of uhf grantees on purely economic grounds. It gave 12 uhf CP-holders until Jan 16 to get started, and announced that no CPs would be extended beyond that date unless grantees give evidence of definite plans for actual construction and operation.

Senate this week passed FCC budget appropriation, which includes $80,000 for study of networks (Vol. 11:22-23). Already approved by House, measure now goes to conference committee to iron out minor differences between Senate & House versions.

Sen. Magnuson explained the study in response to question in Senate by Sen. Langer (R-N.D.) of Judiciary Committee: "The [$80,000] is for the purpose of permitting the FCC to make a factual study and investigation of the networks and their contractual relations with their affiliates...A year will be required to obtain the factual data. The Commission does not intend to duplicate any work which the [Senate Commerce Committee] inquiry may have done, or to overlap the inquiry as to monopolies which the Committee on the Judiciary is making."

Nobody expects strong medicine to come out of FCC's investigation. As Chairman McConnaughey put it, in recent address to CBS-TV affiliate conference: "I think that the Commission should know more about the networks from the standpoint of what makes them tick. I think that possibly the networks would welcome such a study. But to me, there is a vast difference between making a study and coming out and starting to criticize everything... A study, yes; an intelligent appraisal, yes; but to come out and make wild suggestions and wild accusations [is] a very dangerous thing when you are dealing with possibly the most sensitive industry in the American economy."

FINAL DECISION in old Wichita Ch. 3 case—which started Oct. 20, 1952—gives CP to non-radio Wichita TV Corp. (George M. Brown, pres.). Satellite CP for Ch. 4 in Roseburg, Ore. (to owners of KVAL-TV, Eugene) was only other grant issued by FCC in week that also produced initial decision proposing Ch. 13 grant in Indianapolis to Mid-West TV Corp.

Wichita case was close—a 3-2 decision, with Comrs. Lee & McConnaughey dissenting, Hyde & Doerfer not participating. Commission picked Wichita TV for its program proposals, plans of owners to participate in operations, local residence and diversification. It owns no communications media, whereas competitor KFH is part owned by Wichita Eagle and KANS principal O. L. Taylor also controls KRGV-TV & KRGV, Weslaco, Tex. Lee wrote dissent, in which McConnaughey concurred, stating he'd pick KFH because of its long and satisfactory radio record and because he felt newspaper ownership should give station a plus rather than a minus.

Examiner Basil P. Cooper chose Mid-West in Indianapolis (banker George Sadlier, pres.)—over WIBC, WIRE & Crosley—because of local ownership, program proposals and fact it owns no TV-radio stations, newspapers or theatres. Cooper was unimpressed with programming record of WIBC, WIRE & Crosley and was particularly critical of fact that WIRE was interlocked with Indianapolis Star and News (E. F. Pulliam), saying city needs another "voice."

Commission got spanked by Court of Appeals this week, in the Clarksburg, W. Va. protest case. FCC had granted Ch. 12 CP for WBLK-TV to Stubblefield publishing family, whereupon Clarksburg Exponent & Telegram protested (Vol. 10:13). Commission gave protestant oral argument, but court's Judges Edgerton, Bazelon & Bastian unanimously ruled this week that full hearing should have been granted instead, sent case back.

Meanwhile, Commission granted protests against establishment of WJRT, Flint (Ch. 12) at site near Saginaw, thus further holding up construction of station. Full hearing will begin June 27 on protests of WKNX-TV, Saginaw (Ch. 57), WTOM-TV, Lansing (Ch. 54) & WWTV, Cadillac (Ch. 13).

Sale of WSTV-TV, Steubenville, O. (Ch. 9), to CBS was called off this week—principals recognizing they had little chance of getting FCC to approve move of station to Pittsburgh. It remains CBS-TV affiliate.

Another uhf seeking vhf channel was WKLO-TV, Louisville (Ch. 21), which asked that Ch. 7, 9 & 13 be added to Louisville, taking them from Bowling Green, Ky., Evansville & Hatfield, Ind. Station asked that it be shifted to Ch. 7, WQXL-TV to Ch. 13, leaving Ch. 9 for educators.

Commission finalized addition of Ch. 16 to Pittsburg, Cal., substitution of Ch. 15 for Ch. 16 in Red Bluff, Cal., Ch. 56 for Ch. 16 in Santa Cruz, Cal.

Chairman McConnaughey, planning to leave for Europe July 22, and with Commission scheduling no action on major matters during Aug., is pressuring staff and colleagues to get out as much work as possible now—particularly on such issues as deintermixture (see p. 3). Evacuation of key govt. officials in civil defense test June 13 may put crimp in Commission output next week.

Richard A. Mack's nomination to FCC to succeed Comr. Hennock June 30 (Vol. 11:19,22) is scheduled for hearing by Senate Commerce Committee June 16 at 10 a.m.; quick approval is expected.

COMMUNITY SYSTEMS—PROSPECTS & PROBLEMS: A professional atmosphere pervaded this week's convention of National Community TV Assn. in New York's Park Sheraton -- in marked contrast with previous meetings of the not-much-publicized community antenna operators. For in last few years these enterprisers, usually small and local, have burgeoned from a group with no true industry spirit or national awareness into a cohesive and self-assured organization comparable with old-line trade associations.

Some 450 attended convention and 18 exhibitors displayed equipment. Beset with uncertainties, but flourishing nonetheless, operators were pleased with address by FCC Comr. John C. Doerfer, who congratulated them on their enterprise, expressed optimism for the future, and showed strong aversion to applying the iron hand of Federal regulation to the conduct of their business.

During 1948-1952 TV freeze, shadow of prospective new stations hung over the operators, but worries were unjustified. Now, it's boosters, satellites and low-powered stations that pose the threat.

Some of the "gold rush" aspects of the business have disappeared, and sudden discoveries of backyard bonanzas are now quite rare. Rather, well-informed capital is roaming the country, beefing up old systems, exploring markets previously thought to be too well served with free signals to be profitable, and investing in expensive microwaves in order to penetrate previously inaccessible communities.

COMMUNITY ANTENNA operators' greatest concern is over prospects of competition from satellites, boosters and low-power stations of all kinds (Vol. 11:23). These provided subject for liveliest session of NCTA convention in New York this week.

With FCC certain to authorize them in one form or another and with manufacturers prepared to deliver telecasting equipment at lower and lower costs, the concern appears justified. Furthermore, Sen. Magnuson (D-Wash.), whose state is loaded with illegal boosters which have given community operators serious competition, is putting tremendous pressure on FCC to legalize the boosters—fast. On June 3, he wrote FCC Chairman McConnaughey telling him to get going, offering to sponsor new laws if necessary.

Participating in panel discussion on low-power TV stations at convention were NCTA pres. Martin F. Malarkey, NCTA exec. secy. E. Stratford Smith, Entron pres. H. M. Diambra, Jerrold pres. Milton J. Shapp, Spencer-Kennedy pres. Fitzroy Kennedy.

Theme of discussion: Low-power TV outlets in most small towns probably aren't economically feasible, but if they are, they still won't kill off community operators who can add more and more choices of signals—3, 5, 7 or even more—to retain customers.

They weren't so concerned with "normal" satellites as they were with those proposing to transmit several signals simultaneously—as outlined by applicant for experimental station in Clarkston, Wash., planning to retransmit 3 Spokane signals on 3 uhf channels (Vol. 11:23). Said Shapp: "We must take issue forcibly with this type. It's a change from the traditional FCC pattern." Smith noted that FCC has strict rules against permitting one station to occupy more than one channel in a town, and he recommended FCC be asked to make policy clear and stable so that system operators could plan accordingly. He suggested that rule-making should be undertaken by Commission before any such grants are made.

Panelists thought low-power operations could scarcely be profitable in towns up to 25,000 or so but might go over in larger cities. Malarkey, who hails from Pottsville, Pa., said that metropolitan station operators told him they couldn't envision profitable satellite operation because they could scarcely increase rates for the relatively small increase in circulation. It was noted, however, that if one big-city station seeks satellite, his competitors are forced to do likewise—even though economics may not be favorable—as happened in Walla Walla, Wash.

Leon Papernow, once part owner of KFSD-TV, San Diego, told group that they should be checking sentiment of small-town AM operators to determine low-power station possibilities, and he pointed out that manufacturers at recent NARTB convention would even lease complete equipment for some $50 a day (Vol. 11:22). He warned that potential among small AM operators might be very great, as indicated by Sylvania surveys (Vol. 11:22).

Certain to be watched closely as possible clue to small-town TV economics is novel "Commprovision" system (Vol. 11:8) which started May 27 in Douglas, Ariz. Town is too far from stations to get signals for community system, so group known as Trans-Community TV Network, 141 El Camino Dr., Beverly Hills, Cal. (Jerome L. Doff, pres.), is feeding kines & films to wired system, interspersing local live, film & slide commercials.

Organization advertises it's operating 3-10 p.m. daily, offering You Bet Your Life, Hit Parade, Comedy Hour, Kraft Theatre, Robert Montgomery Presents, Mr. Peepers, Tennessee Ernie, etc. Most programs are NBC, but other networks' shows are also said to be on tap. Company has invested heavily in RCA equipment, including mobile unit for live man-on-the-street pickups, etc. It's claimed that merchants are clamoring to place spots and that operators expect to achieve profit when only 1000 homes are wired.

Entrepreneurs haven't yet fixed cost to subscriber, but it's expected to be somewhere in range now charged by regular community operators—$125-$150 for initial connection, $3-$7 monthly fee.

If Trans-Community does prove profitable, it will undoubtedly invite competition from low-power station offering free signals, once low-power rules are adopted—because vhf channels are plentiful in area, Ch. 3 already allocated but unapplied-for in Douglas, and station probably could be built and operated for no more than a wired system.

* * * *

Interest in microwaves to serve community systems was intense. FCC common carrier expert Arthur Gladstone outlined Commission policy: qualified groups can obtain permission to operate microwaves for systems but can't own the systems they serve. Two such microwaves have been granted—one to serve Poplar Bluff, Mo. area (but never built), other to serve systems in Richland and Kennewick-Pasco, Wash. (granted May 25). Like hinterland TV station operators, owners of systems feel that AT&T service is unnecessarily costly.

Another industry problem is "property rights," i.e., systems' right to relay signals of stations. Most stations are delighted with added circulation produced by systems, but a few have sought to keep their signals off systems. Wm. Grove's KFBC-TV, Cheyenne, Wyo. has ordered operator in Laramie not to carry its signal, but Laramie operator continues to carry it, asserting that his system, in principle, is merely an extension of customers' antennas. Ed Craney's KXLF-TV, Butte, Mont. has given similar orders to operator in Bozeman—and conflict is likely to wind up in court. It was Craney who took famed ASCAP case to U. S. Supreme Court.

Subscription TV is another intriguing subject—for community operators feel they have natural setup for first-run movies, etc., and Jerrold's Shapp asserts that systems can take whole hot potato out of FCC's hands (see p. 1).

State utility regulation isn't quite the bugaboo it used to be. Though operators find little need for such regulation, one operator put it this way: "You don't see the phone or electric companies going broke, do you?" Wyoming is only state actually regulating, though a few others are considering assuming control.

Illustrative of operators' esprit de corps, membership voted unanimously to triple budget to $50,000 for next year, with dues to be 2½¢ per subscriber per month—some members' dues being increased 9-fold. They reorganized to set up 8 regions, with director for each. Malarkey was reelected pres., this to be his last term; Wm. Daniels, Casper, Wyo., v.p.; Joseph Saricks, Bradford, Pa., secy.; Wm. Calsam, Oneonta, N. Y., treas.

Operators were heartened by speech of FCC Comr. Doerfer, who said: "Community TV today is a $20,000,000 industry. Approximately 400 companies are bringing a TV service to more than 300,000 subscribers or roughly 1,000,000 viewers. But for your enterprising spirit most of these people would today be without such service. This fact alone is a splendid tribute to your ingenuity and in particular to your initiative. You are to be congratulated."

Outlining legal uncertainties of regulation—lack of final court determination whether systems are broadcasting or common carrier, or whether they come under Federal or state jurisdiction—Doerfer said he preferred states assume regulation, if any governmental entity should. He also said he couldn't see that Govt. should protect broadcasters from systems or vice versa.

As for low-power stations, he stated: "Consideration of the relative cost of construction and operation, number and variety of available programs, fidelity of broadcast signals, their limitation because of encroaching interference and a host of unknown factors inherent in the new proposals to permit so-called boosters, satellites and low-power stations, should give CATV operators some encouragement and comfort . . . Your demonstrated powers of resilience without any governmental help or aid should give your prophets of doom cause for thought."

Sets-in-use totaled 35,809,000 as of May 1, according to NBC research & planning director Hugh M. Beville Jr., up 305,000 from April 1. U. S. Census Bureau this week revealed its June population survey is asking number of homes having TVs, and how many; sampling of about 25,000 families in 230 areas will permit national estimate to be released in Sept. or Oct. Advertising Research Foundation requested survey and is paying for it.

H. K. Carpenter, 61, broadcasting pioneer, who retired last summer as v.p. of Cleveland Plain Dealer's WHK, died suddenly June 2 in Cleveland. Surviving are his widow and 3 daughters.

Telecasting Notes: NBC pres. Pat Weaver, who is generally given the accolade as TV-radio's Great Innovator (Today, Home, Tonight, spectaculars, Monitor, Wide Wide World), doesn't do so badly before the camera himself—first evidenced by his easy manner and ready responses on Ted Granik's Youth Wants to Know show June 4. The kids ask tough ones, and many a statesman often flounders on that program, but Weaver was always at ease, his replies brief and to the point; he wasn't at all prolix or involved, despite his reputation for memos requiring concentrated re-reading to be understood . . . Weaver likes personal appearances, apparently, for he has agreed to narrate American Petroleum Institute show titled "1976," Sun. Oct. 9, 4:30-5:30 p.m., it being a glimpse into life in this country 21 years hence. He promises it won't be "space ship stuff"; it's his own idea, based on book he has been writing titled Tomorrow . . . First-run of new Horatio Hornblower feature film with Michael Redgrave may also be carried on NBC next fall as one-shot spectacular, in addition to Korda's The Constant Husband (Vol. 11:23), says Billboard; it would be sort of pilot for new half-hour TV film series with same title, and NBC rental deal would graduate downward depending on subsequent box-office . . . Another color spectacular in works is an original musical titled "The King & Mrs. Candle," by Sumner Locke Elliott, slated for NBC-TV's Producers' Showcase Aug. 20; Mark Charlap, who wrote music for Peter Pan, is doing it for the TV play, with Hit Parade's Toni Charmoli as choreographer . . . Those 2 Bing Crosby spectaculars announced by CBS (Vol. 9:21) will be on film, each 90 min. and resembling regular movie musicals. Crosby is curtailing his theatrical film activity to one-a-year, will concentrate on the 2 CBS features, first to be based on Rip Van Winkle story, going before cameras in July and telecast in Oct. They'll be produced & directed by Ralph Levy, budgeted at $175,000 each . . . "Preview" format adopted by NBC's Lux Video Theatre for summer series; live hour series will dramatize 12 stories made available by major movie producers before they're filmed for theatre . . . Apropos growing interdependence of TV and movies, Screen Directors Guild, Hollywood, reports 65% of members working in TV regularly or occasionally . . . Universal-International is getting into TV act, too—cooperating with NBC in putting on Allen in Movieland as summer extravaganza Sat. July 2, 9-10:30 p.m., providing such stars as Jeff Chandler, Piper Laurie, Tony Curtis, Audie Murphy; Steve Allen will be in Hollywood to star in U-I's film The Benny Goodman Story . . . Top movie directors Wm. Wyler, Wm. Wellman, Frank Borzage, John Farrow to direct one film each for next season's Screen Directors Playhouse on NBC-TV; Screen Directors Guild's benevolent work will be beneficiary . . . Screen Gems of Canada Ltd., 102 Peter St., Toronto, has been formed to handle properties of Screen Gems along with those of Telepix Movies Ltd., with latter's Joseph Dunkelman & Lloyd Burns in charge . . . Olympus Film Productions Inc., subsidiary of WLW Promotions Inc., sold June 3 to James B. Hill, its gen. mgr. . . . Station Film Library Inc., recently established by Harry Trenner, has been purchased by General Teleradio.

General Teleradio's Tom O'Neil reportedly is bidding on RKO holdings of Howard Hughes, which would give him big backlog of feature films now in vaults as well as control of RKO studio on Gower St., Hollywood, and Pathe lot in Burbank. Offers by O'Neil (of General Tire family) and others are understood to be in hands of Irving Trust Co. General Teleradio operates 5 TV stations and as many AMs, as well as Mutual Broadcasting System, Don Lee Network, Yankee Network. Presumably, though it's verifying nothing, it wants the RKO pictures to continue its successful "Million Dollar Movie" syndication and would enter the TV film production field in a big way if it gets the studio facilities.

DuMONT'S ELECTRONICAM live-film production method (Vol. 11:6, 8, 13, 16, 19) is in business now, and the company is proceeding on 2 fronts—marketing & film production—to capitalize on an anticipated industry acceptance of the system.

DuMont this week appointed "the father of Electronicam"—James L. Caddigan, ex-network programming & production mgr.—to new post of director of Electronicam marketing, with headquarters at Clifton, N. J. Said DuMont v.p.-gen. mgr. Wm. H. Kelley:

"The [new] marketing organization for Electronicam will undertake the establishment of this new system as standard equipment for the production of every type of motion picture—theatrical, business, educational, TV, commercials, govt." Marketing, he said, will be "international in scope."

Meanwhile, 2 Electronicam film production units have been busy at DuMont's New York Tele-Center, according to network director Ted Bergmann, who says 90% of those using the new facility aren't DuMont network advertisers. First Electronicam-produced commercial—1-min. Ronson shaver spot, thru Wm. Weintraub agency—was seen by New York viewers this week on WCBS-TV's Early Show. Biggest project to date was scheduled this week—pilot film in new 90-min. drama series for unnamed principal.

Among users and experimenters with new system at the Tele-Center are other networks, independent producers, agencies, sponsors. Commercials have been made for at least 4 agencies, pilot films for 2 producers, and an educational TV film series is now shooting.

Bergmann estimates that system cuts filming costs in half, compared to conventional methods, for complete film series and other big orders. Here are some cost estimates, based on month's Electronicam experience, as compared with conventional filming: Five 15-min. soap opera episodes (total 50 min.), all shot in one 10-hour day, $6000-$7500, compared to $15,000-$18,500 by conventional methods. For one-minute commercials, cost is about $1200 each when 3 are made consecutively, $700 each for 6 and $400 each for 12. Conventional film commercial is said to cost $3600 for one minute.

As for DuMont network shows, pilot Electronicam prints are now being made of all of them. DuMont is recommending to its clients that they drop the live shows, change over to film. One DuMont account, Serutan, reportedly is planning to switch to Electronicam method entirely as soon as it has built up backlog of film shows in its Life Begins at 80 series.

DuMont now has two 16mm Electronicam units (3 cameras each) in operation at its N. Y. Tele-Center, will install 35mm system this summer. New director of photography for Electronicam is Douglas Downs, ex-March of Time.

NBC Spot Sales has revised its Guide for Video and Audio Standards, covering 10-sec. IDs, as result of optional method announced last Oct. whereby advertiser may use full screen for 7¼ sec. (Vol. 10:42); revised manual will be available in early July.

National advertising rose 11% in first 4 months of this year over year ago, reports Printers' Ink, with network TV up 34%, newspapers up 14%, network radio down 17%.

Network Accounts: Cigarette companies, whether despite or because of lung cancer publicity, are increasing network TV sponsorships, reversing earlier policy of cancelling or sharing top programs in wake of first cigarette sales declines. Six major manufacturers will sponsor 18 network shows this fall, latest being Camels' purchase of 30-min. Phil Silvers Show on CBS-TV (time undetermined) & Lucky Strikes' buy of Wed. 8:30-9 p.m. period on ABC-TV following Disneyland . . . CBS-TV is revamping Morning Show (Mon.-thru-Fri. 7-9 a.m.), which has had rough commercial going in competition with highly successful Today on NBC-TV; spokesman denied reports show was going off air, though m.c. Jack Paar will quit it to head Jack Paar Show on CBS-TV starting July 4, Mon.-thru-Fri. 1-1:30 p.m. . . . General Foods (Instant Sanka & Minute Rice) & Revlon to be alt. sponsors of Johnny Carson Show on CBS-TV starting June 30, Thu. 10-10:30 p.m., thru Young & Rubicam & Wm. H. Postmaster-General, who runs stations of both BBC & ITA, has entered agreement with them whereby they won't start before 9 a.m. (2 p.m. Sun.) or run after 11 p.m., with 6-7 p.m. daily kept dark in accordance with BBC tradition (6-7:25 p.m.) which is done, as an official put it, "so that the mothers may prepare dinner and put the children to bed without any distraction from TV" (Vol. 10:45). Associated-Rediffusion, contractor for weekdays on London stations, announces it has already sold £1,000,000 worth of time ($2,800,000) and gen. mgr. Capt. T. N. Brownrigg emphasized that "no advertiser or agent will have any say whatsoever in the programs we transmit or in the choice of program with which his commercial will be associated, although we will attempt to place his advertisement alongside a suitable program." ITA has announced Sept. 22 as definite starting date for London commercial programs.

Canadian Broadcasting Corp. gross revenues for fiscal year ended March 31 were $34,707,000, expenditures $29,106,000, with TV income accounting for $21,273,000 of revenues and $15,876,000 of expenses, reports chairman A. Davidson Dunton. Despite 1954-55 surplus of $4,256,000 after depreciation, it's expected 1955-56 will see $10,805,000 operating deficit, he stated—$8,690,000 on TV, $2,115,000 on radio. Revenues derive partly from 15% Federal tax on receivers, which was $16,960,000 last fiscal year and which Dunton estimated would go down about $1,500,000 this year due to lower TV set prices. Remainder of revenues come from sponsorships. Net, the CBC's TV & radio services cost the Canadian taxpayers about $23,464,000 last year, will go up to about $36,605,000 this year, according to the Dunton report.

FCC's power to overrule examiners was bolstered this week by U. S. Supreme Court decision knocking out last year's appeals court ruling which would have increased authority of examiners (Vol. 10:34-35). Ruling was in AM case—equally applicable to TV—in which appeals court upheld examiner's initial decision and took FCC to task for reversing it. Supreme Court said this week that appeals court erred in its reasons for overruling FCC grant to Easton Publishing Co. (WEEX) for 1230 kc in Easton, Pa. over Allentown Bcstg. Co. (WHOL) for same frequency in Allentown. In another precedent-setting aspect of case, Supreme Court said in effect that where same frequency is sought in 2 different communities, Commission may choose between the 2 communities on basis of need for the channel before comparing qualifications of competing applicants for the frequency. Appeals court, in overruling FCC, had stated that community's need for the channel could be considered only where applicants' qualifications were approximately equal. Easton-Allentown dispute, raging for nearly a decade, has been see-saw battle: Allentown won original hearing, put WHOL on air. Easton Publishing Co. appealed, and court sent case back to FCC which reversed itself and gave grant to Easton, now holding CP for 1230 kc. Allentown Bcstg. then appealed, got favorable ruling from appeals court. Supreme Court's 7-1 ruling this week found "errors of law" in appeals court ruling, ordered court to reconsider case.

EMERSON GOES TINKERTOY; MORE NEW LINES: That radical change in TV set construction methods we discussed last week (Vol. 11:23) -- modular design of components together with printed wiring -- has been adopted by Emerson for expected marketing early next year. Several others, notably CBS-Columbia and Capehart-Farnsworth, are experimenting with it and looking to early adoption.

RCA confirmed trend toward automatic production, meanwhile, announcing that its redesigned line -- shown this week to field reps & distributors -- makes "more extensive use of printed circuits than anyone else in the TV industry." Admiral last week showed sets in which 80-90% of wiring was printed, most components inserted automatically (Vol. 11:23). Exception to rule was Zenith, whose new models shown this week have no printed circuits. After experimentation, company ruled out printed wiring for present as providing no cost saving. (For details of new lines, p. 13).

* * * *

Emerson's modular design system is based on govt.-developed "Tinkertoy" principle, now being exploited commercially by ACF Electronics, Aerovox, Sanders Associates (Nashua, N.H.) and others. Tinkertoy process (Vol. 11:12) uses "printed" components on tiny ceramic wafers which are stacked and mounted on a printed circuit board. Other printed circuit techniques now in wide use employ conventional parts, sometimes mounted and assembled on printed wiring boards by automatic means.

ACF Electronics, Alexandria, Va., subsidiary of ACF Industries (ex-American Car & Foundry Co.), is supplying the component modules (trade-named "Compacs", for component packages) for Emerson's new-type sets. Emerson pres. Benjamin Abrams confirmed that his company will make one chassis using Tinkertoy method, spotting it in various models throughout next year's line.

"We're in the process of developing it now," he told us. "While we're not making any modular sets at this time, we're pushing it along." He said the consumer will benefit principally by the ease of servicing such sets -- serviceman merely replaces module in which trouble has been located. Mr. Abrams said there won't be any price cuts "immediately" on sets using modular design. It is known, however, that many producers are looking to automatic production and easier-installed parts as a way to eventually make low-end models profitable.

Virtually every other manufacturer is studying the possibilities of modular and other types of non-conventional components. Said a CBS-Columbia spokesman:

"Yes, we're playing with Tinkertoy, but frankly we don't know where it will lead and we feel we must spend some time evaluating it -- with pilot runs and field tests. As you may have heard, printed wiring alone is facing serious trouble; it hasn't been easy to break in. This new system is not only printed wiring but true printed circuitry. Remember that resistors, capacitors and other components have been developed to a high state of efficiency and we have a lot of know-how in their use. Now we're asked to translate them into modules, and anyone who dives into this sort of thing in a hurry is running the risk of a lot of trouble. Yet we could be very lucky with it, too."

Capehart is experimenting with modular sets, too, said v.p.-gen. sales mgr. E.W. Gaughan, but only "in the preliminary stage." It's too early to determine when it will reach the market, he said, adding: "It's not a Tinkertoy set, but rather our own type of module development, although we're working with ACF and others." He said modular sets will probably be in same price range as conventional type, that Capehart won't sacrifice quality for sake of automatic production or new design.

Motorola exec. v.p. Robert W. Galvin said: "We're looking into modular construction, of course, but we're not using it in our upcoming line. It's simply one phase of study in our mechanization program." Among others reportedly considering modular approach is one big private label manufacturer, who may make modular radio sets before using principle on TV.

RCA's new line utilizes 5 printed circuit boards in horizontal and vertical chassis, according to Robert A. Seidel, exec. v.p. for consumer products. "Tests, both in the field and in our laboratories, have conclusively proven the advantages of printed circuits for greater reliability and thus better service and performance for viewers," he said. Line is completely restyled, has no controls visible in the front of sets, has new chassis in each model.

Color was completely overshadowed at RCA gathering. And next week, when it shows its 2 new color sets, consolette at $795 and console at $895, to N.Y. dealers there are no color programs scheduled on the networks.

Zenith's line, priced from $150 for 17-in. table model to $1400 for combination, includes a novel remote-control unit known as "Flash-Matic", which incorporates 4 separate photo-electric cells mounted at corners of the set: Special flashlight, which comes with set, turns set on and off, controls volume & tuning. It's feature on 4 sets, cheapest being $400. One of Zenith's selling points is that it permits viewer to turn off commercial by remote control.

Other brief highlights of major trade developments this week:

LABOR: IUE announced it would seek guaranteed annual wage from GE, Sylvania & Westinghouse in contract negotiations this summer, following Ford's approval of modified guaranteed wage with sister UAW. Union also disclosed that International Resistance Co. has become first parts manufacturer to agree to form of guaranteed wage, is now contributing 9¢ per hour for each of its 900 employes into a fund to provide year-round compensation. Company and union have joint committee currently ironing out details, according to David Lasser, IUE research director.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK: Several more indices of nation's economic prosperity were made public. Census Bureau reported total of 62,703,000 employed in May, highest ever for that month, up 1,018,000 from April and 1,584,000 over May 1954. It also reported unemployment declined 473,000 to total of 2,489,000 -- a greater decrease than usual for spring. Commerce Secy. Weeks told news conference current prosperity has no parallel in nation's history, said Gross National Product in second quarter would exceed record annual rate of $370 billion in first quarter. Herman Steinkraus, pres. of Bridgeport Brass Co. & ex-pres. of U.S. Chamber of Commerce, told the 20th annual convention of International Distribution Congress that he foresaw "increasing evidence of at least 4 to 5 years of excellent business ahead, based on a great wave of increased spending based on increased income and savings."

GOOD PROFIT YEAR: It may or may not apply to most TV-radio-electronics firms but Standard & Poor's report this week states aggregate profits of U.S. industrial corporations will run 15-20% better this year than last, making for most prosperous year on record. S&P analysis shows aggregate net income of 675 industrials for the first quarter of 1955 was 28.3% above like 1954 period.

'NECKTIE ECONOMY': Motorola v.p. Edw. R. Taylor prognosticates, in course of panel at Advertising Federation of America convention, that task ahead is to "create what I call a 'necktie economy', in which the consumer can always use another one of just about everything -- another car, bathtub, TV set, fur coat or vacation." He said nation is entering era of technological advancement in which advertising and marketing men will be expected to move "undreamed of mountains of merchandise" to the consumer. "Advertising's problem," he said, "is to sustain that frame of mind in which the consumer is more or less discontent all the time with yesterday's goods and services, and eager all the time to possess the newest things."

DEPT. STORES: Annual survey by National Retail Dry Goods Assn. Controllers' Congress bears out declining trend of TV sales in dept. stores. It shows that in 1954, TV sales were off 4% from 1953, which was 8% below 1952. Average price of TV set sold in dept. store was $138.34, down from $178.46 in 1953. Average price of set sold in all retail outlets last year was about $200. TV-radio-records depts. accounted for average 1.5% of total store volume in 1954, about same as in 1953.

PRODUCTION: TV output declined to 91,648 week ended June 3, lowest for year, from 110,944 preceding week and 120,144 week ended May 20. It was year's 22nd week and brought production for year to date to 3,260,000 vs. about 2,610,000 same 1954 period. Radio production totaled 206,428 (96,030 auto) week ended June 3, also low for year, compared to 266,946 preceding week and 280,445 week before. It brought 22-week production to 6,100,000 vs. 4,340,000 in corresponding 1954 period.

RETAIL SALES: Some 2,355,740 TVs were sold at retail in first 4 months of 1954, compared to 2,145,147 in corresponding 1954 period, reports RETMA. Sales in April were 411,748, compared to 669,794 in 5-week March and 371,720 in April 1954. Radio sales in first 4 months, excluding auto sets, totaled 1,609,182, compared to 1,487,247 in first 4 months of 1954. April sales were 367,841 vs. 448,488 in March and 427,911 in April 1954.

Topics & Trends of TV Trade: Trans-shipping of TV-radio-appliances, generally regarded in trade as a competitive evil which has fostered spread of discount houses, is a proper trade practice in eyes of Justice Dept. Judge Stanley N. Barnes, head of Justice anti-trust div., this week told Senate Judiciary subcommittee that trans-shipping "may represent a healthy form of price competition." His testimony supported policy first expressed in anti-trust suit against Philco last Dec., in which Justice charged that Philco's franchise agreements penalizing distributors for trans-shipping merchandise outside their territories were illegal (Vol. 10:51), a charge Philco subsequently denied (Vol. 11:10).

Barnes' testimony acknowledged that while some trade associations might not like trans-shipping, and that it might penalize some dealers, he "could not see how it would harm the consumer." He contended that any practice which helped reduce the price of product to consumer would receive Justice's sanction, as long as it does not violate any law.

NARDA managing director A. W. Bernsohn, commenting on Barnes' testimony, said: "Trans-shipping results in some distributors being overstocked, others short of merchandise. In turn, the soundness of retail operations is injured." Arthur W. Hooper, exec. director of National Assn. of Electrical Distributors, commented that trans-shipping "destroys channels that are designed to move the most goods to the most people at the least cost." RETMA declined comment.

RCA's new line, introduced this week to field reps & distributors at Barbizon Plaza Hotel, N. Y. (see p. 10), consists of 23 basic black-&-white models and 2 color receivers. Monochrome line is divided into 3 series: Special, comprising 17, 21 & 24-in. tables, 21 & 24-in. consolettes & 21-in. console, with prices ranging from $150 to $260; Super, comprising 21 & 24-in. tables & 21-in. console, priced from $200 to $300; Deluxe, 21 & 24-in. consoles, from $300 to $500. Vertical chassis is incorporated in all Special sets and in some of Super & Deluxe groups. Special series has dials on top of set hidden under trap door. Deluxe sets have illuminated window with magnified channel numbers. Other features are improved anti-noise circuit, increased voltage & improved automatic gain control.

Admiral's new 14-model line, introduced last week at distributors' convention in Chicago (Vol. 11:23), is priced in general range of old line—starting with 17-in. ebony metal table model at $130 and going up to 27-in. open-face blonde console at $425. The 21-in. table series starts at $180 for metal cabinet, consoles at $230 for open-face walnut. Only 24-in. sets are mahogany tables at $290, "laydown" mahogany console at $400, blonde $420. A 21-in. combination is priced at $400 in mahogany, $420 in blonde. Optional uhf tuners are $25 extra.

Zenith's new line, introduced this week to distributors at Chicago's Conrad Hilton Hotel, had virtually no change in prices from old line. The 17-in. table models start at $150, 21-in. table at $170, 21-in. consoles at $250, 24-in. tables at $290, 24-in. consoles at $380. At top of line is 27-in. 3-way combination with "Flash-Matic" remote control feature (see p. 10), priced at $1400.

New Westinghouse line, unpriced yet and currently being shown distributors at regional meetings, won't be made public until July 24—but gen. sales mgr. Dan D. Halpin says it contains fewer models and will offer better discounts to dealers. First quarter TV sales, he said, were "substantially ahead" of same 1954 period, radio sales up 17%.

Picture tube sales in first 4 months totaled 3,427,805, valued at $67,076,542, compared to 2,690,519 worth $56,-989,867 in first 4 months of 1954, reports RETMA. April sales were 788,317 worth $14,620,075, compared to 772,257 at $17,246,843 in 5-week March and 727,655 at $14,994,779 in April 1954. Receiving tube sales in first 4 months were 152,762,273, valued at $111,506,758, compared to 106,026,-920 worth $78,560,440 in first 4 months of 1954. April sales were 35,426,153 at $26,779,586 vs. 41,080,881 at $29,-922,192 in March and 29,640,942 at $21,697,489 in April 1954.

What's the cost of operating a TV set? There's no official data on subject, but anti-subscription TV group known as Joint Committee on Toll TV (see p. 1) comes up with estimate of $87.01 as average annual cost. It breaks it down thus: receiver depreciation, $48, assuming average $240 set totally depreciates in 5 years; service calls, $20, based on Nov. 1954 Videotown survey and other industry sources; power consumption, $13.01, based on data from U of Illinois electrical engineering dept.; installation, antennas & miscellaneous equipment, $6.

Proposed big appliance consolidation involving RCA, Sears, Whirlpool, Seeger Refrigerating Co. and perhaps others (Vol. 11:22) still awaits opinion from Justice Dept. on its legality. Elisha Gray II, pres. of Whirlpool, denied reports his company's merger with Seeger is imminent, as first step in multi-faceted consolidation. He said he still stands on his earlier statement to us that he would not "bet a nickel" on the outcome of any "exploratory talks" his company has been conducting with several firms.

Financial & Trade Notes: General Instrument Corp. sales for fiscal year ended Feb. 28, 1955 were $22,795,029 vs. record $32,502,305 in preceding year, drop being attributed to reduced civilian and defense volume and lower prices due to intensified competition. Net loss for year after Federal tax credits was $412,220 vs. net profit of $926,903 ($1.13 per share) in preceding year. Consolidated balance sheet shows cash almost equalling total liabilities after prepayment of $1,250,000 in long-term obligations; total current assets of $6,410,931, total current liabilities $1,781,969, net working capital $4,628,962. New plants are now operating in Waterloo, Ont. and Statesboro, Ga., and on May 17 company entered agreement to acquire Automatic Mfg. Co., Newark.

Stockholders have been asked to approve, at June 27 annual meeting, proposed acquisition of Automatic, whose shielded I.F. transformer is sold under K-Tran trademark, in exchange for 555,000 shares of authorized but unissued General Instrument stock, to be added to the 818,273 now outstanding. It's proposed to add to General Instrument board Martin H. Benedek, Automatic pres.; Moses Shapiro, Automatic exec. v.p.; and Alexander P. & Henry Hirsch, Automatic directors, who are also chairman & pres., respectively, of Welbilt Corp., N. Y., manufacturer of ranges and air-conditioning equipment.

Proxy report shows Automatic's 5-year average annual sales (1950-54) were $8,661,697, average net profit after taxes $462,008 (83¢ per share); that General Instrument's average annual net sales for virtually same period were $26,016,613, profit $381,396 (47¢); that GI chairman Abraham Blumenkrantz, holder of 12,000 shares, drew remuneration of $54,000 last year while pres. Monte Cohen (3718 shares) drew $55,000; that Automatic pres. Martin Benedek's remuneration last year was $58,096 and exec. v.p. Moses Shapiro's $45,192. Automatic's plants in Newark and Beckley, W. Va. employ about 1150.

Emerson Radio net earnings were $1,111,981 (57¢ a share) for first 6 months ended April 30, first half of fiscal year, vs. $947,515 (49¢) in like 1954 period. Before-tax profit was $2,197,709 vs. $1,648,034. Revenue figures were unannounced. Pres. Benjamin Abrams attributed profit increase to "wide acceptance of the new transistor pocket radio [and] improved business in air conditioners." New small radios are being made at rate of 1100 daily, he said.

IT&T, with no breakdowns for Capehart-Farnsworth or Farnsworth Electronics Co. divs., reports consolidated net income of $5,253,846 (73¢ a share) on sales of $94,545,-153 in first quarter vs. $4,855,103 (68¢) on $78,705,955 in first 1954 quarter. Quarterly report includes accounts of German subsidiaries for first time since 1939.

Dividends: Collins Radio "A" & "B" (new), 35¢ payable July 29 to stockholders of record July 15; American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, 25¢ July 20 to holders June 24; IT&T, 30¢ July 15 to holders June 17; Aircraft Radio, 20¢ Aug. 12 to holders July 22.

Muter Co. sales in first 4 months of 1955 were $4,236,-000 vs. $4,288,000 same 1954 period; profit was $114,780 vs. $134,728. Dividend was omitted by board at this week's meeting, last having been 15¢ in Dec.

More trade predictions: RETMA chairman Max Balcom, in panel at RETMA of Canada convention, forecast retail sales of 6,700,000 monochrome TVs this year at factory value of $900,000,000 vs. 7,300,000 at factory value of $1.06 billion last year; in 1959, he foresees retail sales of 6,900,000 at factory value of $1.2 billion, color accounting for about ⅓. By 1965, retail sales should run 7,400,000 sets annually, he figured, with factory billings $1.5 billion. He said under 35,000 color sets would be made this year.

PEERING INTO FUTURE of TV and other media, U of Illinois' Prof. Dallas W. Smythe, who heads its Institute of Communications Research and once was an FCC official, agrees with our predictions for 1965—about 1000 TV stations, serving 58,000,000 homes, with more than 90% saturation (Vol. 11:21). Some of his other predictions in June 6 address to Advertising Federation of America at Chicago:

Programming: All in color, from 3 live networks and tape transcriptions. "The programs of 1965 may bear only a distant resemblance to the programs of today. Long before 1965, Hollywood will have been integrated into the making of TV programs, as well as continuing to supply theatrical exhibitors."

Newspapers: Probably relatively unchanged 10 or even 20 years from now—based on the assumption "that none of the major companies in the electronic media undertakes a massive invasion of the newspaper field through aggressive promotion of broadcast facsimile. Were they to push facsimile receivers as they did TV receivers, the market for broadcast newspapers could be created within a relatively few years." Facsimile newspaper transmitting stations could be set up for as little as $50,000, compared to the multi-million dollar investment required for a big-city newspaper.

Tomorrow's media users: Based on census forecasts, in the next 10 years there will be substantially more consumers among 5-14 age group, retired people and 15-20 group, in that order—with advertisers paying much more attention to needs of children. With coming of automatic factories, "tomorrow's media should look forward to serving the needs and interests of a larger population for more hours per week than they now serve a smaller population."

Among Dr. Smythe's more intriguing technical predictions: Within next 10 years, the TV telephone, probably in color (now being developed by AT&T). "If man-made satellites are feasible for military purposes, why should we not look forward to the possibility of getting complete coverage of the globe through TV transmitters installed on such satellites?"

NARTB code review board starts 13-week campaign to "tell every American family of their role in the TV code," mailing promotion kit to its 263 subscribers. It contains a slightly revised Seal of Good Practice, slides, sound film, brochure, etc. In accompanying letter, pres. Harold Fellows said: "Through our own medium . . . I am hopeful that we will convince viewers that they themselves determine the nature of TV programming."

Society of Television Lighting Directors is newly chartered group formed to "exchange ideas, discuss new equipment and set up standards." Members are 82 network lighting directors from east and west coast. Salvatore Bonsignore is chairman; Leland Watson, secy; Syd Samuels, treas. Mailing address is 119 Puritan Ave., Forest Hills, N. Y.

Upcoming Senate hearing: Communications subcommittee under Sen. Pastore (D-R. I.) June 21-22, on 2 bills requested by FCC—S-1549, to permit Commission to levy small fines, and S-1456, to modify "protest" procedure.

Boomerang: Sir Robert A. Watson-Watt, British inventor of radar who now is chairman & pres. of Logistics Research Inc., Redondo Beach, Cal., recently paid $12.50 speeding ticket in Canada. He was trapped by police radar.

Barnard College, collaborating with NBC, is conducting 5th annual Summer Institute of Radio & Television June 27-Aug. 5 in NBC's N. Y. studios.

Sample color sets using Lawrence 1-gun tube were demonstrated to Paramount Pictures pres. Barney Balaban this week, and he said he was "delighted" with results, convinced they can be mass-produced to sell for less than $500—perhaps as little as $400. He said they produced excellent color when compared simultaneously with receivers using 3-gun tubes. Before long, he said, set will be demonstrated to industry and full details will be disclosed. Paramount has no plans to make tubes or sets, he stated, "unless we have to." Set uses vertical chassis, has 26 tubes including 21-in. rectangular glass kine, 2 rectifiers. Balaban said tube complement can be reduced to 19 or 21. "It's a black-&-white set with color added," he declared, "rather than a color set with black-&-white added—which is what the other sets are."

James C. Petrillo's AFM, once the bete noir of the broadcasting industry, had none other than RCA-NBC chairman David Sarnoff as its main convention speaker in Cleveland this week—first representative of business management ever to address it. Said Sarnoff: "Together, we have made America a nation of music lovers," noting that more people attend classical concerts in a year (35,000,000) than baseball games (15,000,000) and that the music boxoffice is $50,000,000 vs. baseball's $40,000,000. As for labor-management relations, Gen. Sarnoff said the day of "warrior leaders" is past. This is an age for "economic statesmanship," he said — for understanding and adjustment required by great technoligical development and rapid change. Note: TV-radio are still biggest income source for AFM members, convention was told; radio networks & stations accounted for $16,887,000, TV for $7,721,000 last year. This doesn't include sums spent for musicians on TV films, while record making accounted for another $3,651,000, transcription companies for $1,330,000.

Bill implementing CBS pres. Frank Stanton's request for amendment of Communications Act, to permit series of electronic "Lincoln-Douglas" debates by Presidential candidates of 2 major parties on TV in 1956 (Vol. 11:22), will be offered by Rep. Harris (D-Ark.), who heads House communications subcommittee which may hold hearings on subject this summer. Dr. Stanton's amendment, which has been forwarded to Senate & House Commerce Committees, would remove necessity of granting equal time to candidates of all minority parties.

TV applications on file with FCC now total 147, including 16 for uhf. Only one filed this week was for Ch. 11, Caguas, P.R., by owners of New Orleans' uhf WJMR-TV. Same group this week dropped application for Ch. 3 in Mayaguez, is negotiating to buy 30% of Mayaguez CP-holder WORA-TV (Ch. 5). [For details, see TV Addenda 20-V herewith; for complete listings of all grants, new stations, applications, etc., see TV Factbook No. 20 with Addenda to date.]

WEHT, Henderson, Ky. (Ch. 50) has applied for permission to buy H. M. Bitner's WEOA (250-watts, 1400 kc, CBS) in neighboring Evansville, Ind., for $116,000. WEOA, one of 3 Evansville competitors for Ch. 7, lost initial decision (Vol. 10:41) and Bitner now plans to drop TV application. March 31 WEHT balance sheet lists $234,535 total assets, $294,121 liabilities, with $100,000 capital stock.

Report on new AT&T charges for off-air pickup last week (Vol. 11:23) was erroneous in one respect. The charge of $81,865 is reduced by 1/36th for each month of use. Hence, customer who uses service for 3 years pays none of it, pays only monthly $4640 charge.

Subscription TV: Summaries of Comments Filed with FCC

(Docket No. 11279)

Industry Responses as Requested in FCC Public Notice 55-165 of Feb. 11, 1955 Submitted up to June 9, 1955

Notice of Proposed Rule-Making Published in Full Text by Television Digest as Special Report, Feb. 12, 1955

AMERICAN BROADCASTING CO.—Not only does FCC lack authority to authorize subscription TV, argues 32-p. printed document, but, if authorized, "pay TV would destroy free TV." The network "sees no reason, in view of the tremendous strides made by free TV in a few short years, of conferring on private persons the right to exact a toll on what the public sees over frequencies which the public itself owns." Problem of obtaining time clearances is already "the major obstacle to the expansion of free TV." With existing stations free to "transmit garbled programs," clearance problem for sponsored programs would be aggravated.

Loss of outstanding free-TV programs to toll TV would be reflected in poorer free programs, and advertisers would gravitate to subscription TV—which "would not long forego the opportunity to tap a fertile source for additional revenue." If fee TV were successful, it would demand more and more time, leaving less and less for free TV, with Commission helpless to stem the tide.

Specific arguments of subscription proponents are answered thus: (1) Pay TV won't result in "additional" programs or "supplementary" fare—"the public will merely be required to pay for what they now see free." (2) Cultural programs won't be presented until "pay TV has most of the broadcast day and existing facilities to itself." Only shows which bring in the maximum amount of money will be offered. (3) Argument that fee TV will encourage new station construction and help uhf is "sucker bait." Subscription TV will naturally gravitate to stations with biggest audience and may "sound the death knell" of uhf. (4) "There is no concept in our theory of free enterprise which bestows a 'right to try' any and all schemes for the exploitation of public property."

Address: 7 W. 66th St., N. Y. Counsel: McKenna & Wilkinson, 1735 DeSales St. NW, Washington, and Geraldine Zorbaugh, ABC gen. counsel.

AMERICANS FOR DEMOCRATIC ACTION (ADA)—Favors pay TV if there is assurance that it will not interfere with free programs, will provide new and additional programs, will produce "no evils of monopolistic control." It states: "With proper governmental safeguards, subscription TV does offer promise of halting the present monopolistic trend in commercial broadcasting under which 2 networks and a limited number of large-market vhf outlets control and profit from the most lucrative programming." It sees "nothing inconsistent with the American system of broadcasting" provided toll TV offers additional programs from additional stations "such as uhf commercial stations and educational stations which could not otherwise exist." It recommends that pay TV be limited temporarily to uhf stations, on a trial basis.

Address: 1341 Connecticut Ave. NW, Washington (Edward D. Hollander, national director).

WALTER BARNEY—Claims to have an "improved card-actuated decoding system for use in conjunction with a 'scrambled' picture," employing magnetic characteristics. Estimates subscriber's unit will cost $25; station equipment, $5000; auditing system for 200,000 cards, $25,000. Short brief does not identify principal.

Counsel: Elliott & Pastoriza, 225 Santa Monica Blvd., Santa Monica, Cal.

JOSEPH BRENNER (Attorney)—Proposes in 7-p. brief: (1) Subscription TV be permanently limited to uhf stations. (2) FCC require all decoder devices to include uhf tuners. (3) No particular decoding method or device should be specified. (4) Commission require all stations to meet obligations to public on free basis, using fee TV only as additional service. (5) No restriction be placed on advertising on pay TV. (6) Multiplexed sound be authorized for subscription transmissions, permitting non-paying viewers to hear music or other aural programming, or promotional material about the pay program, at the same time subscription program is being carried. Eventually, subscription TV might use both channels to provide binaural sound. Ex-FCC attorney Brenner also filed 3-p. petition on behalf of CP-holder KBAY-TV, San Francisco (Ch. 20) urging fee TV as method of supporting small uhf stations specializing in matters of interest to local communities.

Address: 321 S. Beverly Dr., Beverly Hills, Cal.

CENTRAL BROADCASTING CO. (WEAU-TV, Eau Claire, Wis.)—Small-market stations, which have been unable to participate substantially in expenditures of network and national spot advertisers, will benefit especially from subscription TV, says 12-p. brief signed by pres. Walter C. Bridges. FCC can safeguard free TV by proscribing pay TV during certain time segments. Pointing to plight of uhf stations, brief says "it is apparent that there is insufficient economic support from advertising for the kind of national TV service envisioned by the Commission" in allocating over 2000 channel assignments to TV, taken up thus far by only 415 commercial and 13 educational stations. Subscription TV offers "reasonable source" of adequate economic support for a truly national TV system. "There is nothing legally improper or 'un-American' about a system requiring the entertainment consumer to pay . . ."

Counsel: Scharfeld, Jones & Baron, National Press Bldg., Washington.

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM—Though CBS asserts "we believe that there is real likelihood that pay TV would not succeed at all," 69-p. printed brief states that if pay-as-you-see TV should succeed, such "success would be disastrous to the public interest." Arguments are devoted to: "blackout" of channels now "dedicated to the use of the entire public," "siphoning" of free audience so that "pay TV would be able to bid away from free broadcasting any attraction that it wanted" and a "divisiveness" which would make family pocketbook determine extent of viewing and listening, destroying "the broad democratic basis of present-day TV." Among arguments:

While public has invested $13½ billion in sets and servicing, it pays less than 1¢ per program per home. Attacking Zenith's claim that public ultimately pays for sponsored TV, CBS says: "It is a truism that the public bears the cost of the entire national economy, and, in this sense, it pays for admission to our national parks, for walking on paved streets and for going to museums." Stating that economics would drive pay TV to seek the most popular free programs, CBS says it's inevitable that blackout of even a few markets to advertisers will start cycle of destruction of networks and favorite programs as well as little that it doesn't now receive—simultaneously charging public for fare it now enjoys.

Brief analyzes in detail the "bait" offered by proponents: first-run movies, Broadway plays, sports, cultural and educational programs, more stations, elimination of advertising. Conclusion is that pay-TV would offer public very little that it doesn't now receive—simultaneously depriving it of much of what it now enjoys.

It's suggested that FCC is obligated to authorize pay-TV on wired systems first. An "experiment" on stations, CBS says, would cause "incalculable" damage from which it would take years to recover. FCC's authority to grant commercial pay-TV operation is questioned and it's urged that express Congressional approval be sought.

Address: 485 Madison Ave., N. Y. Counsel: Rosenman, Goldmark, Colin & Kaye, 575 Madison Ave., N. Y. (Sydney M. Kaye, Ambrose Doskow); CBS (Julius F. Brauner, Thomas K. Fisher, Leon R. Brooks).

CONNECTICUT RADIO FOUNDATION (uhf grantee WELI-TV, New Haven, Conn.)—Readopts position taken in pleading filed Aug. 7, 1953, favoring authorization of pay TV on uhf.

Counsel: Dow, Lohnes & Albertson, Munsey Bldg., Washington (Thomas J. Dougherty).

GULF TELEVISION CO. (KGUL-TV, Galveston, Tex.)—"Proposal is so revolutionary and so important to the American people that the entire matter of policy should be referred to Congress," states 13-p. brief signed by Paul E. Taft, pres. Public bought its TVs in reliance on free broadcasting, and pay-TV is "such a departure from past and present practices as to raise the question of whether the Federal Govt. is keeping faith with the people." If adopted, govt. regulation will be necessary to protect public from "rate-gouging." Subscription TV "means a metamorphosis of TV broadcasting from a competitive industry to a governmentally-controlled industry."

Counsel: Scharfeld, Jones & Baron, National Press Bldg., Washington.

HICKORY HILL BROADCASTING CO. (radio WTWA, Thomson, Ga.)—Owner Edgar Kobak, onetime Mutual pres. and NBC v.p., urges: (1) Toll radio be considered. (2) Hearings covered by TV-radio. (3) Investigation into how charges would be made and who would be paid. (4) Study of whether Govt. should charge for licenses. (5) A look into the rights of set owners who now pay "very large sums annually" for maintenance, electricity, etc. (6) Consideration of pay-TV effect on a national emergency—whether it would "handcuff the greatest means of mass communications."

HOUSTON POST CO. (KPRC-TV)—U. S. telecasters in last 7 years have built up, with advertising support, "the greatest system of TV anywhere in the world," states v.p.-gen. mgr. Jack Harris in 3-p. brief which objects to "such a contracting and delimiting factor as pay-as-you-see TV." Under toll system proposed, "the more successful the plan, the larger portion of time will be blacked out on the sets of those who do not subscribe . . . millions of people have spent several hundred dollars each for TV sets [and] bought these sets under the supposition that the programs would be free. These people might feel short-changed if they had now to start paying for their home entertainment, or find that their sets were of use only part of the time unless they paid additional fees."

Counsel: Miller & Schroeder, National Press Bldg., Washington.

INTERMOUNTAIN BROADCASTING & TV CORP. (KTVT & radio KDYL, Salt Lake City)—Submitted one-paragraph statement disagreeing with NARTB's position on pay TV, saying it "wishes to make clear that the views expressed [by NARTB] are not the views of this station." Stations are 80% owned by Time Inc., 20% by G. Bennett Larson, pres., who signed statement.

INTERNATIONAL TELEMETER CORP.—Owned 80% by Paramount Pictures Corp., operator of KTLA, Los Angeles, company's 82-p. printed brief gives views of sole movie producer among those offering comments. Basic thesis is that "the tremendous cost of motion picture production completely precludes the possibility that any new or current motion pictures could ever be presented on so-called 'free TV'" and that "many millions of TV viewers throughout the country would be completely satisfied to pay a small amount to see these new or current motion pictures in the comfort of their own homes." It's stated that toll TV would stimulate theatre movie exhibition and improve TV advertising techniques—making for a "competitive co-existence in which the public would be the beneficiary"—and that broadened economic base "will rescue for the public the many entertainment events now lost or soon to be lost to sponsored TV."

Prosperity of theatre boxoffice will continue, it's said, because only theatres can provide latest technical advantages while TV standards are "frozen". Brief says pay-as-you-see TV will make more stations economically feasible and aid uhf. As for legality of toll TV, document states that advertiser-supported TV-radio was result of "natural development of the industry rather than the product of Congressional or regulatory measures" and that pay-see would not be a common carrier.

Half of brief is devoted to diagrams and tables covering economics of sponsorships and technical description of system—including first description of "marquee" technique, which provides 2 pictures on same channel by a sort of picture multiplexing arrangement. Using this plan, viewers who haven't paid for the subscription program would see a "marquee" or billboard, advertising the subscription attraction. When coin is inserted, "marquee" would be replaced by the pay-TV program. Telemeter says this 2-picture, 2-sound channel system can be put on single 6-mc channel by principle of "frequency interleaving."

Addresses: International Telemeter Corp., 2000 Stoner Ave., W. Los Angeles, Cal.; Paramount Pictures Corp., 1501 Broadway, N. Y. Counsel: Arnold, Fortas & Porter, 1229 Nineteenth St. NW, Washington (Paul A. Porter, Harry M. Plotkin).

JERROLD ELECTRONICS CORP.—Manufacturer of community antenna equipment and operator of community systems, in 22-p. statement, alleges: "(1) The scrambled broadcast technique is technically and economically unsound. In addition, it represents a most serious threat to basic concepts of American radio and TV broadcasting. (2) The only practical way to bring subscription TV programming to the American public is by means of wire, utilizing technical facilities similar to those now widely used by cable community TV systems. Without disturbing any established principles of broadcasting, tests to determine public acceptance of subscription TV can be launched immediately in areas already wired. Widespread extension of the service can thus be made rapidly and economically, if public demand so indicates."

Company claims that any scrambling system can be "broken with ridiculous ease," inviting "bootlegging" of pay-TV programs, but that wired system would preserve security of pay system. Says metropolitan areas can be wired at average cost of $45-$75 per home, that Jerrold is prepared to cooperate in tests immediately. Included is analysis of coding and decoding principles, by research v.p. Donald Kirk.

Address: 23rd & Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia (Milton J. Shapp, pres.). Counsel: Welch, Mott & Morgan, 710 Fourteenth St. NW, Washington (E. Stratford Smith).

JOINT COMMITTEE ON TOLL TV (also known as Committee Against Pay-as-You-See TV)—167-p. printed brief contends:

(1) FCC has no legal authority to approve subscription TV, but whether or not it does, it should first obtain approval of Congress because "the Communications Act was enacted and amended in the light of the existing pattern of an advertiser-supported broadcast industry, and it does not afford adequate basis for authorizing subscription TV."

(2) Pay-TV isn't in public interest, should be denied.

(3) Full evidentiary hearing should be held to obtain testimony under oath and subject to cross-examination.

(4) Some form of toll TV might be desirable: "For example, it is conceivable that a subscription TV proposal to use existing common carrier facilities, in a closed-circuit type of operation, would supplement rather than supplant existing TV service and might, therefore, reasonably be found to be in the public interest."

(5) There's no evidence subscription TV will work, but if it does it will destroy free TV by diverting from it program resources, talent, audiences and income.

(6) Pay TV is no "panacea for the ills of the industry," because it could not succeed if restricted to uhf and because, "with conversion problems of its own, it would be of no immediate aid to conversion-hungry uhf stations."

Brief includes analysis of annual cost to viewer of fee and free TV, breakdown of set ownership by income groups and occupations, analysis of consumer expenditures, growth of newspaper circulation and radio set sales, etc.

Address: 608 Fifth Ave., N. Y. Counsel: Cohn & Marks, Cafritz Bldg., Washington (Marcus Cohn).

NATIONAL ASSN. OF RADIO & TV BROADCASTERS (NARTB)—Calls establishment of fee-TV system in broadcast bands "breach of faith" with set owners and "completely repugnant to the historical concept of public ownership of the air waves" in 37-p. printed brief. Subscription TV would flatly contradict mandate of Communications Act and would in effect require viewer to have a "license" to use his set on certain channels—"private entertainment confined to a privileged few at the overall expense of the American public." Fee-TV could transform whole telecasting system into a "closed-circuit," since "an industry half free and half slave would either not long survive or would eventuate into a system where all broadcasts were directly chargeable to the consumer." Citing FCC's recent decision classifying FM simplex and multiplex systems as non-broadcast services, NARTB says that "if simplex is not broadcasting, then, by no stretch of the imagination can subscription TV be so construed."

Address: 1771 N St. NW, Washington. Staff & Counsel: Thad H. Brown Jr., V. T. Wasilewski & W. R. Powell Jr.

NATIONAL ASSN. FOR BETTER RADIO & TV—Urges "fair trial" for fee TV in 7-p. mimeographed comments, saying it would mean "the viewing audience at home will be the dictator of programming, not advertising agencies or networks anxious to please the sponsors." Of NAFBRAT board members, 26 favor trial, 3 oppose, 15 are undecided.

Address: NAFBRAT, 882 Victoria Ave., Los Angeles (Mrs. Clara S. Logan, pres.).

NATIONAL BROADCASTING CO.—Printed 28-p. brief, first to be released and detailed in Vol. 11:23, pp. 1 & 5, calls pay-TV "narrowcasting," argues that it "violates the American concept of freedom to listen and freedom to look." Institution of pay-TV would have these effects:

(1) Free TV program quality would suffer because diminished set circulation would make sponsorship less attractive to advertiser. (2) Outstanding programs and stars would move from free to pay TV. (3) Sports events would disappear from free TV. (4) Public service programming would be curtailed or abandoned because they wouldn't be profitable on fee TV, and free broadcasters would no longer be able to afford them. (5) Movie industry may gain control of TV programming "as an opportunity to collect billions." (6) Pay TV would black out free TV in millions of homes.

Submitted by: David Sarnoff, chairman, NBC, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, N. Y.

NATIONAL THEATRE ARTS COUNCIL—Representing legitimate stage interests, Council's short mimeographed statement urges adoption of subscription TV because "we feel that home subscription TV will add a new dimension to the entertainment scene which will double or triple production activity in both Hollywood and New York." It claims that pay TV "will give Broadway producers, for the first time, an opportunity to benefit from the mechanical syndication of their own creative efforts."

Address: 130 W. 56th St., N. Y. (Byron Bentley, pres.).

GEORGE W. OVERTON & LAURIN H. HEALY—The principals, attorney and public relations counsel, respectively, suggest that "permission be given to the holders of non-commercial licenses to introduce subscription TV," and that "the rules under which such permission be granted be such as will emphasize the use of the medium for education and group communication, in contrast to maximum audience programs in which they would be competing with commercial networks." Principals state they represent only themselves.

Address: 134 S. LaSalle St., Chicago. Counsel: Taylor, Miller, Busch & Magner, same address.

ROBERT ROBINS—Filing as an individual, Robins says he has "copyright claim of originality and novelty covering the plan of TV transmission of TV programs where the recipients thereof pay for same and which are free from advertisers' sponsorship." Notes that he participated in FCC's TV proceedings in 1936.

Addresses: 8969 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles, and 982 National Press Bldg., Washington.

SKIATRON—With photos & diagrams, 81-p. printed brief stresses superiority of its decoder or unscrambler, which it proposes to sell outright to set owners at $40 to $50 ($25 if mass produced); claims it's simple, easy to attach to existing set, includes uhf converter. It employs card developed with IBM, on which are listed programs for month; card has printed circuits on one side, is slipped into slot to operate set for particular program. Viewer would forward card monthly to local Skiatron franchise holder with check to cover total costs of programs selected (at 25¢ to $2 per show).

Brief asserts subscription TV is not a common carrier, says FCC has authority to permit it, proposes to limit it to uhf for first 3 years "with minor exceptions" because most uhf stations are presently profitless or losing money. System "adds programs", it's claimed, and should not affect commercially sponsored network shows, will not itself carry commercials, offers what public wants but it not now getting because "inherent in sponsored TV is the fact that quality is basically subsidiary to mass appeal."

It's alleged there's "wide public resentment against the quality of commercials now being employed" and Edward T. Bernays surveys are cited to show that "this resentment stems not only from the so-called intellectuals but extends to every type of society and every age group."

Addresses: Skiatron Electric & Television Corp., 30 E. 10th St., N. Y. (Arthur Levey, pres.), owner of patents. Skiatron TV Inc., 665 Madison Ave., N. Y. (Matty Fox, pres.), holder of rights to exploit patents. Counsel: James M. Landis, 230 Park Ave., N. Y.; Lyon, Wilner & Bergson, Wyatt Bldg., Washington, D. C.

STEINMAN STATIONS (WGAL-TV, Lancaster, Pa. & WLEV-TV, Bethlehem, Pa.)—Short brief (4 p.) "views with alarm the adoption of a system which, if successful, will inevitably lead to the substantial reduction if not destruction of 'free' TV." First-run movies would merely be "opening wedge" in forcing ever-increasing number of free programs to become unavailable and today's "almost inexhaustible source of [TV] program material . . . will easily be moved into the category of unavailable TV material by the simple process of commercial bidding." As for legality: "It is our firm conviction that the imposition of a rule which results in depriving a viewer of his present unhampered right to receive a signal . . . unless he has entered into a private contractual relationship with a third party, is unlawful and entirely inconsistent with the statute of the mandate which gave birth to the 'free' system of TV in this country."

Address: WGAL Inc., 21 S. Queen St., Lancaster, Pa. (Clair R. McCollough, pres.). Counsel: George O. Sutton, National Press Bldg., Washington; Duke M. Patrick, Colorado Bldg., Washington.

STORER BROADCASTING CO.—Nation's largest multiple-station owner, Storer submitted brief mimeographed comments against subscription TV, alleging that: (1) FCC "would be over-extending the authority delegated to it by Congress" if it approved pay-TV. (2) Toll TV would "limit the ability of TV broadcasters to serve the public," and destroy "the greatest attribute of free broadcasting—its universality, its ability to reach everybody everywhere, bringing them free entertainment, culture, news, editorial comment, and exchange of ideas." (3) Pay-TV "will add nothing to present programming except a bill" and "may be expected to foster monopoly."

Address: 1177 Kane Concourse, Miami Beach, Fla. Counsel: Dow, Lohnes & Albertson, Munsey Bldg., Washington (Thomas A. Wall); Abiah A. Church, of Storer.

LARRY WOLTERS—TV-radio editor of Chicago Tribune, speaking for himself, favors adoption of toll TV, stating that it offers an "attractive and most worthwhile" supplemental service; that it's no threat to free TV; that it's not un-American. Citing early Zenith test in Chicago, he says public is willing to pay for movies on TV; major boxing events would return to TV; pay TV would "save" baseball for TV. He doubts whether public would pay for Broadway plays or opera.

WACH-TV, Newport News, Va.—Reiterates support of Skiatron petition filed Sept. 13, 1954 asking FCC to amend rules to permit stations to broadcast subscription TV; it would be great help to uhf as well as small-market vhf stations, said original document.

Counsel: Eugene L. Burke & Doris R. Williamson, 821 Fifteenth St. NW, Washington.

KBST-TV, Big Spring, Tex.—Same as WACH-TV, Newport News, Va.; same counsel.

WDSU-TV, New Orleans—Boxoffice TV would be "a highly specialized service directed not to the general public but rather to a relatively limited list of subscribers who choose to pay for that service [and] should accordingly be assigned to frequencies not presently allocated to the free system of TV," states 7-p. legal brief signed by exec. v.p. Robert D. Swezey. "There is an element of custodianship in the present free system which the American people will be most reluctant to supplant or weaken in favor of a cash-&-carry substitute." Fear is expressed that free system will be so weakened as to public service obligations—such as handling of news and controversial subjects, which fee-TV doesn't propose to assume—and that it would have deleterious effect on advertiser-sponsored broadcasting and tend "to siphon off the cream of the programming into the pay-&-see system, leaving to free TV . . . only the routine, drab and pedestrian fare considered unworthy of acquisition by subscription TV." In New Orleans, 52.2% of population in 1950 had annual income less than $2500, and could not be expected to pay for TV shows.

Counsel: Miller & Schroeder, National Press Bldg., Washington.

WSAZ INC. (WSAZ-TV, Huntington, W. Va.)—Short mimeographed comment terms pay-TV proposals "a calculated attempt to supplant the existing nationwide free TV service with a Pay-as-You-See substitute to charge the public for what it is now receiving free," by diverting talent and audiences from free TV. It charges that toll TV won't bring new educational programs nor will it foster construction of new stations, noting that "patent holders" aren't offering to build stations in small markets. Claims pay system will obsolete all sets.

Counsel: Cohn & Marks, Cafritz Bldg., Washington (Leonard H. Marks).

ZENITH RADIO CORP.—72-p. brief, plus engineering supplement, recommends no commercials on subscription programs, ban on charging public for programs now paid for by advertisers, limit of 15% of station broadcast time to subscription shows. Stressed is supplementary nature of subscription system, brief stating "it is utterly naive to assume that subscription TV could obtain public acceptance if it attempted to charge the public for programs now regularly available on a sponsored or sustaining basis."

Included is detailed technical description of Phonevision system and analysis of programs to be sought for subscription shows. Zenith would limit Phonevision operations to "several" markets, to be selected by FCC, for about 18 months following authorization. TV owners would rent decoders for nominal monthly charge, would pay only for shows they watch. Stations could buy or rent subscription programs from national or local organizations. Independent local companies would be licensed to operate Phonevision in various communities.

It's suggested that FCC prohibit purchase of subscription programs from networks: "In this way, the Commission could create a truly competitive situation in which the networks would bend their efforts to producing the best possible advertising programs. At the same time, prohibition of advertising network participation in subscription service would tend to dilute the present 2-network monopoly over programs and revenue . . ."

Addition of subscription programs would enable hundreds of additional stations to operate profitably, it's contended, whereas ⅔ of post-freeze stations now on air are losing money, and only 417 commercial stations (out of 1875 authorized allocations) and only 13 educational (out of 242 allocations) are now on air. Finally, brief says Communications Act contains specific direction that FCC encourage new uses of TV & radio, therefore FCC has "statutory obligation" to approve fee TV.

Addresses: Zenith Radio Corp., 6001 W. Dickens Ave., Chicago (E. F. McDonald Jr., pres.). Teco Inc., 231 S. LaSalle St., Chicago (S. I. Marks, pres.), promoter of Phonevision equipment, granting of franchises, distribution of programs. Counsel: Pierson, Ball & Dowd, Ring Bldg., Washington (for Zenith); Loucks, Zias, Young & Jansky, 1317 F St. NW, Washington (for Teco); Joseph S. Wright, Zenith gen. counsel.

APPEARANCES—Submitting no statements but filing notices of appearance were following: WGAR, Cleveland; WRFD, Worthington, O.; WTOH-TV, Toledo; WBID-TV, Detroit; WKOW-TV, Madison; WCCO-TV, Minneapolis; WSJS-TV, Winston-Salem; WABT, Birmingham; WJIM-TV, Lansing; WMTW, Poland Spring, Me.; WDSM-TV, Superior. (All foregoing filed by counsel Fly, Shuebruk, Blume & Gaguine, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, N. Y. and 1001 Connecticut Ave. NW, Washington.) Appearance also filed by TV Consumers Inc., 519 Main St., E. WORLD WAR III - THE WAR OF WORDS

A Primer on Propaganda

- - - - - - - -

Part I

Background

The Cold War has been declared a way of life. That is one certain development to come out of the Geneva Conferences. Those conferences can be summed up another way - the East and West have mutually decided that it is better to talk than to fight - with nuclear weapons.

The Cold War - the Propaganda War - the War of Words has been with us since the end of World War II, and the Russians are winning it. This war for man's minds can be deadlier for us in the long run than a war with nuclear weapons.

Russia's acknowledged long range strategy - from which she has never deviated - is to dominate the world. She has pursued this policy of world domination relentlessly. The reasons that she is winning are simple. A totalitarian nation must live or die by the power and effectiveness of its propaganda. Add to that its companion techniques of infiltration, subversion and brute diplomacy and you have the arsenal of Russia's weapons in the Word War.

For the Soviets, propaganda is a way of life. For America and the Free World it is not. Also in Russia's favor are a strong sense of history and a generation of experience. Beyond these, Russia invests billions each year in the Propaganda War against our millions.

Propaganda Warfare - Word Warfare - Political Warfare are recognized and used by the Communists as a major weapon in their arsenal for world domination - ranking right along with atom bombs and armies.

America and its people and its government are only now beginning to learn that "propaganda" is not a dirty word but a major weapon that we too must use intensively if we are to survive.

In the headlong armament race we spend in excess of 30 billion dollars each year to maintain our strength and, we hope, our technological leadership over the Russians in the hardware of hot war - atom bombs, global bombers, guided missiles and earth satellites.

Matched against what the Russians invest, proportionately in the Word War and the Armament War, our country is still in the ox-cart stage. One of the basic reasons for this disparity between our efforts and those of the Russians is that we Americans do not know we are being beaten in the Word War nor do we know what the Propaganda War is all about. Not knowing is our own fault.

We have had no basic education on the subject - no primer on propaganda which has drawn the outlines of the struggle in clear and simple terms so that we are capable of understanding what and why we are losing. The consequences must be made apparent - losing the Word War can be as deadly to our survival and that of the Free World as a hydrogen bomb war.

It is even more deadly than a war between the East and West with the new hardware of our times - nuclear weapons - deadlier because it is a creeping paralysis which the Russians are inflicting on the Free World and the neutral nations.

No one can yet judge when our continual losses to the Russians in the Propaganda War will have reached the stage from which we cannot, short of a miracle, hope to maintain our system and our allies as a Free World. Even in a Hot War, an alliance of free men and free nations is always subject to the strains and wranglings and the differences that are inherent in any democratic process.

Recognizing this, Soviet Russia employs relentless pressure against the Free World and that most critical block to our future - the neutral nations - whose fate has yet to be decided. This propaganda war goes on around the clock and around the world. No weakness is too small for the Soviet to exploit. No vacuum created by inaction or indecision in the Free World is too small for the Soviet to fill promptly, viciously and effectively.

The Cold War has been declared a way of life - perhaps for generations. There is wisdom in the unspoken decision of the East and the West - that it is better to talk than to fight. But there can be no wisdom in failing to recognize that a new kind of war is already upon us. This is World War III, Russian style. No matter how we add up the facts, we are losing this struggle.

The Russians have declared that the Iron Curtain will stay where it is. They give very simple reasons why. America has had several hundred years to develop its system to the point where it is successful. The Russians have had only several decades to impose their mastery over their own people and the satellite countries. Until they have several generations behind them, the Russians flatly admit that they cannot afford to expose their own people, those of the captive countries behind the Iron Curtain, and the people of Asia behind the Bamboo Curtain to the "insidious and subversive" propaganda and communications from the West.

In their eagerness for peace, too many American people showed unwise delight when the Russians turned on their charm at Geneva. Unless something drastic and dramatic is done, it may be months or even years before we as a people fully recognize the fact that we face an implacable enemy. We are faced with the "sacred hatred" of all those who are enemies of the Soviet state.

Before it is too late, the American people must have it burned into their minds that "those who wait for the Soviet Union to abandon Communism must wait until the shrimp learns to whistle." In the zigs and zags of Soviet strategy we may yet face what Manuilsky promised as "the most spectacular peace movement on record."

Unless we are aroused as a people and take the most vigorous action to put ourselves ahead in the Word War, we will be in no position to withstand a high powered, long-range peace offensive which the Russians are quite capable of launching. Our epitaph may already be written for us, if we fail to meet this challenge.

It was spoken by Dimitri J. Manuilsky. He was Secretary of the Communist International in 1930 when he made this prophetic promise of things to come: "Our time will come in twenty or thirty years. In order to win we shall need the element of surprise. The bourgeoisie will have to be put to sleep, so we shall begin by launching the most spectacular peace movement on record. There will be electrifying overtures and unheard-of concessions. The capitalist countries --- stupid and decadent --- will rejoice to cooperate in their own destruction. They will leap at another chance to be friends. As soon as their guard is down, we shall smash them with our clenched fists."

RADIO FREE EUROPE IN THE WAR OF WORDS

Part II

Russia cannot move militarily or politically with any surety beyond the Iron Curtain or beyond the Bamboo Curtain until the Kremlin is certain that it moves from stable operational bases. Its satellites must be welded into a single machine that acts at the command of a single master, the Kremlin.

What confronts the free world today are the problems of where and how best to strike back. Where do we throw the weight of our effort? While we are meeting Communist thrusts around the world, as we must, where are the basic weaknesses of the Communist empire? Where can we apply pressure where it will hurt the most?

The Communists' main base of operations -- in war or in peace -- is its immediate empire behind the Iron Curtain.

Unless the satellite nations in that area can be made a solid part of the Soviet monolith -- it stands on clay feet. These satellite nations must be relied upon by the Russians to furnish hundreds of thousands of troops in the event of war. Their factories and their farms must be a dependable major source of Soviet supply. The cowed majority of the people must be so propagandized beyond hope or courage as to be virtual slaves to the Soviets.

The satellite nations along the Iron Curtain represent either stepping stones, or stumbling blocks, to aggressive Communist expansion.

If the free world is to strike back hard -- as it must to survive -- then where are we to hit the hardest? With the Russian people well cowed and subservient, our likeliest target is obvious -- in Russia's own backyard -- in the satellite countries.

How can we keep the farms and factories and satellite manpower from becoming a dependable, productive part of the Soviet war machine?

How can we keep alive courage and hope in captive peoples who are battered by the eternal din of Russian propaganda - - based on hatred for the West, for the free world and for America?

How can we strike fear into the hearts of the police state officials? How can we subvert and destroy the confidence of the captive peoples in their puppet regimes?

The answer is relentless propaganda warfare of our own behind the Iron Curtain. The answer is skillful political warfare, exploiting the weakness of the captive states and their puppet masters.

The answer is a political warfare campaign which builds islands of resistance in the minds of men - - where resistance is hardest to destroy.

The answer is a propaganda barrage wisely designed to encourage passive resistance by the people without exposing them to imprisonment or death.

These are precisely the tactics of the combined political warfare operations now being carried on in the satellite countries by Radio Free Europe and the Free Europe Press.

The U. S. Government must and does have its share in this propaganda picture. The 70 million captive people behind the Iron Curtain want and must have the official U. S. Government voice speaking to them regularly as it does - - several hours a week - - through the Voice of America.

Because of the massive global struggle against Communism, the Voice of America carries its counter propaganda war to 38 countries throughout the world. Its task is an official and strategic one on behalf of the Government of the U. S. and the free world.

In contrast, the most important tactical weapon which the free World now has at its command in the propaganda war is the round-the-clock broadcasting done by the privately-supported Radio Free Europe to the countries of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria.

Its companion operation in combined political warfare is the Free Europe Press which brings another kind of freedom of information to the captive peoples. By use of balloons and leaflets, the broadcasts of Radio Free Europe are buttressed by the printed word from the free world, launched by the Free Europe Press.

Both activities are most effective because they are independent enterprises, unshackled by diplomatic restrictions.

Radio Free Europe is most effective in the satellite countries because the broadcasting is done by respected exiles from these same countries, in their own languages.

Radio Free Europe is effective because of its technical capabilities and a massive concentration of broadcasts that punch through the Iron Curtain and Soviet jammings.

The Free Europe Press is effective because there is no way to stop the wind-borne leaflets from the West which are passed from hand to hand behind the Iron Curtain. Both are critically important to the captive people because they are sponsored by private American citizens, through the Crusade for Freedom.

It all adds up to this: Because of the privately-supported work of Radio Free Europe and the Free Europe Press, America is ahead in the cold war in only one place in the world. Importantly that's the place where it hurts the Communists the most.

Because of the hope and courage and help that they have given to the captive people, 80% of whom hate the Communist regime, American citizens have planted an intellectual and moral time bomb on Russia's own doorstep.

No one knows when or where or how this time bomb will go off. We do know that it is the fate of dictatorship eventually to collapse from within. Truth and hope can trigger this collapse. When this bomb goes off in the Iron Curtain countries, the chain reaction can easily sweep round the world and help destroy the Russian dream of world domination by destroying the Communist empire itself.

WORLD WAR III - THE WORD WAR

Story Outline

* * * * * *

Part III

I. Based on Russian actions and statements since Geneva, the Free World is faced with an intensified cold war. Russia, at least for the time being, has decided it is better to continue the cold war than to turn it into a hot war. Even during the Geneva period Russia made several strategic gains -- arms sales in the Middle East and strengthening of Red China's advantages against Formosa.

II. Soviet Russia will make even greater use in the months ahead of its powerful propaganda complex in combination with subversion, infiltration and power politics to achieve its ends because:

a) the Russian government continues, by its own admission, to be spearheading a world revolution

b) the Kremlin leaders believe destiny is on their side and that capitalism and democracy will fold up eventually under pressure

c) because the Kremlin leaders have been greatly encouraged by the successes which the cold war has brought them over the past ten years -- more than 600,000,000 people -- and continuing unrest and ferment throughout the Free World and the neutral nations.

III. Soviet Propaganda: the apparatus by which the Russians control their global propaganda - "Agitprop", the "Section of Propaganda and Agitation", which is an organ of the Presidium. Agitprop is an elaborate organization with about a dozen branches and sub-sections -- Moscow Central Press, provincial press, publishing houses, films, fictional literature, art affairs (theatre, music, painting, etc..) cultural enlightenment, schools, science, party propaganda, agitation and propaganda. Agitprop does not engage in propaganda itself. Its role is that of planner, supervisor and policeman over the government agencies which do the actual publishing, broadcasting, etc..

a) Internal Propaganda -- much of Agitprop's efforts are aimed at this field which permeates all aspects of Soviet life and touches all media and forms of communication, personal and group contacts.

b) External Propaganda -- Agitprop is the brain center for foreign propaganda. Here it works in cooperation with the Foreign Section of the Communist Party's Central Committee apparatus which in turn supervises the government's Foreign Ministry.

IV. Soviet International Media and Operations

a) Broadcasting, publishing, press and motion pictures

b) Foreign Cultural Relations and Exchange of Persons

c) Propaganda in other communist nations

(1) the Eastern European satellites, including East Germany, have large-scale propaganda programs. Since 1950 the satellites have stepped up the use of external broadcasts from 404 to 885.

d) Communist China: very extensive propaganda program in all areas with close operating ties with the Kremlin

V. Foreign Communist Parties

a) The Comintern (Third International): the organization is propagating Bolshevik doctrine internationally to bring about world revolution.

b) The Underground Communist Network - throughout the Free World

c) The Cominform -- open international organization for world revolution against which President Eisenhower spoke at Geneva.

VI. International Front Organizations, Friendship Societies, etc..

VII. There are two main targets for external Communist propaganda:

a) Free World nations in alliances such as NATO, SEATO, etc.

b) The neutral nations: India, Egypt, etc..

VIII. The Free World propaganda activities are far from being as extensive or as expensive as those of the Communists. They are symbolized best by the activities of the U. S. in the propaganda field:

a) Governmental activities -- primarily U.S.I.A.

(1) Voice of America - the major strategic counter weapon, radio and TV, broadcasting to 38 countries

(2) Information Center Service - libraries, etc...

(3) Cultural Activities - Salute to France, Family of Man Exhibit, etc...

(4) Overseas Trade Fairs - a recent development financed by the President's emergency fund.

(5) International Press Service - wires 7000 words of news and background material to 66 countries each day.

B) The official activities of U.S.I.A. are supplemented in a modest fashion by the overseas information activities of the International Cooperation Administration, the military services, etc.

C) Non-Government Activities

(1) Predominant in this field are the activities of the Free Europe Committee: Radio Free Europe, Free Europe Press, etc., all aimed at the satellite or captive countries of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Bulgaria and Romania (see attached "Radio Free Europe and the War of Words")

(2) The American Committee for Liberation from Bolshevism which broadcasts daily to the USSR in 18 languages from Munich.

(3) U. S. Philanthropic Foundations, i.e. Ford Foundation, Rockefeller Foundation, etc., which have granted considerable sums of money to a wide variety of international programs which, while not direct propaganda as such, enhance America's reputation overseas.

(4) Private U. S. information media which include exported radio and TV programs from the U. S. networks, exported motion pictures, news magazines, and the press wire services (AP, UP, INS) which furnish United States news and information to clients throughout the world.

IX.

IX. How It Adds Up - U. S. Activities have increased somewhat in the past year, but even these increases fail to match current Communist increases. U.S.I.A. was allotted $79 million by Congress for its 1955 program. No fiscal figures are avialable on Communist increases in 1955, but there is strong evidence of operational increases in all areas.

For example, Communist international broadcasting increased in 1954 by 98 hours a week, an all time high. In 1954 the number of delegates travelling to and from Iron Curtain countries almost doubled that of 1953. As against our U.S.I.A. expenditure of $79 million, the Soviet government is known to spend more than $3 billion a year on propaganda activities.

Add up all the U. S. Government and private activities that could be possibly interpreted as direct propaganda and the Russians are outspending us roughly 30 to 1. They have the added advantages of fanaticism, centralized direction and police state control.

Finally, the Russians know the Word War is on - and what its stakes are. The American people are, in the main, blissfully ignorant of the situation they are up against.

AN OUTLINE FOR AN ED MURROW PROGRAM
-- suggested by Fred Thomson

The thesis of this particular outline is: Action is words.

The story goes as follows:

A newspaper editorial asserted recently that the cost of conducting overseas propaganda was staggering, and that the waste was staggering, too. The editorial ended with the comment, "In the struggle against Communism, action is better than words."

This sounds like a profound statement. Frankly, and practically speaking, it is meaningless. People are so conditioned by words from the time they are infants that Pavlov himself - the father of the conditioned reflex theory - said with awe that people's lives are influenced more by words than by the rest of the environment around them. The fact that Pavlov himself was a Russian does not make this less true.

Today, more than ever before, the correct - and practical - way to make this statement is to say that action is words. They are one and the same.

Mr. William Greene, President of the Crusade for Freedom, which supports Radio Free Europe, put it this way:

"If we are to take strong steps against Communism there is nothing more vital for us than the use of words."

Let's see what this means.

At the moment, for example, the Soviets are trying to make Soviet colonies out of Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Romania. They have built an Iron Curtain around 70 million people in these countries and are trying to invest them with the Communist way of looking at things. Nearly all these people detest fiercely the Communist puppet rulers who are taking their orders from the Kremlin. They hate them with an implacable hatred. But people are human. Part of the very business of living means adapting oneself to the environment, no matter how despicable the environment may be. Indeed, if the Soviet tactics were left unchallenged, the people in these countries conceivably could become badly infected with the virus of Communism.

Now the question is this: What is the best possible action which we of the free world can take to save these people? War? If the Russians were to be conquered, then obviously these captive people could be freed. But how can anybody consider global military action in this day and age? Thermonuclear weapons - it is devoutly to be wished - have outlawed military force as a way to settle international problems.

Then what other kind of action can we take? The giving of gifts? It has been wisely said that hunger can drive people to odd extremes. What is the wisdom of providing food and factories and farm equipment to peoples unless these gifts carry with them the kind of meaning we want them to have? It is common knowledge that people who despise the rich uncle can bow and scrape without shame during the brief period that he is passing out gifts.

Even if it were possible to give gifts to the satellites, it would be most unwise from a psychological viewpoint alone. A gift of food or a factory or farm equipment may well provide sustenance. But, if somebody is whispering in the ear of the receiver, these gifts may also provide envy...or resentment for what they may consider is a patronizing attitude...or disdain for what they may come to think is a materialistic way of looking at things.

No. Action - the kind of action that can keep the Satellite peoples favoring the West and disdaining the East - is the action of distributing news...

and truth...and hope...and courage...and faith that the rights of the individual human stand above every right claimed by any totalitarian state.

And this is the kind of action that is being provided by an organization called Radio Free Europe which operates out of a mighty installation in Munich, Germany. This organization, which is supported by the Crusade for Freedom, works night and day to give people faith in their own national heritage, in their own national way of looking at things and thinking, acting -- and a faith in the integrity of every one of the 70 million.

Here are the instruments of this action: powerful radio transmitters. Radio Free Europe has 29 transmitters like these, bigger or smaller. This medium-sized one, at Holzkirchen, Germany, in fact, is almost three times more powerful than the biggest one in the United States. And here is Munich, the hub, through which is funneled news coming from 14 news bureaus in 14 different cities on the Continent; the place where well over 600 publications are monitored continuously; where 47 different Communist radio stations are monitored day and night so that Communist lies can be picked up, so that distortions can be cleared up in broadcasts within minutes after the falsities have been initially distributed.

The effectiveness of Radio Free Europe can and has been measured many, many ways.

It is guided by prominent American citizens, supported by millions of Americans through the Crusade for Freedom, but most of the 1700 personnel are Germans and exiles. The people who plan the actual broadcasts, the people who do the broadcasting themselves are exiles who were respected in their own countries, etc., etc.

And as if this weren't enough action, here is more by the Free Europe Press, a companion operation, also guided by the Free Europe Committee which guides and operates Radio Free Europe. The Free Europe Press sends up thousands of balloons filled with millions of miniature newspapers which are dropped with pinpoint accuracy on towns behind the Iron Curtain. Etc., etc.

Of course, there is the Voice of America, which is a government operation, to supply words to 38 countries - not only unfriendly, but friendly or neutral. The job of Voice of America is to sell the virtues of this country overseas. The job being done by Free Europe Press and Radio Free Europe is to sell the power of America indirectly, that is by creating a belief in the greatness or the virtue of individualism versus the tyranny of a totalitarian state.

And to make the job even more clearly defined, Radio Free Europe and Free Europe Press are concentrating all their efforts on five countries which are particularly likely to respond favorably to this appeal. These countries - Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria are countries all of which once knew freedom and which therefore can be expected to retain a fresh desire for it as long as their spirits continue to be high. And of course that is what Radio Free Europe is determined to see continue.

Final summation: Whenever you hear anyone say that what we need is action instead of words, think twice -- because today action is words.

Dear Mr. Murrow:-

Tuesday night I concluded listening to the second of your "See It Now" series on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and my congratulations on a job well done. From my viewpoint your program far surpassed the mere furnishing the American public with entertainment and education.

As a result of your talks I am now extremely impressed with the competence of the Committee and have reached the conclusion that the foreign relations of our Country are in excellent hands.

If you were responsible for having many other Americans reach the same conclusion then there will be less hysteria and more confidence within the American public - truly a seriously needed accomplishment for which you and your associates are to be congratulated.

Keep up your good work.

Very truly yours,

Dear Ed:

The White House Conference on Education was concluded last night. My fever is coming down hourly.

As I look back on the Conference, it seemed to me to be successful. As one of the important factors in this success, I want to give recognition to your wonderful 90-minute TV program. As you know, the program was not only seen by many of our participants when it came over the air on Sunday night, but, because many of the participants had been traveling or conferring at the time of the broadcast, your network provided a special rerun of the film at the Wednesday night get-together of the Conference group.

Comments were uniformly favorable, and they should have been. The program is a great credit to you and to your network, and the best statement regarding the importance of citizens' interest in their public schools that I ever expect to see.

Dear Mr. Dean:

SEE IT NOW has a most difficult labor relations problem in the matter of Maurice Reitberger. He has been with SEE IT NOW virtually from the beginning as a soundman working for us in Europe andAsia and is conceivably the best soundman in the business.

For the past six months, Murrow, Friendly and our entire administrative staff have been trying to get Reitberger the peripheral benefits that CBS employees of much less importance and skill automatically get. As a matter of fact, Reitberger's son, who is an assistant cameraman for CBS in Paris and who can't begin to shine his father's shoes, already receives these benefits.

Murrow and I beseech you to reconsider his case. He has travelled more than a quarter of a million miles for us. He has risked his life for us. He is one of us. To make the position even more complicated, Ed assured him last year in Algiers that this matter would be taken care of.

We regret having to concern you with what must be a detail in the total complex picture of the CBS television network, but to Maurice currently sweating it out in the jungles of Burma, this is a big thing. Ed is going to see him in Rangoon next week, and I think Ed would like nothing better as a Christmas bonus than to be able to tell Maurice that he is in.

In reference to your memorandum of September 14, I did not realize that we had not received permission from Mr. Kaye for Shulton to be a sponsor of the SEE IT NOW program which you are doing with him. I can see the necessity for Shulton to be allowed to announce its presentation and to merchandise it at the earliest possible moment and, therefore, I wonder why we cannot go to Kaye now in order to get his approval on Shulton as well as Pan American or other clients who might be interested in this sponsorship. Certainly I can imagine no reason why Kaye would be opposed to Shulton as a sponsor.

As to the honorarium, I am not too clear on the details of the contract we made with Kaye, but it is my impression that we agreed to turn over to UNICEF any profits which we made on the use of the material using his services. If my recollection is correct, UNICEF would be entitled to all sums which we collect from sponsors on this particular program in excess of our costs; further, that if we did not cover our costs on the initial showing, we might recoup such loss through later use of the material as well as a profit which in turn would be given to UNICEF.

I am sending a copy of your memorandum and of this one to Mr. Van Volkenburg and Mr. Hylan with the request that they get in touch with you so that they can give you a list of sponsors which might be submitted immediately to Mr. Kaye for his approval.

Again referring to Mr. Murrow's memorandum to me dated September 1 about the postponement of SEE IT NOW's second show, "The New Navy", I had a meeting this morning with Dr. Stanton, Mr. Gamarle and Mr. Cowan. It was decided that it would be ill-advised to schedule "The New Navy" for November 11 because on that date we have already placed the Air Force show, which will be of an hour's duration, starting at 6:00 PM.

It was therefore agreed that "The New Navy" would be scheduled for the following week, November 18, in conformance with Mr. Murrow's suggestion that "The New Navy" be postponed for either one or two weeks. After "The New Navy" program, SEE IT NOW will go back to its previously set schedule of the first Sunday in each month. Accordingly, the third SEE IT NOW program, the Danny Kaye show, will be broadcast on December 2 as originally planned.

You requested a "status report" on SEE IT NOW.

The first program scheduled for October 7th is under the working title, "Week of Decn." It will deal with the background of the current crisis, include exclusive interviews with President Nasser, Prime Minister Eden, Secretary of State Dulles, the President of the Suez Canal Company, Canal pilots and technicians. We will make an effort to illustrate not only how the crisis arose, but its consequences and the changes that have occurred in the method of handling this type of dispute in the course of the last twenty-five years.

2. "The Secret Life of Danny Kaye"

The shooting has been completed. We have cut the film down to about three hours. I understand this one is tentatively scheduled for December 2nd.

3. "The New Navy"

Shooting on this is practically completed. The Navy has agreed to release some unpublished footage. We have great hopes for this one.

4. "Automation"

About one-third of the shooting is finished, including some footage on strikes caused by automation in England.

5. "A Nation Changes"

We have selected Reno, and the crew starts shooting there this week.

6. "The Outer Ramparts"

The static radar warning system. The "Sage" computer. We have done enough research and shooting so that this one can be regarded as definite.

7. "Main Street, U.S.S.R."

You are familiar with the negotiations in connection with this one. I have, as instructed, queried the State Department regarding the feasibility of reciprocity and will advise you when a reply is received.

8. "A Cousin Comes Calling"

This was the proposal that Rebecca West do a reporting job on this country specifically the South. We have stood this one down for the time being.

9. "Old Folks At Home"

A study of our aging population, employment, housing, recreation, etc. We are convinced there is a good piece here, but haven't researched or shot enough to be willing to label it as definite.

10. "Who Owes What?"

A proposed study of debt. We are now inclined to think that this one is just too big and at the same time too delicate to handle, although we are still researching it.

11. "The Not-So-Secret Weapon"

A study of Russian propaganda, particularly film and radio. We have seen enough footage to be convinced there is a show here, but a definite decision on doing it ought to be postponed until we see what changes, if any, occur in the relations between this country and the U.S.S.R.

12. "Neighbors to the South"

We are convinced there are two one-hour pieces to be done on Latin America, but have not yet come up with the proper formula or personnel, and have not established a shooting schedule.

Regarding the November 4th program which we discussed yesterday, I would like to make this comment. The report on "The New Navy" will be ready by then, and I think it would be good; however, I feel strongly that we would appear ridiculous to schedule such a program at a time when the nation's attention is centered on politics. Perhaps you would care to consider scheduling it a week or two later, even though it would be breaking the pattern of the first Sunday in each month.

The "Saga of Satchmo" is practically completed, no release date has been set, it runs slightly under an hour. We should be able to screen the final version for you if you care to see it shortly after my return from Cairo, which should be not later than September 10th.

This is the first opportunity I have had to read your memorandum of May 3 addressed to Mr. Hylan. In it you give a brief sketch of contemplated SEE IT NOW programs for the 1956-57 season. It is my first reaction that all of the topics would make very good television fare with the exception of: No. 7,"A Cousin Comes Calling"; No. 9, "Who Owes What?"; No. 10, "The Not-So-Secret Weapon". I have certain misgivings about these which I would like to discuss with you. I also have a small question about No. 3, "Automation".

As you know, I am particularly enthusiastic about additional shows of the nature of the one on Africa. I notice in your list that you have under No. 11, "Neighbors to the South", and this one, it seems to me, could almost be broken up into two shows because of the vast amount of territory that has to be covered.

You have another one, "A Nation Chooses", which is down this line since in this one you plan to cover a place such as Burma or Afghanistan. Some of the other places coming to my mind in which I am sure the American public would have a deep interest are: Japan -- this should be particularly interesting; Formosa; Dutch East Indies; and Indo-China.

May 3, 1956

Mr. Paley asked me to give you a brief sketch of contemplated SEE IT NOW programs for the '56-'57 season. All titles are working titles. The order of listing is not necessarily that in which the shows will be presented. It is, of course, impossible to tell, so far in advance, what events may demand coverage; but here is our thinking at the moment.

1. "The Secret Life of Danny Kaye"

This will be Mr. Kaye's first major television appearance. We have camera crews with him in Italy, Yugoslavia, Turkey, Israel, Spain, and the West coast of Africa. He is traveling and entertaining on behalf of UNICEF. His material ranges all the way from a full dress performance by Kaye in Ankara with Turkish children, an interview with Tito, crippled Italian children teaching Kaye to play soccer, a typical Kaye performance near the Sea of Galilee, etc. It is our opinion, on the basis of the footage so far received, that this will be a program, or perhaps two, that may really be called unprecedented. It has humor, pathos, and information.

2. "The New Navy"

Naval experts are quietly agreed that the advent of atomic power and nuclear weapons have combined to produce a greater change in naval thinking and strategy than was occasioned by the introduction of steam or armor. This report will be a definitive and exciting examination of these changes under the guidance of Admiral Arleigh Burke, Chief of Naval Operations; one of the most forceful and eloquent spokesmen the Navy has ever had. This will include entirely new footage on the atomic powered submarine, NAUTILUS, underwater test-runs of the experimental submarine, ALBACORE, which travels as fast submerged as a destroyer on the surface. We will show the Navy's new guided missile launching ships, the carrier, FORRESTAL in action, and the Navy has indicated it will de-classify certain weapons and installations which have hitherto been restricted.

3. "Automation"

An examination in layman's language, not only of the physical and economic implications but also the sociological problems that will be raised. Research on this project is well advanced. The pictorial possibilities are almost literally unlimited, and we have been assured of the cooperation not only of scientists but of the leaders of industry and labor as well.

4. "A Nation Chooses"

A detailed study of an uncommitted nation in the process of making up its mind whether to move into the Russian or Western orbit. What is being done by the Russians in the way of technical aid, cultural relations, and propaganda; and what the United States is doing. At present we plan to concentrate this report on either Burma or Afghanistan. Both countries are colorful, somewhat mysterious, and their decision will be of vital importance to this country.

5. "The Outer Ramparts"

This report will deal with the whole warning radar system -- the new and truly fabulous IBM electronic computer which literally does everything except select the weapons and bury the bodies. This will include everything from the distant area warning system in the Antarctic to ships at sea, artificial island -- the tracking and interception of unidentified aircraft approaching over the northern route. This system has never before been filmed. We are assured full cooperation, both of the Airforce and IBM.

6. "Main Street, USSR"

We have pending with the Russian government, an application to do in depth and detail a Russian city with a population between one- and two-hundred thousand. If permission is granted, we shall do a "Middletown" treatment. Everything from a meeting of the local Soviet -- the training of scientists, sports, education, indoctrination -- what is being taught about the United States in the local schools, fashions, publications; in short, the whole works.

7. "A Cousin Comes Calling"

Miss Rebecca West, the famous English novelist and reporter -- probably the best reporter working in English today -- will visit a state of her own choosing; probably either Georgia or Texas, and our cameras will go with her. This report will naturally deal in part with the subject of segregation, but not exclusively. Miss West is not only a great reporter, but a first-class television performer with unusual tact and instinctive good taste. Americans are always interested in what foreigners think of them, and what they find interesting in this country.

8. "Old Folks at Home"

Our population is aging at an unprecedented but predictable rate. What is happening to the old folks in terms of employment, discrimination, housing, politics, recreation, travel. In short, what is the present and probable future effect of the fact that people are living ten to fifteen years longer than they used to.

9. "Who Owes What?"

The figures clearly indicate that the American public is losing its traditional fear of debt. This will not be an examination of the National Debt except as it impinges on the individual in terms of automobiles, washing machines, "do it yourself" equipment, etc. A new skyscraper, a new bridge, a new television set all represent debt to some degree. What would happen if everybody suddenly began to save? Is there anything like an agreed estimate as to how far in debt we can go and still stay healthy?

10. "The Not-So-Secret Weapon"

From various sources -- most of them confidential -- we have gained access to quantities of Russian film; some of it is documentary in nature, some of it dramatic studio productions, all of it aimed at discrediting and discomfiting the United States. It has never been seen in this country, and the impact on the average American would be considerable, particularly when audience reaction in such capitals as Buenos Aires and Stockholm are shown. The Russians are whipping us in this type of endeavor. We may as well recognize it, demonstrate it, and ask whether there isn't something more we can do to compete.

11. "Neighbors to the South"

Who are these people who live in South America -- who are seldom heard about in press or radio unless they have a revolution. What kind of entertainment do they like?

What do they think of us? What are our interests in the area, and what would we see and hear if we went there?

We also have under consideration a report on traffic in this country, a study of the teaching and training of scientists and engineers, and a "Get Out to Vote" program for sometime around election eve.

The foregoing suggestions are not intended as scheduled commitments, but rather as an indication of where we hope to go. If the series is to succeed, we shall have to continue to be responsive in some degree to the shifting interests of public opinion.

If the partnership of Murrow and Friendly can be of any assistance in interesting potential sponsors in this series, we are yours to command.

Dear Mr. Kennamy:

Some days ago my colleague, Fred Friendly, had a conversation with Mr. Vladimir Surin, Deputy Minister of Culture, U.S.S.R.

We have had an application before the Russian authorities for some months requesting permission for SEE IT NOW to undertake a television report on one Soviet community, preferably a medium size town and the area immediately surrounding it. This would not be an effort to depict the entire Soviet, but rather a "Middle Town" treatment in depth illustrating not only the political and economic structure of the community but also family life, cultural activities, sports, entertainment, etc.

During Mr. Friendly's conversation with Mr. Surin, the Deputy Minister was disposed to give favorable consideration to this project, but he also raised the question as to whether SEE IT NOW would be prepared to arrange similar facilities for a Russian filmed report on an American community.

Before reaching any final decision on these two proposals, we thought it wise to solicit the opinion of the State Department as to the advisability of undertaking this type of reciprocal reporting, specifically whether the Department would be prepared to grant visas to Russian reporters to undertake a camera study of a single American community.

We should be grateful for an expression of your views on this matter. I am leaving for Cairo for ten days, but will be glad to come to Washington to discuss the matter with you in detail upon my return.

FROM Reba Holder

FYI -- This letter was delivered to Mr. Surin on Sunday, August 26th.

August 25, 1956

Dear Mr. Surin:

It was very good to talk with you and your colleagues this morning and heartening to hear that we are reaching the stage where a cultural exchange in the field of television information is reaching the stage of fulfillment.

For a long time it has been the hope of Edward R. Murrow and myself to make a television report from the Soviet Union. It has been our plan that rather than trying to report on the big picture and the entire Soviet Union, we would narrow the focus to one community -- preferably a medium sized town and do a complete and factual report on that community. Mr. Murrow has written a letter of general description of this to Ambassador Zarubin (a copy of which is herein transmitted).

As discussed this morning it may be within the realm of possibility to implement this plan by having a Soviet reporter of the professional skill and stature of Mr. Murrow make a similar report from a similar kind of community in the United States. Within a week, Mr. Murrow will communicate with you regarding what kind of logistical and technical assistance we may be able to provide. Should you definitely decide to pursue such a plan, please be assured of our keen interest in the project and that Mr. Murrow and I are prepared to discuss it whenever and wherever you may desire it.

My dear Mr. Ambassador:

The CBS Television program, "See It Now" desires to undertake a program of one or one and a half hours on the Soviet Union. It is our feeling that one of the most effective ways we can present the Soviet Union to the American television audience is by depicting the life of a typical Soviet town.

It would be our purpose to confine the entire program to the town selected and the surrounding countryside. Our feeling is that a medium sized town with a population of ten to fifty-thousand, containing both agriculture and light industry, would be the most suitable, but we would welcome suggestions.

We would hope to portray this Soviet town in depth and in detail - how people earn their living, the educational system, community organization, culture, sports, and everything else that goes into the life of a town. We should like, among other things, to show the local Palace of Culture, a local Communist Party meeting, a Komsomol meeting, and the local newspaper office. It is difficult at this distance to outline what other aspects of the town's life we would like to portray, but briefly, our purpose is to try to transport the American audience through the medium of film, to a Soviet town and show Americans what they would see and hear if they visited such a town themselves.

It should be emphasized that this is not meant to be a roving expedition throughout the U.S.S.R., but rather an attempt to focus on one typical community. It would be necessary to reside in that town for a period of approximately three weeks. Visas and facilities would be required for five persons - myself, Mr. Fred W. Friendly, the Producer of "See It Now", and a camera team consisting of three persons. This is in addition to Daniel Schorr, the permanent correspondent of CBS News in Moscow, whose assistance would also be needed.

We should like to make the film during the next six months. It would be edited and produced in this country and presented over the facilities of the Columbia Television Network.

May we hear from you at your earliest convenience as to whether such a project is feasible. For additional information you may address me or Mr. Friendly at this office, or if you desire a contact in Moscow, we suggest getting in touch with Mr. Schorr, who will be back at his post early in February.

Respectfully yours, (E. R. Murrow)

My dear Mr. Ambassador:

Pursuant to our conversation of last Saturday, I am sending you a copy of my letter addressed to you under date of January 20, 1956 which I believe explains the nature and scope of the project.

Should you think it useful for me to go to Moscow to discuss details of this project with representatives of the Ministry of Culture, I could probably do so sometime during the month of July.

Sincerely yours,

I am returning to you herewith an original and three copies of the agreement with Louis Armstrong. I have had this amended so that it conforms with my letter to you of March 8, 1956.

I am also enclosing a check payable to you, as agent for Mr. Armstrong, in the amount of $10,000, covering the additional services rendered in 1956.

Dear Max:

To confirm, we are agreeable to and would like to proceed with the Louis Armstrong picture in the manner reflected in your letter of April 10, 1956 and our subsequent meetings and discussions.

Our earlier conversations covered, but your letter did not, the fact that United Artists would first re-coup their $50,000 investment in this picture; we are in accord on this point provided CBS Television is given equal opportunity to become whole on its investment after United Artists' recoupment. The division of profits on the ratio basis and your standard distribution rates, world-wide, should obtain as specified.

If we are now in accord with respect to both picture-format and business matters, would you kindly advise us so that we may proceed in all areas.

PROPOSED SUBJECTS FOR NEXT YEAR'S SEE IT NOW

1. "The Secret Life of Danny Kaye"

An hour or hour and a half program; the general outline of which you know about.

2. "The New Navy"

Atom power for vessels and nuclear weapons have produced a greater change in naval thinking and strategy than was occasioned by the introduction of steam or armor. Admiral Arleigh Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, has promised us full cooperation on this.

3. Automation

A study not only of the physical and economic implications but also sociological problems that will be raised. (We have already done a considerable amount of research on this subject.)

4. Segregation

A study in depth of two southern cities; one where solution is being approached, one where no progress is being made; plus an examination of segregation in the north. This will be difficult to do, but based on previous experience I think it can be done without arousing unreasonable controversy.

5. Education — with emphasis on training of scientists and engineers.

6. "A Nation Chooses"

A detailed study of an uncommitted nation in the process of making up its mind as to whether its policy and allegiance shall go to U.S., USSR, or remain neutral. Burma or Afghanistan would serve the purpose.

7. "The Outer Ramparts"—

The whole air warning radar system, the new and fabulous IBM electronic gadget which literally does everything except select the weapons and bury the bodies.

8. "Main Street, USSR"

We have an application pending with the Soviet Government to do in depth and detail a Russian city with a population between one and two hundred thousand.

9. "Traffic, USA"

Some research has been done on this; enough, at least, to convince us that we can do it.

10. "Old Folks at Home"

Examination of our rapidly aging population, employment discrimination, housing, the whole impact of an existing generation older than this country has ever known before.

Fred and I have had prolonged conversations about the future of SEE IT NOW starting September, 1958. We would like to do a half-hour once a week at night. The working title is "What's New?"

This would not be an effort to review the week's news, but rather an effort to examine in considerable detail what's new. It would be topical and timely but not necessarily geared to the biggest news story of the preceding week. It would examine in some detail one or more developments which have or will make news. It would be utterly unpredictable. One week might deal with a new scientific discovery, the next with new fashions or automobiles, a medical discovery, a book, a newly patented invention, a new military weapon, a new and rising recording or television star or a new piece of national legislation.

The emphasis would be on newness rather than on news as such, although we would suppose that upon occasion the program would make news. This would not be either a news review or a documentary, but rather a wide-ranging reflection of anything and everything that has about it an exciting quality of being new. It would range all the way from a discovery of a new star to a new method of mining coal, a new method of preserving food or a new light on an ancient controversy. We would be equally interested in a new proposal in the area of American foreign policy, and a new method of peeling potatoes.

If this concept has any merit it would probably lie in its flexibility and unpredictability - - the combination of the truly important and trivial but at the same time interesting developments. The basic concept would be to inform but maybe there could be some entertainment too. This would be an effort to answer a question which has become an accepted form of social salutation but which no one ever attempts to answer: what's new? It is our best estimate that the average cost per week would be $30,000. This would involve using the nucleus of the SEE IT NOW organization.

It has been suggested that Senators Jack Kennedy and Sherman Cooper would like to tour part of the world, particularly the so-called uncommitted areas and do a SEE IT NOW piece similar to the one that Margaret Chase Smith did.

I have talked in a tentative fashion to both Kennedy and Cooper and they are willing and eager.

What dost thou think?

Dear Ed,

To summarize this afternoon's messages, for my own peace of mind:

Senator Cooper will be in the Capitol all next week. He can come to a meeting of all hands in New York if you say it's important. Meanwhile, he expects word from you as to whether you'll be in Washington on Monday, December 2, and is holding lunch open.

Senator Kennedy will be in New York the balance of this week and, during the week of December 2, all day Monday, Thursday, Friday and the afternoon of Wednesday. You can 'phone him at TR 6-2560.

If I can be of any further assistance, the best bet is to send a wire to my home, since I'll be there very little in the days just ahead. For insurance, messages can also be left with my father's secretary: Miss Cooper at PL 5-6100.

Had you finally sacrificed content for gadgetry, last Sunday, wouldn't it have been at the expense of the very information that was front page news on Monday? I think there is clear evidence, in the text of the Teller testimony in Washington, that it helped suggest the course of some of the questioning. My uneducated guess is that you'll some day consider it one of your most influential reports ... and if that's run-of-the-mill, it's also a comment on the mill that shouldn't displease you.

Sincerely,

Dear Jack,

Edward R. Murrow is interested in the possibility of making a "See It Now" with you and Senator Cooper along lines I know will interest you. He wants to talk it over with both of you. He'll be in Washington December 2 and suggests lunch (or just a talk) on that date if you are both in the Capitol. Or, perhaps, you and Cooper have an earlier coinciding date in New York and we can talk at this end. Would you be kind enough to compare schedules with him and let me know when's when.

The combined gifts that Murrow, Kennedy and Cooper would bring to this venture would make it a brilliant event. It seems to me that it should appreciably help the people on our side to understand a few unsimple facts. You know how difficult it is to get across certain ideas. Murrow's genius is in creating that ideal climate of opinion that encourages people to reason for themselves and reach your conclusions almost independently.

He has already told me some impromptu ideas for a Kennedy-Cooper program. I won't mention them, because you should hear them from him. However, I'll illustrate with a couple of examples from his program of December 30 (10-11 EST), which is to be his report of Marian Anderson's eastern concert tour.

She is introduced to a Korea audience of troops from several nations by their commanding general in the fewest, simplest and finest possible words. You'll see how Murrow can make an impressive comment without words. The general is clearly a man who is more than fit to wear his uniform. The name, stenciled on his fatigues, is Dutcher. Miss Anderson is taken visibly aback in Vietnam when asked whether she would want Governor Faubus to attend her concert. With touching dignity, she simply explains that she would welcome him if he came only because he honestly wanted to hear her music. In another highlight, Murrow shows the reactions of a proud native audience listening to her sing their national anthem in their own language. This is Ceylon.

Well, I'll get on the horn to you in a couple of days to learn what can be arranged. The schedule we originally discussed is now out of the question, but you'll find, I hope, that you and he can solve that one.

Sincerely yours,

Honorable John F. Kennedy

RE : UTOPIA

Your call about Mr. Murrow's plaint on our use of the word "Utopia" in our promotion for his Sunday atom program was productive in at least one respect : we shall now look forward to a first hand contact with SEE IT NOW and the Murrow-Friendly office when news is being given about forthcoming productions. As I said, in the past we have found it extremely difficult to elicit information about these programs, although, this Fall, we feel a large break-through has been made because of your cooperation in making film trailers for us.

Thus far, for the other promotion we have been wholly dependent on the Press Information bundles. I would like, therefore, to refer you to their release on last Sunday's atom show, dated November 4. This was the major straight piece. I have checked with the writers on this, and none of them believe, nor do I, that this led one to expect the show that did appear Sunday. Read it carefully. In the subhead is the word "Abundance". In the copy itself there are many names but the discussion is on food preservation, industrial atomics, power stations, atomic airplanes, and so on. The second paragraph on Page Two discusses the two roads - one to a veritable Utopia, the other leading to complete and final extinction. But where in the entire story is the "extinction" played up for this broadcast?

Nor do I find a correction of this story in our files. Hence, in writing 10-, 20-, and 40-second messages we chose the positive, the Utopia angle, and I do not believe we chose the wrong angle based on the information available to us.

CBS Television has heretofore produced and broadcast as part of the SEE IT NOW series, a film entitled "AMERICAN CHERLEST". This film should not be confused with the SEE IT NOW films entitled "AMERICA - PART I" and "AMERICA - PART II".

Under private arrangements made by Mr. Murrow with Granada in England, this film was exhibited theatrically in Great Britain. We now wish to make an arrangement with Contemporary Films Ltd., 14 Soho Square, London W.1., England, licensing them to distribute this film, the duration of which is approximately one hour, in the British Isles, for non-broadcast, non-theatrical purposes only. The term of the license shall be one year commencing as of the date of execution. We are to receive 50% of the gross income from rentals, after Contemporary Films Ltd. shall have recouped the cost of the prints. Of course, the cost of such prints shall be entirely the responsibility of Contemporary. During the term of the agreement, we are guaranteed as our 50% share of rental receipts, earnings of not less than $150 at not less than the present exchange rate of $2.80. The royalty shall be payable to us in dollars, and we shall receive quarterly reports.

Contemporary shall give us written notice as to the number of prints which they cause to be prepared from a 35 mm. black and white sound on film negative or fine grain, which we make available to them for this purpose in London. The negative or fine grain shall remain our property, and shall be returned to such place as we designate.

Contemporary shall enjoy three successive one-year options to extend the term, provided they give us notice of their exercise of each such option not later than thirty days prior to the expiration of each year, and, provided that, for each option year, they guarantee us minimum earnings in the amount of $150.

We make no representations to Contemporary other than as to our right to enter into this agreement and our physical ownership of the film. Prints should be returned to us upon expiration, or, in lieu thereof, we should receive a certificate of destruction.

Will you please prepare the necessary license.

As discussed previously, the general areas we shall hope to cover will include education, the role of the scientist in American life and "the need to know". We'll do it in the form of a conversation and we can decide on the general areas while we are having dinner.

We will be coming to Baltimore from Washington on Tuesday afternoon, and will be reachable at the Sheraton-Belvedere or Station WCBM, should you desire to reach us.

Delighted to see the story in Time this week . . . . and a good cover picture too. Thought the story was very timely inasmuch as PERSON TO PERSON and SEE IT NOW are just beginning their new season.

Presume you have had Jesse and John running around New York buying up all the extra copies and I would be happy to do the same here if you just say the word.

Off the record, we are talking to our client about the possibility of buying up 5 or 6 SEE IT NOW programs as a corporate activity after the first of the year, but this would have to include a special budget, and I don't know whether it can be arranged. If you have any thinking on this subject, pro or con, I would appreciate hearing from you as we do not want to push too hard and then find out that it would not be practical. Also would appreciate your not mentioning this situation to Bill Maxwell unless, of course, he brings the subject up.

RE: SECRET LIFE OF DANNY KAYE

As you know, the basic agreement in which Mr. Kaye granted us the right to film his UNICEF tour (a letter dated April 13, 1956 and signed by Mr. Murrow) was never signed by Danny Kaye, although he did place his initials next to the signature line.

As I understand it, Mr. Murrow dictated the agreement in the presence of Mr. Kaye. Mr. Kaye then placed his initials in pencil in the lower lefthand corner and Mr. Murrow signed the agreement.

Do you have any idea why Mr. Kaye did not sign this document? Did he make any comments at the time indicating that he intended to have his initials be of the same force and effect as a full signature?

We are reluctant to authorize further use of the program until this matter is cleared up. Mr. Kaye might register a strong objection, for example, on the ground that he only initialled the document pending a full review of the situation by his attorney.

Mr Murrow
You asked to phone or write Ernest Gross about this.
JMS 8/7

July 26, 1957

This is a summary of what happened when you turned over to me the letter Ed Murrow got from Ernest Gross, attorney for Grandma Moses Properties, Inc.

I had three or four conversations with Mr. Gross. I also talked to Paul Rosen and examined the basic contract.

It became perfectly apparent to me that there was a misunderstanding which could readily be cleared up. There was no doubt that we were supposed to deliver the color prints. However, this would be of no use to them unless they got the negatives. Rosen, therefore, had suggested that we make them a black-and-white print so that they could pick the material they wanted. According to Rosen, the understanding was that they would pay for the black-and-white print.

The second point Rosen made was that, in his opinion, the television rights belonged to us. After talking with both Gross and Rosen, and then getting the two of them on the same phone, we settled the matter as follows:

We decided to let the question of whether or not we had television rights out of the discussion, since the contract would, in the final analysis, determine whether or not we had such rights. Secondly, Mr. Gross agreed on behalf of his client to pay us at cost, not to exceed $300, for the black-and-white prints we had furnished. Rosen assured me that they did not cost in excess of $300 except, perhaps, for a few dollars.

We also agreed to deliver the color material to Grandma Moses Properties, Inc. as soon after August 1 as possible. The reason for the delay was that the person handling the material was on vacation. This arrangement proved entirely satisfactory to Gross. You will see from Mr. Rosen's memorandum of July 12 addressed to Natalie Foster with a copy to you that he has instructed her to forward this material.

I think I can safely say that after we finished our discussions, we eliminated any rancor that may have existed and came to a perfectly amicable solution of what, after all, was not a very great problem.

Dear Ed:

I am writing this letter to you directly so that you might give personal attention to resolving the questions arising under the Grandma Moses contract. This coming Monday will mark the second anniversary of the execution of that contract. There has been no progress with respect to the exploitation of the material for a movie film, which was within our contemplation at the time the contract was made. Moreover, Grandma Moses Properties has not been able to get possession of the film itself, although the contract gives us the right to the film, subject to certain restrictions with which we of course intend to comply.

I think you and I are both too busy with other matters to keep this matter dangling much longer, although I do not know whether it has been called to your attention recently. It certainly has been on my desk, however, and I would like to see some light at the end of the tunnel.

The last communication I had was a letter of May 23 from Paul Rosen in which he advised that he would contact me in a few days. In a nutshell, the question is simply this:

Paragraph 3 of the contract of June 24 provides as follows:

> "A color sound-on-film print, of the film as broadcast, in 16mm, will be furnished to Grandma Moses Properties, Inc. as soon after broadcast as is possible. If there are any film materials filmed but not used on the broadcast, copies of them will similarly be furnished. No charge will be made for the foregoing."

It was understood, of course, that these film materials would be complete, in the form taken and in sequence, inasmuch as they were to be used for the purpose of arranging theatrical distribution. A print of the "film as broadcast" has indeed been made available to us, but we have not been furnished "the film materials filmed but not used on the broadcast".

It turns out, however, that the film is all chopped up and out of sequence, with some portions entirely deleted. Moreover, preparation of a 16mm print would on the one hand be expensive to CBS and on the other would not be usable in its garbled form by Grandma Moses for the purpose of movie exploitation.

Some time ago Mr. Rosen suggested that in view of this state of affairs, the entire negative material in its present form be made available to us in lieu of the 16mm print. We have agreed to this, even though it will put us to a considerable expense to do the necessary editing of the negative material in order to use it for any presentation whatsoever. However, even this has not yet been furnished us.

The suggestion, therefore, is that the negative, with key numbers, be made available. This we have not been able to get.

There is a question concerning the right of Grandma Moses Properties to use any of this material for subsequent television. I have suggested to Mr. Rosen that if the question should arise in practice, we could take care of the matter at that time. Neither of us has to waive any rights or claims we may feel we have. In any event, CBS would be given the right of first refusal.

However, the main thing is for us to move ahead to accomplish the basic purpose of this two year old contract which is summed up in paragraph 6:

"The production of a motion picture film".

We are naturally disappointed that it is not possible for CBS to arrange for theatrical distribution. We shall do our best to do so and if we succeed it will of course be to our mutual interest.

Cordially,

Ernie

Dear Mr. Green:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 11, 1956. Mr. Murrow has asked that I reply to your letter of the same date to him.

You are, of course, correct in asking for the 16mm color print of the Grandma Moses program, as it was broadcast, and preparation of this print, as well as a print of material filmed but not used for broadcast, is now in process. As soon as the prints have been returned to us from the laboratory, I shall have them sent directly to Mr. Keller.

I am pleased to advise you that we expect to make an arrangement shortly with Young America Films, Inc., covering their 16mm distribution of the film and I will advise you prior to the consummation of this arrangement, so that you may be fully aware of the arrangement.

We have had some theatrical interest expressed with respect to the distribution of the film for use in motion picture theatres but we have not as yet made any determination as to a theatrical release, since such a release would be predicated on our expenditure of a not inconsiderable additional sum for such things as a musical score, re-editing, etc. Again, I will keep you advised as to the situation theatrically.

Thank you for your letter and I hope you have an enjoyable trip.

Dear Nigel:

My belated but most sincere thanks for your many courtesies while I was in London. We did the television piece on Sunday. The critical reaction was good, and I was much relieved to hear from a couple of British correspondents stationed here that they thought it an acceptable effort.

As you know, I had some conversation with the Prime Minister regarding the possibility of filming an interview with him in Bermuda after the conclusion of the Conference. He seemed favorably disposed, but naturally made no firm commitment. If he is willing to undertake it, I would naturally be delighted to fly there with a camera crew. My preference would be to shoot it outdoors in natural light. The whole operation should require not more than an hour-and-a-half of his time. It would be in the nature of a conversation rather than rigid, formal questions and answers. Although I would expect to submit an outline of the general area of questioning in advance, and he or his representative could eliminate entirely both question and answer in the event the answer didn't turn out as he wished it to be. We would present this as a half-hour program completely disassociated from any other program. We would put it on the air as soon as the developing and editing could be done.

It seems to me that immediately after the Bermuda Conference the climate ought to be right here for candid, informal, conversational talk by the Prime Minister, and I hope he would feel disposed to do it.

With all best wishes to you and Mrs. Bicknell.

Att: Mr. Paul A. Rosen

Dear Mr. Rosen:

I have your letter of February 4, 1957 with respect to the Armstrong matter.

We have repeatedly advised you, and you well know, that no final agreement has been reached. Our attempts to reach an agreement do not constitute a substitute for a meeting of the minds.

In this connection, I wish to remind you of our conference on the morning of January 18, at this office, in which we discussed the possibility of arriving at a mutually acceptable arrangement, and of your promise to arrange a conference on the following Monday, January 21, between your representatives and ourselves.

You called me later that same day regarding the time of the proposed meeting, and I advised you that I would be available at any time after 4:00 P.M., to make room for my attendance at a meeting of the Board of Directors of a corporation in which I am interested, which was scheduled to take place at 2:30 P.M. You stated you would try to arrange the conference at 4:00 o'clock.

However, since that time I have not heard a single word from you in any form whatsoever, and I have therefore reluctantly concluded that there is no bona fide desire on your part to attempt to find a solution.

I take exception to your suggestion that my client's demands are "unreasonable and without equity". On the contrary, I believe my client is justifiably aggrieved at your switch of the original concept of a TV series, to a theatrical distribution primarily. We also objected strenuously to your entering into an arrangement for theatrical distribution without our prior knowledge or consent.

EMIL K. ELLIS

Furthermore, as we have advised you on several occasions, our client has suffered considerable damage as a result of the announcement and advertising by or through you or your representatives, that this picture was a life story of Louis Armstrong, in the face of your knowledge of his plans and negotiations, in that respect.

We regret very sincerely that things have come to this pass, but you have no one but yourselves to blame.

You may rest assured that any action which you may take will be vigorously resisted, and tha t we shall look to you for all damages we may suffer by reason of your actions.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Many years ago this state, then Indian Territory, captured national headlines when the nation's last land frontier was thrown open for settlement here.

Now, seventy years later, we believe this new state of Oklahoma can lay claim to another story of equal and as historic importance to the nation as our famous Land Run.

This story, of how Oklahoma and its Frontiers of Science Foundation is meeting one of the greatest challenges of this age, is already known and admired by many of our nation's leading scientists, educators and governmental leaders. But it is not yet well known to the general public.

We believe it to be a story which should prove not only of great interest to most Americans, but inspiring as well. For this reason, I wanted to write you personally, urging you to give this story the benefit of your expert appraisal. You will find it covered in brief on pages 6, 7, and 36 of the enclosed issue of our state magazine.

Dear Mr Murrow,

Enclosed clipping from yesterday's New York Times suggested to me a subject for a TV documentary which ought to be wonderfully useful.

I'm thinking that you and your staff might, with the aid of Mr LaFarge, document for the TV audience the present plight of the American Indian in the face of the rapacity of those who still seek to take advantage of these very first Americans.

Such a picture, emphasizing the dignity of the Indian people rather than the stereotype of blanketed ne'er-do-wells posing for the tourists among feathers and tepees, should be rewarding in many ways, both for the Indians themselves, and for the enlightenment of the rest of us. I think, too, it might become the first of an ethnic series treating of the special problems of Mexican-Americans, Puerto Ricans, Nisei and other groups who are "different" from ourselves.

WHAT YOU DON'T SEE IN "SEE IT NOW"

(A biograprical sketch of Edward R. Murrow)

HIS CAREER BEFORE TELEVISION

Murrow is about 50 years old. Born in North Carolina, he spent his childhood in the State of Washingtn, where he graduated from Washington State College.

At that time there was a national student organization known as the National Studen Federation. Murrow was an active member while he was an undergraduate. He was elected national president. After graduation, he devoted two years (until 1932) to promotional work for the National Student Federation. At that time the Communists and Socialists had a rival national student organization — the American Student Union. As president of the National Student Federation, Murrow did not fight the A.S.U., as other conservative student groups were doing: he 'coexisted' with it.

In 1932, he secured his first important job as Assistant Director of the Institute of International Education. This organization promotes interchange of students between countries, and distributes scholarships. It is endowed by the Rockefeller Foundation. Its director, when Murrow was appointed, was Stephen F. Duggan. In the Institute, Murrow met Duggan's son, Lawrence Duggan. It was during the period that Murrow was with the Institute that Lawrence Duggan was active, with Alger Hiss and Noel Field, in the Washington Soviet Spy Ring, as Elizabeth Bentley, former spy ring courier, revealed to the Committee on Un-American Activities in 1948. When Miss Bentley exposed him, Lawrence Duggan committed suicide by leaping out of the window of the Institute.

It was while he was assistant director of the Institute that Murrow publicly showed his sympathy for Soviet Russia.

In 1933, Intourist, the official Soviet Russian travel agency, announced the organization of a Summer course of study for American students in the Moscow University. The official literature of Intourist describes the arrangement as follows:

> "In order to insure close cooperation with American educational institutions, and with students and educators in the United States, an advisory relationship was established in 1933 with the Institute of International Education. At the same time, a National Advisory Council of prominent American educators was formed by Prof. Stephen P. Duggan to assist the Institute of International Education in its advisory capacity."

The man who helped organize this 'Advisory Committee' for the University of Moscow, under Duggan, was Edward R. Murrow. Murrow was a member of the Advisory Committee himself. His name appeared on the letterhead of the 'Advisory Committee' for two years — from 1933 to 1935.

The Summer Course, naturally, was a camouflaged Communist propaganda activity. American students, when they reached Moscow, found themselves indoctrinated in the virtues of Soviet Communism. Intourist reported that in the Second Summer Session, held in 1935, 212 students attended.

Murrow, when confronted by the printed matter of this Summer Session of the Moscow University, denies that he was active in the program. His denial is a bare-faced lie. As Duggan's assistant, the administration of such matters was in his hands. It was impossible that he did not know that he was helping Communism.

HE ENTERS RADIO AND TELEVISION

In 1935, Murrow was employed by the Columbia Broadcasting Company to direct a talk-and-social-events department. He was thus able to get in on the ground floor of news broadcasting, then at its beginning. In 1937, he was appointed by C.B.S. as European Director. His task was to organize a system of news reportage of European events. He distinguished himself in anti-Hitler reports during the years just before World War II. When the war broke out, he became a national figure by his broadcasts from London during the Nazi blitz of 1940. He won the admiration of William S. Paley, President of C.B.S., and, in 1945, he was promoted to the post of Vice-President of C.B.S. He resigned the Vice-Presidency in 1947 and returned to broadcasting.

In 1950, in cooperation with Fred W. Friendly, Murrow inaugurated a radio program called "Hear It Now". In 1951, the partners dropped the radio program and started a television program called "See It Now". This program is still in progress. It is estimated that 3,000,000 viewers listen to it. Later, Murrow added another regular television program in interview form, "Person to Person". He also has a daily radio news broadcast.

HOW HE SLANTS HIS TELEVISION SHOWS

The Galindez broadcasts was one of a series of heavily biased broadcasts and telecasts in which Murrow has praised or favorably publicized Left individuals or causes, or has slandered anti-communists. It is difficult to escape the conclusion that he deliberately rigs his elaborate "See It Now" shows to discredit anti-Communists and to glorify American Leftists.

Let us give a few illustrations. Many others could be cited.

(1) In 1933, he devoted a "See It Now" to the so-called Radulovich case. Radulovich was an Air Force Reserve lieutenant. The Air Force Security Board discovered that both the lieutenant's father and sister had been active in Communist work. The Board dismissed Radulovich as a security risk — a perfectly reasonable decision. Murrow put on a sympathy-loaded program which made Radulovich out to be a martyr. There was such a storm of protest from sentimentalists who saw and heard the Murrow program that Secretary of the Air Harold E. Talbott panicked and ordered the over-ruling of his Security Board and the reinstatement of Radulovich.

(2) In 1934, Murrow held the American Legion up to contempt. The Indianapolis, Ind., American Legion officers had objected to the establishment of a branch of the American Civil Liberties Union in Indianapolis, in view of its subversive record. Murrow, in a heavily slanted program, showed the American Civil Liberties Union in an extremely favorable light in a way to capture public sympathy. But his portrayal of the Indianapolis Legionnaires showed them to be bullying, ignorant figures. One of his clever touches was to have the case for the A.C.L.U. presented by a Catholic priest. The implication was plain that Catholics are for the A.C.L.U. which is a direct distortion of the truth. As John Crosby, a leftwing critic, described it: "Murrow showed the two meetings — the Legion's and Civil Liberties Union's — jumping back and forth from the regimented atmosphere of the Legion's to the democratic reasonableness of the Union's."

(3) At the height of Senator Joseph McCarthy's campaign against Communism, Murrow deliberately ran an anti-McCarthy "See It Now" program, holding McCarthy up to contempt and trying to get across the impression that he was a thief in his personal life and un-American in his public career. The Communists and Communist sympathizers whom McCarthy had exposed were played up sympathetically as persecuted men and women.

In order to inflame Negroes against McCarthy, Murrow did a broadcast defending Anna Lee Moss, a Negro Communist woman whose Communist Party background had been brought to light by witnesses before the McCarthy Committee and who had been suspended from her Defense Department job. Although the evidence pointed clearly Mrs. Moss's Communist record, Murrow made her out to be a martyr and aroused so much public agitation that a weak-kneed administration reinstated her in her job.

McCarthy protested so vigorously to C.B.S. against the unfairness of Murrow's programs that he was given free time in which to reply.

(4) When Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer was denied top security clearance by the United States after he had admitted under oath that he had contributed money to Communist causes, that his brother had been an active Communist Party member and associate of the atom spy ring in Berkeley, Cal., and that his wife had formerly been married to a Communist, Murrow proceeded to whitewash him. Oppenheimer was invited to a Murrrow 'Person to Person" program and interviewed admiringly and approvingly. This Murrow telecast did more to rehabilitate Oppenheimer after his exposure than any other publicity.

(5) When Senator Knowland, in 1955, came out in favor of a blockade of Red China in order to free the captive American fliers, Murrow tried to discredit the proposal by telecasting an interview with a Stanford University professor who pooh-poohed the idea of a blockade and argued that it would not be effective.

(6) Murrow staged a 'See It Now' interview with Prime Minister Nehru of India and, with apparent approval, permitted Nehru to make a venomous attack upon Chian Kai-shek, America's ally. Murrow conspicuously avoided putting any embarrassing questions to Nehru, whom he described as 'a great statesman.'

In his news broadcasts and writings, Murrow has repeatedly shown his bias in favor of Left-Wingers and persons accused of Communist activities. He gave a backhanded defense of Harry D. White when Attorney General Brownell exposed him in 1933 as a Communist spy ring member. He testified in favor of Joe Julian, a radio writer who had brought suit against 'Red Channels' for exposing him as 'pro-Communist'. When Owen Lattimore was charged as being pro-Communist by the McCarran Committee, Murrow defended him. In Lattimore's words:

> "Before I could speak for myself, Murrow kept the record straight by repeatedly drawing attention to the fact that nothing had been proved against me. Later, by... using recordings, he gave me a national forum of my own, so that millions of people could hear me speaking for myself."

So much protest arose against Murrow's loaded telecasts that Alcoa, his original 'See It Now' sponsor, cancelled its sponsorship of his telecasts. However, Murrow has found other sponsors.

Perhaps the best evidence of the light in which the pro-Communists hold Murrow is the fact that Harold J. Laski, the British Russia-defending pro-Communist intellectual, dedicated one of his books to Murrow.

Murrow is one of those extremely dangerous public opinion leaders who claim to be "anti-communist', but who always leap into controversial situations, with powerful mass communication facilities behind them, to defend Leftists and pro-Communists, and to ridicule those who expose them. In the common vernacular he is cute and clever. He has a solemn, sanctimonious manner, behind which he is capable of almost any publicity skullduggery.

One will get nowhere by trying to prove that Murrow is a Commnist. If accused of Leftism he blandly denies it and then proceeds to make his accusers look ridiculous by citing praise which he has received from President Eisenhower or from other ultra-respectable conservatives, or by flaunting his Peabody award. The only way to discredit Murrow is to expone the bias and the pro-Leftist slanding which has characterized all of his public work. If one attempts to fasten the outright Communist label on him, it will simply play into Murrow's hands.

It is natural that he defended Galindez. They are cut from the same ideological stripe.

Those who have worked with Murrow, in all but a few instances, heartily detest him. They have found him a cold-blooded, thoroughly merciless individual. Murrow has collected around himself in the CBS News Department a group of yes-men, several of whom have shady left-wing records. His right-hand man, Eric Severeid, who is in charge of his Washington office, is a former active Socialist, who admitted the fact in his autobiography. One of his broadcasters, Winston Burdett, when flushed out by the House Committe on Un-American Activities, admitted to the Committee that he had been a secret member of the Communist Party for several years. Murrow accepted Burdett's resignation after this exposé, but after the publicity died down, he reinstated him. Another of Murrow's Washington staff' William Costello, was exposed by a witness before the Committee on Un-American Activities of having been a secret attendant at Communist Party meetings in Honolulu before he joined C.B.S. It is obvious that Murrow would not have such assistants around him if he vehemently opposed Communism or Communists.

"SEE IT NOW" TO GIVE VIEWERS CLOSE LOOK AT GERMANY AND THE GERMANS THIRTEEN YEARS AFTER V-E DAY IN "WATCH ON THE RUHR," JULY 7

Edward R. Murrow And Veteran Reporter-Camera Crew Seek Answer To Much-Asked Query, "Can You Trust The Germans?," In Examination Of German Industrial, Moral Rebirth; Program Pre-empts "Studio One"

In an attempt to explore and explain the reasons behind the amazing German industrial comeback and to try to answer the critical question, "Can you trust the Germans?," the "See It Now" series will present "Watch On The Ruhr; A Study of Germany 13 Years After V-E Day" on the CBS Television Network, Monday, July 7, 10:00-11:00 PM, EDT. The special broadcast will pre-empt "Studio One" on this date only.

Thirteen years after the nation responsible for World War II was brought to its knees, that nation -- Germany -- has a currency as hard as any in the world; a government more stable than that of France, one of its conquerors; and an industrial complex in the Ruhr Valley that manufactures more trucks and autos than any nation except the United States.

Germany, which in 1945 was forever "to be denied the ability to make and carry arms," is again building an army and an air force. An important part of the NATO defense pattern are the seven German divisions which form only a segment of the vast forces under German General Hans Speidel, now in command of all NATO ground forces on the continent..

"Watch On The Ruhr" has been in production for more than four months. CBS News Correspondent Richard C. Hottelet and veteran "See It Now" cameraman William McClure have shot more than 100,000 feet of film in Germany, of which the most significant 5,600 feet will be presented on the July 7 broadcast.

Edward R. Murrow and co-producer Fred W. Friendly have examined the extraordinary industrial rebirth of Germany through an examination of the heavily-industrialized Ruhr Valley. They have probed the extent of the modern moral rebirth in the Germany where eight million men, women and children were gassed or machine-gunned to death, in terms of the democratized German Army; the attitude of German youth toward the Hitler years; and the reaction of a Duesseldorf theater audience to a stage performance of "The Diary of Anne Frank." They have attempted to assess the future direction of Germany through a series of interviews with West German Defense Minister Franz Joseph Strauss, Economics Minister Professor Ludwig Erhard, Krupp Works General Manager Berthold Beitz, trade union spokesman Ludwig Rosenberg, opposition spokesman Wolfgang Doering, and talks with the press and university students at Cologne.

In addition to these interviews, viewers will see automated steel mills; the huge Krupp factory where giant electric locomotives are made; the busy German rail yards; the traffic on the Rhine, busiest of all European waterways; a key scene from "The Diary of Anne Frank" and a gay "Fasching" festival at Duesseldorf.

"See It Now" is produced by Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly. Associate producer is Palmer Williams.

"SEE IT NOW" PROGRAM ON FALLOUT INCREASED TO 90 MINUTES
DUE TO IMPORTANCE AND SCOPE OF SUBJECT MATTER

AEC Commissioner Libby Suggests Way Of Limiting Nuclear Explosions; Explains Controversy Over Detecting Recent AEC Under-The-Mountain Explosion, And Tells How It Could Be Vast New Source Of Steam Power

Because of the gravity and importance of the entire problem of fallout from nuclear tests, and the scope and abundance of material gathered by four "See It Now" crews around the world during the past seven months, "Atomic Timetable, Part II: Fallout" will run 90 minutes (5:00-6:30 PM, EST) on Sunday, March 30, over the CBS Television Network, instead of one hour, as previously announced. (This pre-empts CBS Television's "The Last Word" for this date only.)

On the program, Dr. Willard C. Libby, science member of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, outlines his proposal to limit nuclear explosions by the world powers, by restricting the total amount of radioactive fallout that each country's bombs may contribute to the world's atmosphere in a given period. Dr. Libby also explains the current front-page controversy over the distance at which the recent AEC explosion of a nuclear device under a Nevada mountain was detected, and tells how such underground explosions in the future may prove to be a great new source of steam power.

Interviewed on the program, in addition to Dr. Libby, will be Dr. Hermann J. Muller, Nobel Prize-winning geneticist of Indiana University; Dr. Kenjiro Kimura, Dean of the Tokyo University College of Physics and discoverer of Uranium-237; Dr. Linus C. Pauling, Head of the Chemical Engineering Division of California Institute of Technology and winner of the Nobel Prize for Chemistry in 1954; Merril Eisenbud, Manager of the A.E.C. New York Operations Office, which monitors a world-wide fallout detection network; and Dr. J. Laurence Kulp, Director of the Geo-Chemistry Laboratory of Columbia University's Lamont Geological Observatory, the first scientist to measure the strontium-90 content of human bone.

On the broadcast, viewers will share such uncommon sights and experiences as flying through an atomic cloud; the underground detonation of an atomic bomb at the A.E.C. test sites in Nevada; the ill-fated Japanese fishing boat, "The Lucky Dragon," as it is today, and its survivors; measuring the dispersion of simulated fallout particles at the Hanford Works of the A.E.C. in Washington; development of normal and irradiated human cells at the University of Colorado Medical Center; conscientious objectors eating irradiated food at Fitzsimons Army Hospital in Denver; round-the-world collection and analysis of fallout; and studies of the effect of strontium-90 on fish and animals at the experimental animal farm at the Hanford Works and at the Argonne National Laboratory in Illinois.

Industrial and medical uses of radioactivity are shown in the detection of a leaky heart valve in a patient at St. Luke's Hospital in New York; determining the exact location of a brain tumor at the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston; Cobalt 60 radiation therapy at Argonne Cancer Hospital, Chicago; searching for flaws in the hull of an atomic submarine at the Electric Boat Yard in Groton, Conn.; the use of isotopes in drilling for oil in Oklahoma; wear tests on piston rings at General Motors in Detroit; and in measuring the age of mummies at the University of Pennsylvania.

Among the problems which the scientists will discuss is that represented by strontium-90, new and deadly by-product of the nuclear age, which many scientists say could cause leukemia and bone cancer in great numbers of humans throughout the world, and that represented by genetic mutations in human cells caused by certain kinds and amounts of atomic radiation.

"See It Now" is produced by Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly. Associate producer is Palmer Williams. Reporter-director on "Atomic Timetable, Part II" is Arthur D. Morse. Other reporters on the March 30 broadcast include Edmund Scott, Gene DePoris, and CBS News Correspondent Peter Kalischer. Photographing the story of radiation and fallout were veteran "See It Now" cameramen Martin Barnett, Leo Rossi, Charles Mack, and CBS News cameraman Wade Bingham.

"FROM PRECINCT TO PRESIDENT: SOME REFLECTIONS BY HARRY S. TRUMAN" TO BE HOUR-LONG "SEE IT NOW" PRESENTATION SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 2

Former Chief Executive Discusses His Private And Public Life Before, During And After The Presidency; Gives His Opinions On Variety Of Key Topics In Interview With Edward R. Murrow

The distillization of four days of wide-ranging conversation -- on a host of significant subjects -- between former President Harry S. Truman and Edward R. Murrow will be the next "See It Now" presentation Sunday, Feb. 2, on the CBS Television Network (5:00-6:00 PM, EST).

The program, titled, "From Precinct To President: Some Reflections By Harry S. Truman," was originally filmed by Murrow and co-producer Fred W. Friendly in February, 1957 to provide posterity with a visual document on a President of the United States such as has never before been possible. However, during the past twelve months, much of Mr. Truman's pungent commentary has become so pertinent and timely that the producers decided to release portions of the nearly 50,000 feet of film in the form of the Feb. 2 program.

During the days of relaxed conversation at Mr. Truman's vacation retreat on Islamorada, one of the semi-tropical islands in the Florida Keys, he and Murrow discussed almost every topic that had made news during the seven-year Truman occupancy of the White House, as well as intimate details of Mr. Truman's childhood, his young manhood, his early entry into politics, and his historically significant career since then.

The former President speaks frankly and with his accustomed vigor on such vital and pivotal Truman acts as his decisions to fight in Korea, to drop the atom bomb on Hiroshima, and to launch and maintain the Berlin airlift.

As two full "See It Now" camera crews kept shooting, Mr. Truman also expressed himself on many other topics, among them the Presidency and leadership; the Vice Presidency; Constitutional law; foreign affairs (United Nations, Middle East, Nato, Russia); domestic issues (civil rights, tidelands oil, education, the nation's health); the MacArthur dismissal; nuclear weapons and disarmament; unification of the services; politics and politicians; and on various world and national leaders including past Secretaries of State and Cabinet Ministers. The former President also speaks at length on the problems of former Presidents.

When Mr. Truman acquiesced to the unprecedented film interview, he expressed the hope that similar recordings would be made with all Presidents in years to come, because of their great value to future generations. (During the interview, Mr. Truman reveals, on several occasions, that he considers no subject of greater value -- for either public officials or private citizens -- than the study of history). He called attention to the undoubtedly great benefits that would have been derived had such interviews with men like Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson, been available for study by today's leaders.

"See It Now" is produced by Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly. Associate producer is Palmer Williams. Camera crews for the February 2 program were composed of Charles Mack and Martin Barnett, camera, and Robert Huttenloch and Lawrence Gianneschi, sound.

"The Lady from Philadelphia"

I SINCERELY hope that our State Department does not cut the commercials out of "The Lady from Philadelphia," the recent CBS-TV "See It Now" broadcast featuring Marian Anderson, the singer, when they show prints of the program in Asia. The comments of Mr. Edmond H. Leavey, president of the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation, which sponsored the broadcast, and those of Edward R. Murrow, the narrator, speaking for I.T. and T., are essential to the propaganda aims of Miss Anderson's 35,000-mile, twelve-nation concert tour. Their remarks create a most favorable impression of American business. "Communication is our business," said the sponsor; then he defined the main problem of international communication today in terms of the question: "Can man get along with man?" Miss Anderson's tour was an act of affirmative communication. Mr. Murrow, noting that I.T. and T. had waived the final commercial, said: "They know that their communication can never be substituted for human communication. Miss Anderson's communication is something with which they—and we—would like to be identified."

This was television in the highest altitudes. What the "See It Now"-State Department- American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA) trio of organizers of the tour were saying, through Miss Anderson to the people of Korea, the Philippines, Vietnam, Burma, Thailand, Malaya, and India, was this: "You have been slaves to white masters from the West. Now you are your own masters, free to choose between the Communists and us. Both are prepared to radiate to you the West's industry, literacy, and material betterment. But the Communists will make you pay a price for that—a second slavery and a poverty of spiritual values. Choose the West and you will gain your freedom and dignity as well as science and technology. Marian Anderson is the image of your own future —if you follow us."

The singer never spoke this argument, of course. Her only instructions from the State Department were: "Be yourself." She gave her own message —in her inspired artistry, her joy, enthusiasm, compassion, humility, and religious faith. Her music was, in turn, a deep yearning, an adoration, a cry for freedom, a national anthem, a morality lesson, and a Christian hymn.

Her doctrine was a sense of journey, a "trampin, a tryin' to make heaven my home." It was, "Now we will do the thing in a new way. . . . There is no particular thing that you can do alone. . . . The 'I' in it is very small, after all. . . . All have a right to enter the gates. . . .One will give his all if he feels that he belongs. . . . Yes, I would sing for Governor Faubus if he were in a frame of mind to accept it for what it is. . . . Do not let hate or fear restrict you from being a big person. . . . All people seek to be great. . . . If all is right on the inside, there is a divine pattern. . . . I will go, I shall go to see what the end will be, because I believe in what I shall find at the end." This is the poetry of feeling, and I know of only one poet in America who sings this way: Carl Sandburg. The ethos of Abraham Lincoln is in his rhythms and Miss Anderson's.

The Asian response to her character and artistry was a complete propaganda triumph, to judge by the pictures and soundtrack of "See It Now." The King of Thailand had never before risen from his throne-chair to greet a distinguished visitor. In India, no visitor had ever been invited to speak at Gandhi's memorial in Old Delhi. The Prime Minister of Burma complimented her on her "good voice, technique, and acting ability," and on her "beauty and charm of mind." At Ewha University in Seoul, Korea, she was awarded an honorary degree for her "Christian service to mankind." In Bombay the tour dramatically illustrated the interpenetration of cultures when, for the first time, "a visiting artist" (Miss Anderson) sang with "the only Western symphony orchestra between Tel Aviv and Tokyo."

Less formal, but nevertheless expressing an undeniable sympathy for Miss Anderson as she greeted them and sang for them "in close fashion" were the faces in her audiences—impassive, rapt children; old men and women; Eastern cosmopolites; peasants; clerks; lawyers. These faces of Asia, photographed and edited with perception and taste, burst with startling, vivid reality upon our parochial TV consciousness, smogged and sodden with the gunsmoke and mayas of Madison Avenue and Hollywood. The United States can be proud to have had such a great lady as Miss Anderson to send forth on this tour.

There were other rewards for the "See It Now" audience here in the United States. We saw and heard a native orchestra in Bombay playing Indian music, which Miss Anderson told us "has resisted all foreign influences." We shared the thrill of an item of raw material for history when, in Kuala Lumpur, in the Federation of Malaya, citizens of the newest nation on earth heard the first singing of their national anthem by a visiting artist. Miss Anderson's journey was not that of an individual—she was a symbol of individuality as it is conceived and given historical meaning by contemporary Americans. The broadcast derived its very moving impact from some degree of awareness in the viewers' minds that they were watching not only a propaganda tour but a veritable collision of many cultures—religious, political, esthetic, ethical. At each moment there were overtones of the diffusion, challenge, and potentials of unique civilizations.

WE MUST recognize that "The Lady from Philadelphia" as an act of high creative imagination in television, marshalling the resources of our technology for great human purposes, is uncommonly rare. There is only one Marian Anderson, not many Ed Murrows and Fred Friendlys, and less than a multitude of sponsors like International Telephone and Telegraph whose institutional character permits them to spend shareholders' money on a TV broadcast like this one. Yet we must never cease to hope, with Miss Anderson, that the gates are there for all to enter. What we peddle to Asia we may well use at home; and we are indebted to "See It Now" for this grand reminder of what TV sometimes is and can more often be.

—ROBERT LEWIS SHAYON.

The International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation, in its first use of network television, has signed as sponsor of "The Lady from Philadelphia: Through Asia with Marian Anderson" on "SEE IT NOW," Monday, December 30 over the CBS Television Network.

International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation is the American-owned electronic and tele-communications manufacturer with plants, laboratories and operations in the United States and 22 other countries.

Announcement of the I. T. & T. sponsorship was made in New York today (Wednesday) by General Edmond H. Leavey, President of I. T. & T., and by Merle S. Jones, President of CBS Television.

The special "SEE IT NOW" full-hour program will be presented at 10:00-11:00 PM, EST. (More)

"Miss Anderson has performed a patriotic service for the United States in transmitting to Asian peoples, through her talent and her personality, the goodwill and honest intention of Americans toward the free countries of Asia," General Leavey declared.

"Our company, which is engaged in furthering communications throughout the free world is proud to have a part in this 'SEE IT NOW' report of Miss Anderson's tour and we believe that in participating in this presentation we are carrying on part of our corporate responsibility to the public, both here and abroad."

"SEE IT NOW" TO PRESENT MARIAN ANDERSON'S TRIUMPHANT TOUR OF SOUTHEAST ASIA IN "THE LADY FROM PHILADELPHIA" DEC. 30

Cameras Follow World Famous Contralto On 40,000 Mile Tour For State Department Through Seven Countries In Near East

The sell-out tour of Marian Anderson, one of the most celebrated of living artists, through Korea, the Philippines, Vietnam, Burma, Thailand, Malaya, and India, will be presented to viewers during Christmas Week in "The Lady From Philadelphia; Through Asia With Marian Anderson," on "See It Now," Monday, Dec. 30, over the CBS Television Network (10:00-11:00 PM, EST). Miss Anderson's tour was arranged by ANTA for the U. S. State Department.

Recognized as one of America's leading ambassadors of goodwill, Miss Anderson has sung to standing-room-only audiences wherever she has gone. Frequently, her concerts are completely sold out well in advance of her arrival and, in Paris last year, the demand for seats created a near riot with wire services reporting that the city's critics were happy to find seats on the stairs.

"The Lady From Philadelphia" will provide viewers with front-row seats as Miss Anderson sings at the Ewha University in Seoul, at theaters and schools in Manila, Rangoon, Bangkok, Bombay, Delhi, Kuala

A woman of great spiritual force, Miss Anderson is also seen discussing religion and citizenship with leaders in these countries and explaining to school children what her songs mean and what her country stands for.

Miss Anderson has performed before audiences totaling more than 5,000,000 people in countries all over the world and has received highest honors from these countries. A perennial maker of headlines, the great artist made international news several years ago when she became the first member of her race to sing at the Metropolitan opera. She holds Japan's coveted Yukosho Medal, Sweden's "Litteris et Artibus" Medal, and Finland's "Order of the White Rose," each award conferred on her by the ruler of the country in each case.

In tribute to her amazing voice, the great Arturo Toscanini told her, "A voice like yours is heard once in a hundred years." World-famous composer Sibelius exclaimed, "The roof of my house is too low for your voice."

"THROUGH THE VIDEO TUBE," OR
"LIFE WITH A 'SEE IT NOW' CREW"

Being a cameraman or soundman for Edward R. Murrow on his "See It Now" television series is quite different from handling the lenses in a Manhattan studio on other television shows.

You may be called upon to film Marshall Tito on a beautiful island in the Adriatic or to chronicle the bitter struggle of a small Tennessee town trying to comply with the law of the land.

Or, as the crew members have been doing for the past several months, you may be called upon to record some of the most exciting, dangerous and vital work in which Man is currently engaged -- the projects under way at our atomic laboratories.

Bob Clemens, assistant cameraman on a "See It Now" crew, tapped a common chord of frustration during the filming for "Atomic Timetable: Part I," which will be shown on CBS Television Sunday, Nov. 24 (5:00-6:00 PM, EST). After working for days in the midst of the vast and complex array of nuclear equipment at the National Reactor Testing Station, Idaho Falls, Idaho, Clemens suddenly dashed to a wall and began twirling the handle of a pencil sharpener he had noted there. In response to the blank looks of the crew, Clemens blurted out, "This is the first thing I've seen here in three days that I understand."

(More)

Quite different also, are the conditions under which these men worked during filming on the "Atomic Timetable" show. During part of the time at the huge new nuclear reactor power station nearing completion at Shippingport, Pa., a "See It Now" crew was poised precariously on a hanging steel platform directly over the awesome atomic pile which is the heart of the vast plant. For this chore, the crewmen had to work in tin helmets, new white coveralls and white canvas shoes; all their pockets were sealed; all rings were removed; eyeglasses were taped into position. All of this so that no impurity, not even the lint from their clothes, could possibly fall into the chemically pure reactor below.

Nerves of steel to match their equipment were required of the "See It Now" technicians when they were required to shoot -- through a protective layer of water -- the removal of "hot" uranium elements from the core of an atomic reactor. Without the intervening water, any of the radioactive elements would have been deadly enough to kill instantly everyone within a large radius.

Sometimes the job calls for quelling powerful instincts. Clemens, a victim of acrophobia (dread of height) was part of the crew that shot the fascinating experiments under way at the Tower Shielding Facility at Oak Ridge. In these experiments, a huge "live" reactor is slung on thick cables high above the tree-tops and a shielded metal cage, representing crew quarters of a possible atom-powered aircraft, is brought closer and closer to the reactor. The crew was required to set up shop on a thin metal bridge, 150 feet above ground, constructed of open beams.

(More)

The "See It Now" crews were required to submit to a complete body and equipment check for radioactivity daily while working in and around the atomic reactor sites. Each day, 1500 pounds of gear had to be wiped with a special cloth which was then submitted to a Geiger counter. During one such check, "See It Now" reporter Arthur Morse had the heart-quickening experience of hearing the counter report the presence of radioactive particles on his person and being rushed to the decontamination chamber. Examination located the radioactivity on Morse's right shoe, a dose far below lethal size, but still a most unusual occupational hazard.

Throughout the filming of "Atomic Timetable: Part I," one of the most irksome hardships, suffered by all members of the crews including Edward R. Murrow and co-producer Fred Friendly, was the absolute ban on smoking while at the reactor sites.

The Nov. 24 program is the first in a "See It Now" series devoted to peacetime uses of the atom and the men who are creating an atomic age. Great scientific leaders who will be interviewed at length by Murrow are Admiral Lewis E. Strauss, Rear-Admiral Hyman G. Rickover, Dr. Edward Teller and Britain's Sir John Cockcroft.

Atomic locations visited by the "See It Now" cameras include the huge Shippingport reactor power station, a joint project of Westinghouse Electric Corporation, Duquesne Light Company and the A.E.C.; Southern California Edison's generating plant at Santa Susana, utilizing power furnished by a nuclear reactor built by Atomics International,

"ATOMIC TIMETABLE" SERIES ON "SEE IT NOW" TO SHOW VIEWERS ACHIEVEMENTS, PROBLEMS AND GOALS OF ATOMIC SCIENTISTS

Part I, "Fission, Fusion And Abundance," Will Feature Peacetime Industrial Uses Of Atomic Energy, Nov. 24

"See It Now" cameras will take viewers along the exciting road to limitless power when they focus on current developments and trends in the application of atomic energy to peacetime industrial uses in "Atomic Timetable, Part I: Fission, Fusion And Abundance," Sunday, Nov. 24, on the CBS Television Network (5:00-6:00 PM, EST).

Future programs in the "Atomic Timetable" series will cover latest developments in medical and military applications of atomic power.

In "Fission, Fusion And Abundance" viewers will see fascinating and little-known details of some of the vital projects currently under way in the world's leading atomic laboratories. These include the Argonne National Laboratory in Chicago; the National Reactor Testing Station in Idaho Falls; the huge new nuclear reactor power station at Shippingport, Pa.; the world's first full-scale nuclear power station at Calder Hall in England; and an experimental reactor in Japan.

A highlight of the Nov. 24 broadcast will be the awful sight of deadly radioactive fuel elements -- glowing eerily at the bottom of a 60-foot swimming pool -- being readied underwater for shipment to various atomic testing stations. Another high point of the program will be the showing -- for the first time on television -- of the "Reactor in the Sky" at Oak Ridge. In the Tower Shielding Facility at the famed atomic research center, work is currently proceeding -- high above the tree-tops -- in testing methods of shielding the crew of atomic powered aircraft from the fatal radiations of atomic power plants.

In the "Atomic Timetable" series, "See It Now" will emphasize for the national viewing audience how rapidly Man is approaching the ends of two roads: one leading to a veritable Utopia based on an abundance of power to do the world's work, and the other leading to his complete and final extinction.

Distinguished scientists appearing on the program will include Admiral Lewis L. Strauss, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission; Rear Admiral Hyman G. Rickover, in charge of nuclear development for the U.S. Navy; Dr. Edward Teller, generally referred to as the chief architect of the hydrogen bomb; and, from Great Britain, leading atomic scientists Sir John Cockcroft and Sir Christopher Hinton.

Other phases of industrial atomics to be covered on the initial program will include the recovery of uranium from used fuel elements and the preservation of basic foods through atomic irradiation for periods up to several years, without refrigeration. Viewers will see conscientious objectors at Fitzsimons General Hospital in Denver consuming irradiated food as part of a long-range program testing the effects of such irradiation on humans.

"The Shipping Port Station represents the combined efforts of many organizations. No one organization and no one man is responsible for what has been accomplished. Those who work so hard and with such personal sacrifice to speed each part of this project to completion can never be given full recognition. It is to them - and to their families - that I wish to pay tribute today. This atomic power station is their offspring. Whatever credit there is belongs to them.

"As for myself, I am most grateful to have the privilege of being associated with this project - to be able to contribute whatever I can.

"Now that we have unlocked the energy of the atom man holds in his own hands the power to change his environment. Up to now, he has been able to accomodate himself to nature, but not to modify it. This power to modify his environment on a scale which can affect all humanity imposes on man a great moral and political responsibility. In attempting to do God's work, God help us if we do not do it wisely."

WALTER REUTHER, THOMAS WATSON, JR., M.I.T. PROFESSOR GORDON BROWN DISCUSS FUTURE IN TERMS OF AUTOMATION ON "SEE IT NOW"

Walter P. Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers and executive vice-president of the AFL-CIO, said yesterday (Sunday, June 9) on CBS Television's "See It Now" program "Automation: Weal Or Woe" (5:00-6:30 PM, EDT), that there's an urgent need for the joint creation by government, business and labor of "a technological clearinghouse to measure the impact of automation upon the displacement of labor and the American economy."

Reuther, interviewed on "See It Now" by Edward R. Murrow, went on to state that "General Motors knows about the automotive industry, General Electric about the electrical industry, the Standard Oil Co. about petroleum, DuPont about chemicals -- but there is no place now in the U.S. where anyone has pulled together all of the threads of this problem of automation and tried to weave it into a total pattern. What we've been suggesting is that free labor and free management, in cooperation with free government, ought to create some sort of a technological clearinghouse where there could be a central place where we could assemble all of the data on automation, and then begin to plan, as free people, to meet the problems and to realize the premise of the greater abundance that these machines will make possible."

Reuther also spoke about the need to re-train workers with the growth of automation. "We've got to re-train workers so that they can be absorbed at new skills as automation changes the character and the composition and the requirements of each job," Reuther stated, "but all of this will require some advanced planning, and one of the things that concerns us at the present time is that there is no place where we can get a total look at what is happening to the American economy in terms of the long pull."

Thomas J. Watson, Jr., chairman of the borad of International Business Machines, had this to say about automation when interviewed on "See It Now" by Mr. Murrow: "Automation will reduce the requirement for repetitive, non-creative thinking, but I certainly think it will increase the opportunity for men to think on the imaginative, creative lines. A good deal of this human element at the moment is semi-useless. I don't visualize great hordes of people being thrown out of work by automation in any given industry...the process is a very slow one. Automation is really just an extension of the industrial revolution."

Also interviewed on "See It Now's" "Automation: Weal Or Woe" was Professor Gordon B. Brown, of M.I.T., one of the outstanding authorities on automation and cybernetics (the science of automatic computation). This is what he said: "Automation is not the third industrial revolution. It is a wholly new kind of revolution. It's an intellectual revolution. I think the human being has to become smarter, he has to become better educated. We'll have to come up with new ideas about how we can work one with another -- new ideas in terms of the values of human contact, and a better and more harmonious marriage between government, labor, management and John Q. Citizen. I think the future is terrific. I wish I were going to live for another hundred years."

"See It Now's" "Automation: Weal Or Woe" was produced by Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly.

By Gertrude Bailey

THE PACIFIC and Atlantic Oceans were visible simultaneously on television for the first time in history on November 18, 1951. Many viewers missed this event when, in celebration of the first transcontinental TV cable, pitchmen, horse operas, Hollywood stars, and politicians were bursting into every living room.

To televise two oceans by "live" pickups from America's East and West Coasts, Columbia Broadcasting System TV cameras were stationed on San Francisco's Telegraph Hill and on Governors Island in New York.

This was Reporter Edward R. Murrow's way of covering the event. It also served to introduce "See It Now," a half-hour Sunday afternoon TV show that in three months has built a 25-million national audience for CBS Studio 41, where a series of monitor screens, and Ed Murrow out in front, document the week's news with the people and places that make the news.

"In less knowing hands than Murrow's, the simultaneous pickup of two coasts might have been only an amazing stunt," wrote Critic Jack Gould in the New York Times, "but he also pointed the meaningful moral: Television is a medium to be approached in humility."

"A TV cable does not have the power to change any man," is the way Murrow explained his approach to the news. "I am too radical and too conservative, too serious and too frivolous," said Murrow. "At the same time I am a reactionary, a socialist, anti-Truman, and anti-Republican — and I have the letters to prove it."

Murrow resigned the vice-presidency of CBS in 1947 to get back to shirt-sleeve reporting, two-finger typing, and a daily routine that his associates describe as "bleeding over his copy." But, he's still a member of the Board of Directors of CBS.

"See It Now" is the sight-and-sound development of an idea and collaboration that began in 1948 with the widely-acclaimed "I Can Hear It Now" albums made for Columbia Records. In those albums, Murrow narrated a continuity for actual voices and sounds of the men and women who made history from President Franklin D. Roosevelt's first term of office to the end of World War II.

Last season on the CBS radio series "Hear It Now," Murrow and his co-producer, Fred W. Friendly, attempted to do in a week's time what they took months to do in their record albums. They won a George Foster Peabody citation for their efforts. Murrow continues to be heard regularly on CBS radio, "Edward R. Murrow and the News," 7:45-8 PM, EST.

Dignified but not stuffy, Murrow has a serious expression that breaks into a boyish, radiant grin at times. As an on-camera editor and narrator, he shows no signs of tenseness in front of the cameras. A handsome man of 43 with a direct gaze from deep-set eyes punctuated by furry eyebrows, he introduces his subject with a confident voice and an economy of words.

Invariably smoking a cigarette as the show opens, Murrow is master of the situation. In a new medium that can be unpredictable, most of the programs have been polished productions with smooth transitions. Typical was a recent half-hour that included a feature film visit to SHAPE's headquarters in France and an interview with General Eisenhower; flashes from Churchill's speech before Congress in Washington; and sandwiched between the two, a live demonstration of a new scientific discovery, Krilium soil conditioner, with a direct line to Monsanto laboratories in St. Louis for an interview with Dr. C. A. Hochwalt and other company scientists who helped to develop the product.

In an effort to take televiewers into untelevised territory, Murrow sometimes tries the impossible, like televising from the control room of a submarine while surfacing. In that case, cables were run from the submarine control room to a flat-top LSM anchored a safe distance away. Picture and sound were scheduled to be relayed two miles to a broadcasting point on the shore. Murrow explained later than only snatches came through, for every time the LSM yawed one degree with the tide, the picture "tore." But submarine engineers considered the experiment successful. CBS technicians now believe it would have worked if they had been able to get all of the TV equipment into the submarine. Commented Murrow: "We have a lot to learn."

He calmly told his TV audience as much the day an ambitious film report on peacetime uses of atomic energy got out of synchronization. That was the day Murrow was forced to use the "life boat," an audience tour of the control room previously agreed upon by the staff if anything ever went wrong. The staff had agreed on another point: that the men in Telecine (control room) were not to talk back when Murrow addressed them, since they were always on the air.

After the tour, Murrow decided to let the audience in on the difficulties.

"It's all right, fellows, you can talk. What's going on up there?" he asked.

Telecine staff members interpreted this as meaning they were off the air and came right back with "We're working like hell trying to fix it."

At this, Murrow slowly swung around to smile into the camera. "Brief, but eloquent," he said, and then quickly added, serious again, "We can learn a lot about atomic energy, and as you can see, we have a lot to learn about television."

Just as brief and eloquent, and an example of the economy of words which typifies Murrow's usual narra-

Viewing two oceans 3,000 miles apart simultaneously was accomplished for the first time on "See It Now." This is how the event looked on the monitoring screens in the CBS-TV studios, with the Pacific and the dim outline of the Golden Gate Bridge at left, the Atlantic at right.

The teamwork of Edward R. Murrow (left) and his co-producer of "See It Now," Fred W. Friendly, makes the show possible. Murrow still has a sense of frustration about television, "because we can't get all the news in the program, and it's tough getting pictures."

tion, was his introduction of Monsanto's Krilium soil conditioner:

"We sometimes forget that man lives by the soil and a great many men have died to defend it . . ."

The atomic energy film that got "out of sync" later ran six hours without a hitch, and without an audience.

Now Murrow and Friendly agree that they will always have a duplicate print, just in case. They had two prints when they repeated the program January 27, and the first one worked fine when it was run.

Coverage for "See It Now" is provided by four special mobile camera crews; films from CBS-TV news correspondents abroad, all of whom are equipped with movie cameras; clips from CBS-TV's own local and freelance camera crews; and from newsreel crews especially briefed, covering the world. The films are processed and edited in New York City. Aluminum Company of America now is sponsor of the program.

Most of the "See It Now" crew worked for Murrow and Friendly on "Hear It Now." Among them are Reporter-Editors Ed Scott, John Aaron, and Jesse Zousmer, who plan and time live pickups and help to plot feature film pieces. (Aaron visited St. Louis and set up the live pickup on Krilium soil conditioner at Monsanto on January 6.) Each week, as the program goes on the air, will find at least three of the reporters in different sections of the country supervising pickups. One camera crew spent nine days filming the story of coal miners in Grant Town, Va. Five days was actual shooting time, and three days of this were spent in the mines.

Theatre-type 35-mm. film is used instead of 16-mm. For better sound quality, sound is recorded on tape and subsequently synchronized with the film. No stills are used and the producers promise: "There'll be no barking dogs or bathing beauties."

One of the ways Murrow and Friendly can judge the increasing impact of "See It Now" is by the number of widely-known personalities who want to appear on the show. When Governor Adlai Stevenson of Illinois, after a visit with President Truman, wanted to deny front-page stories that he intended to be a presidential candidate, he chose "See It Now" and an interview with Murrow to announce his candidacy for "reelection for governor of Illinois."

"We are trying not to get too big for our britches," is the way Murrow interprets his plans for "See It Now." "We will endeavor to assist the listener in weighing and judging developments throughout the world, but will refrain—particularly with respect to all controversial, political, social, and economic questions – from trying to make up the listener's mind for him.

"Occasionally we have politicians, not often, and we are critically nonpolitical," Murrow emphasized.

Maybe this is why, after Irving Berlin appeared to sing his original words to "I Like Ike," Murrow announced: "If any other candidates come along with a song as good as 'I Like Ike,' we'll be glad to use it on the program."

Following Berlin's appearance, Murrow heard that the Chicago Tribune had predicted that "See It Now" was more likely to present a political song entitled, "I Like Kefauver," and the paper was willing to bet no one would get up and sing, "I Like Taft." Murrow challenged the editors to get Cole Porter to write a song about Taft and he'd use it.

Beginning this month, "See It Now" will be broadcast in France, the first regularly-scheduled foreign program carried by the French National Network. The show will be carried by television, recording in the original version with French subtitles. In an exchange agreement, "See It Now" will have the right to select film documents from the French television "Magazine of the Air."

In the works is a "tail" piece (TV equivalent for feature story) on Israel. Murrow deliberately picked Honorary membership in the crew of the U.S.S. Sablefish (shown surfacing) was the reward for the CBS-TV team which accomplished the first telecast from a submerged submarine. Wind and yawing of the LSM (in the foreground) caused the most trouble. A multiple microwave link from the submarine to the LSM to a mobile unit two miles away on Long Island and thence to the Empire State building was the involved process necessary for the feat.

"a little Irishman" who was far removed from the scene and not too close to the history of Israel to send for this assignment, because he consistently seeks the fresh viewpoint and "if the whole venture is understandable to Ed Scott, the rest of us will understand it, too."

Adding to the TV firsts on "See It Now" was the February 17 telecast of a heart operation from Philadelphia.

While this surgical sequence had been broadcast in full color to a limited audience of doctors, this was the first time that the public had been allowed to see it on TV.

Ed Murrow won fame as a reporter without ever working on a newspaper. Son of a farmer and locomotive engineer of Greensboro, N. C., he made Phi Beta Kappa at Washington State College; worked in forests as a timber cruiser during college vacations; served as compassman and topographer; became president of the National Student Federation of America in 1930-32, when he visited 300 American schools and traveled extensively throughout Europe. In 1932, he was made assistant director of the Institute of International Education in charge of foreign offices in London, Paris, Geneva, and other European centers. That experience, plus his ability as a speaker, helped win him his first position with CBS radio in 1935, when he became director of Talks and Education.

In 1937, Murrow was CBS radio's sole representative in England. His job was to arrange cultural programs. But in 1938, when he was en route to Poland to set up a children's broadcast, the Nazis marched into Austria. Alone, Murrow chartered a 23-passenger plane and got to Vienna in time to describe the arrival of the German troops. From there he went to London, formed the network's roster of correspondents, and began covering some of the events that were to shake the world. The rest is radio and TV history.

Called frequently "the best known and most influential American commentator," Murrow insists that the mechanics of television and radio do not confer great wisdom or infallibility on any individual.

"I try to be a reporter," he says. "A commentator is a kind of oracle, and I am never so sure I'm right."

A clutter of television apparatus only added to the ordinarily complicated appearance of Monsanto's Lab 19 during the sequence on Krilium soil conditioner made from the company's St. Louis laboratories. Dr. C. A. Hochwalt, Monsanto vice president, at left, is shown before the KSD-TV cameras which handled the remote telecast. He described demonstrations by Dr. Dave Mowry and Dr. Mel Hedrick of the Central Research Department.

No Barking Dogs, Bathing Beauties on 'See It Now'

By JOSEPH WEGLARZ

BEFORE the Columbia Broadcasting System's television show "See It Now" was premiered, Fred W. Friendly, co-producer with commentator Edward R. Murrow, said, "We can promise one thing—there'll be no barking dogs or bathing beauties on 'See It Now.'"

Using the facilities of mobile camera crews in Korea, Washington, Europe and on roving assignments, a staff of ten editors and CBS correspondents throughout the world "takes the world and dumps it into your living room," Friendly says.

Murrow, who narrates the show from a swivel chair throughout the half-hour on the air, has brought to the new medium what Jack Gould, radio critic of the "New York Times," calls the "original thinking," which television has been starving for.

Program Responsible For Many 'Firsts'

In his opening program Murrow showed for the first time "live" shots of both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans on the same screen. From that time on, "See It Now" has added another notable first to its list each week it has been on the air.

The editors of "See It Now" didn't run dry of ideas after the radio critics had reviewed the show. They began developing a style that newspaper publishers could begin worrying over. News commentators on television previously gave the publishers little to be vexed about when they used overworked pictures of the scattered wreckage of an airliner, tanks rolling on the Korean front and sad-faced lost dogs. They did little to improve over the reporting of their colleagues on radio.

Murrow, realizing that the full potential of television had not yet been reached, directed his staff to rip out from the thousands of feet of film that they edit each week any scene resembling a rehearsed speech or directed action. As a result, the show which originates from the actual control room of Studio 41 in the Grand Central Building and received by thirty-five TV stations throughout the country has the appearance of a "living newspaper," easy to read and many times more informative.

Followed Blood from Donor to Korea

In a feature film on blood, Murrow's cameramen followed a pint of blood from the donor in the states to the Korean front. The pilot of the helicoper delivering the blood to a field hospital was asked to say a few words on the need for it. His comment, an eulogy on Murrow, was cut from the final showing. Murrow said, "It looked like we were patting ourselves on the back."

The monitor from Studio 41 is also silent at times. The editor of "See It Now" believes that the face of a wounded soldier can more adequately describe pain than a sheet of yellow copy paper.

After a few performances on the air by a cast that lived the parts that they played, "See It Now" has been called both a documentary and a news show. A documentary because it records the feeling of the times and a news show because it screens events that will effect the news of tomorrow.

A feature film on SHAPE shows the working organization of General Dwight Eisenhower's command and measures its function with an eye focused 365 days from today. A documentary on coal miners takes the camera 650 feet below the surface of a mine in Grant Town, West Virginia, and travels with a section crew from Federal Mine No. 1 from the time they enter the mine until they leave.

The faces of the miners when they leave are coated with black dust and their eyes have long given up hope of ever leaving the mines. The week after, Murrow took his television camera to interview a mechanical brain, a machine that does the work of many men and eliminates thousands of hours of labor. "A machine," Murrow says, "that can do anything except dig coal."

Murrow looks at a commentator as a kind of oracle, and instead tries to be a reporter who is never sure he is right. He shows this quality of uncertainness through the many hours that he spends on making "See It Now" a top television presentation.

Edward R. Murrow at work on CBS' "See It Now" from Studio 41.

The painstaking quality that goes into "See It Now" is best reflected in the time spent on its feature films. Days are spent in filming a sequence that will be screened for only a few minutes. Murrow is a "bleeder" who sweats over every second that goes into his show and is never satisfied. His editors, cameramen, film-cutters and assistants are kept busy cutting and rewriting, and always seem to need more time and help.

His long time friend and co-producer, Fred W. Friendly, says that his average work week ranges from eighty to ninety hours.

Friendly is the inside man who spends half his time watching news rushes and the other half on the long distance telephone. He may call a scientist out West, a correspondent in England or a congressman in Washington. His day may close with a visit from a worried CBS executive who has seen the show's budget.

The cost of a week's performance on "See It now" runs to about $20,000 a week which is believed to be the highest figure that any network spends for a once-a-week half-hour news show. The top money spender in the news class is the early morning NBC-TV show, "Today," which goes on Monday through Friday from 7 to 9 a.m. (E.S.T.).

The usual procedure in a sponsored program is for the client to pay for the air time plus the expenses of the show, such as the salaries of entertainers, directors, writers, cast and cost of sets. ALCOA has deviated from the usual policy and a share in costs agreement was arranged between client and network. A tightened budget can be measured on "See It Now" by the length of time spent on its feature films. The longer the films run, the lower the budget.

When all the film has been edited, copy written and a few hours of rehearsal on Sunday morning have been rushed through, "See It Now" is ready for another Sunday afternoon showing. At air time (3:30 p.m., E.S.T.) the camera shows the control board of Studio 41 and then focuses on the boom cameras in the background. The only signs of formality on the show are the coat-wearing technicians and Murrow, neatly attired in a favorite pin-striped suit. The sound studios of "Hear It Now" have seldom witnessed the protocol of "See It Now" but the shirt-sleeved attitude is still there on the screen through the informality of the presentation.

When Murrow first showed the two great oceans on the same screen, some people called it a stunt. They wondered how he would utilize the new medium in "an out-of-the-ordinary news show." The answer was pictorially portrayed in a special pre-Christmas presentation which illustrated the scope and technique that "See It Now" tries to achieve.

Thirty-seven television cameras were used to depict a country in the holiday spirit, setting a record for the use of TV cameras on a single television show.

Servicemen were shown debarking from a troopship in San Francisco. There was a shot of the festivities in Hollywood. Another in a mail room of a Chicago post office showed the gigantic piles of cheer that plague a big city during the holiday seasons. From there, the camera went to a party for crippled children at the Shriner's Hospital in St. Louis. It paid a visit to Cleveland to show sailors decorating their ships for Christmas, and then moved on to the mansion of a Kentucky colonel. Scenes of the crowds in Grand Central station were shown and the program closed with a shot of a party in a home for children. It was unrehearsed and another first for television by Murrow.

Tape Breaking Always a Threat

When the television camera is not used, the sound heard on the film is recorded on tape similar to the one used by Murrow on "Hear It Now." A 35 mm. film, the same as used in professional movie-making is used instead of 16 mm.

The danger of the tape breaking always threatens Murrow on Sundays. During the running of a film on the first peacetime use of atomic energy, explaining how radioactive iodine is used in the treatment of thyroid cancer, the tape broke and a blah-blah sound accompanied the film. His ad-libbing was so adept that for a moment it seemed as if "reporter" Murrow planned it that way. When the blah-blah came again after the tape was repaired, Murrow told his audience, "We had endeavored in our film to show you something about radioactive iodine which we didn't know anything about. It now seems that we don't know anything about television either."

The sponsor of "See It Now," the Aluminum Company of America, cooperates with Murrow in presenting a different type of commercial. The atmosphere of the show is kept alive with the commercial which is designed to be informal and instructive and is minus the jingle or polished agency copy. Murrow also has an agreement with ALCOA that its commercials will not interfere in the quality of the show, and should some Sunday's show need an extra minute, the time comes off the commercial. One show recently ran too long, and "See It Now" closed without any commercial.

Aims For More Than Entertainment

Murrow, who also has his own radio program on CBS five nights a week, "Edward R. Murrow and the News," has made Sunday afternoons more than an entertaining half hour for his television audience. He has presented the gory as well as light side of the news, and his sometimes stinging comment may have left an unpleasant feeling after the noon-day meal.

"See It Now" has taken a big step forward in using the new medium of television as a means of presenting a sight and sound review of the news of the week. It only remains now to see what influence it will carry in any new programming that the TV networks will undertake.

Aluminum Co. of America To Sponsor Program
Beginning With Broadcast of December 2

"See It Now," produced by Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly, the ultimate sight-and-sound development of an idea and collaboration that began with the widely-acclaimed "I Can Hear It Now" albums for Columbia Records, makes its debut as a weekly news program over the CBS Television Network, Sunday, Nov. 18 (CBS-TV, 3:30-4:00 PM, EST).

Two weeks later, on Sunday, Dec. 2, the Aluminum Company of America begins sponsorship of the program.

"See It Now," television successor to CBS Radio's "Hear It Now," which won a George Foster Peabody citation last season, projects into the medium of sight and sound the Murrow-Friendly technique of presenting the news through the people who make the news. Persons and events on the front pages during the week will be seen and heard on "See It Now." The program will be in effect the news magazine of television.

With Murrow as on-camera editor, the news will be presented through live pickups of events, and with motion pictures specially filmed for "See It Now." The news will include personal interviews, overseas reports, biographical features, human-interest stories, documentary features and late news breaks.

The program will be backed by the news-gathering facilities of CBS Television News. There will be reports from the top news agencies; films from CBS Television News correspondents abroad, all of whom are equipped with movie cameras; clips from CBS-TV's own local and free-lance camera crews, and from newsreel companies covering the world. Still pictures will be available from the wires of a specially leased International News Photo circuit and from the CBS Television Network's huge files. Graphic illustrations - animated charts, maps, diagrams, special effects - will be provided by CBS-TV's own staff of news artists.

In addition, "See It Now" will have the exclusive use of four mobile camera crews, each consisting of a reporter, cameraman and soundman. One is in Korea, another in Washington, a third accompanied Murrow to Europe in his coverage of the British elections, and the fourth, at this writing, is on roving assignment in West Virginia.

ANNCR: CBS, In cooperation with its affiliated television stations from coast to coast, presents the distinguished reporter and news analyist, Edward R. Murrow....

In SEE IT NOW ... a document for television based on the week news and told in the voices and faces that made the news, produced by Mr. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly ... A public service of the Columbia Television network. Now, speaking from the actual control room of Studio 41, is the editor of SEE IT NOW, Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is an old team trying to learn a new trade. Four years ago we began producing the I CAN HEAR IT NOW record albums. A year ago we began doing a weekly radio version called HEAR IT NOW. In preparing to do SEE IT NOW on television, we were faced with the problem of "where to do it from". As they say in the trade, "Where do we originate". In the record albums and HEAR IT NOW, we had always prided ourselves on the fact that every voice we used was real ... every sound, raw ... No actors; no sound effects. How, then, could we originate our television version on a TV sound stage with sets, props and the usual variety of effects which are a necessary part of what is basically an entertainment medium.....

MURROW: (CTD) There was talk of originating in my office. Even this, they said, would have to be a duplication of my office and this seemed a bit phony. So, as an experiment, we have decided to try doing the show from where all television shows have to originate...the control room. I am talking to you from the control room of Studio 41, for actually, if I have any function on this show, it is really only that of a switcher who occasionally leans over the cameramens' shoulder to whisper something in your ear. I say switcher, because that is exactly what we do. We have many video and audio lines coming into this control room from all over the United States. Each of these lines is reflected here in the form of a monitor. (a television screen.)

MURROW: (CTD) We can have one line from Chicago terminating on one monitor, a line from Washington on another, and then we decide which picture you might enjoy seeing. As long as you will be here with us, we thought you might like to watch us make these switches so you'll see the monitors with us.....For example: [redacted]. . . . ([redacted]PT)

Some people take television for granted. We, as novitiates, have never quite gotten over the miracle that makes this fantastic gadget operate...For example, we turn to monitor number one, push a button, and say? come in, please, Atlantic Coast.

As we said before, we are slightly overwhelmed by this television gadget. Reporters in the past have been given great weapons.. the printing press, the typewriter, the linotype machine, the teletype, newspapers, radio ... but no journalistic age was ever given a weapon for truth with quite the scope of this fledgling television. This afternoon, as we begin our shake-down cruise in this staggering new medium, we want you to know that we are aware of the electronic wonder entrusted to our fingers.

MURROW: (OVER APPLAUSE) For the new prime minister it was no easy week. His government was forced to announce coal rationing and the prospect of reduced food rations. With bankruptcy around the corner, Britain would cut her imports from the dollar area. Angry anti-British protests from Egypt and Iran continued as the Prime Minister prepared to come to Washington in January. But first, at London's Guildhal Winston Churchill, the famed orator, defined the hopes of the free world and the tactics of the Communists.

CHURCHILL: AS EDITED

MURROW: Only one of Britain's shortages seemed to be ending. Once again there was an abundance of colorful speech makers in the British cabinet ..... Howard Smith, Chief of CBS' European Bureau, has been in Paris all week covering the General Assembly, and we thought you might like his reactions .... Now, as you know, there are no television circuits to Paris, but two days ago we ordered up a trans-atlantic radio circuit and did this brief interview with Smith. We had this filmed in Paris and the films arrived just a few hours ago. [redacted] .

SMITH: "HELLO N.Y. THIS IS H. SMITH RECORDING IN PARIS.

MURROW: How are things going in Paris, Howard?

MURROW: What prospect, if any, is there, Howard, of the General Assembly accepting Secretary Acheson's disarmament plan?

MURROW: In sizing up this situation so far, Howard, what would you say is the most important business the assembly has to concern itself with?

MURROW: Tell me this, Howard, do you think that anything positive is likely to come out of the Paris meeting?

ON FILM

MURROW: Thank you, Howard. That was CBS correspondent Howard K. Smith reporting from the United Nations General Assembly in Paris. The next voice you will hear will be that of Senator Everett Dirkson of Illinois.....The next face you will see, for the most part, is that of Senator Robert A. Taft. In preparation for a future television profile, we are preparing on Senator Taft, we have had a camera crew out following him around on his current campaign tour.....One night our camera happened to catch Senator Taft just as Senator Dirkson happened to be talking about the kind of man he wanted to see in the White House. Senator Taft's expression is even better than Dirkson's speech.

DIRKSON: (ENDING WITH ....)

MURROW: At this point in our program we had intended to interview Governor Earl Warren in San Francisco, but the California Governor made news twice this week ... On Wednesday by announcing that he was going to run for the presidency; on Thursday, by going to the hospital. We hope he's better, and he has promised to let us have his views later on. Warren, like Taft and the other candidates, made news, but NOT as much as the man who says his hat is not in the ring. Ike was still silent, but Senator Jim Duff of Pennsylvania and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge were out beating the bushes for him. Both Senators are in our Washington studios right now, and we though you'd like to hear from two of the Gentlemen who are convinced that Ike will run.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS BETWEEN MURROW, DUFF AND LODGE, WE HOPE!

MURROW: Almost seven months ago to the day, another famous American spoke in San Francisco. Douglas MacArthur stepped off a plane and said he was home, wanted no part of politics and went on to his new classic speech to Congress in which he predicted that "the old soldier was just going to fade away." That was seven months and —— speeches ago. The General as is certainly his privilege, has neither faded away nor forsaken politics. While there has been much speculation as to whether Eisenhower is a Republican or a Democrat and whether he will take part in the '52 campaign, MacArthur has left no doubt as to his political party. In a ringing speech in Seattle this week, the General made it clear that he was entering the '52 campaign. For if he is not to be a candidate himself, he will certainly be a power, and in a political generation of colorless speakers such as Truman and Taft, he may turn out to be the most dynamic spokesman of the campaign. His Seattle speech, if not an entire platform, certainly had most of the planks.....

The General on Socialism .....

MacArthur's views on the present administration .....

The General makes a suggestion to the voters .....

One great General quotes another great general.....

MURROW: Within the last fortnight, American footsoldiers at Frenchman's Flat, Nevada, were introduced to what some have called their successors; atomic tactical weapons. Some have said that the American doughfoot as we know him is obsolete. It may well be that this is the twilight of the combat trooper as we now know him. However, in this, the late afternoon of the doughfoot, it is well worth noting that the last battles won on this earth have been won by that old fashioned weapon — the American footsoldier. As Assistant Secretary of Defense Anna Rosenberg said as she returned from Korea last week:

R'BERG: I went to Korea to see our man power, but I saw the force of our men. I saw the magnificance of their spirit. I saw the spirit that makes America great. Never in my life have I seen such spirit before.

MURROW: Because we think that if television news has a place in American journalism, it must be able to transport people, we are about to try to transport ourselves to Korea to see what Anna Rosenberg saw and at the same time, try to pay tribute to what we still think is our best weapon, the American G. I. We sent a camera crew to Korea to stay with CBS correspondent Bob Pierpoint and try to capture on film and sound the spirit of a U.S. infantry company in a twenty-four hour period. We specified the 24th Division, partly because we had seen them in action along the Naktong line in the first months of the Korean war, but more so because the 24th had it as tough as long and as often as any outfit there. We asked Pierpoint to get as much live sound as possible and not to try too hard for hot combat shots, but rather to concentrate on the men, the cold dawns, the chow lines, the poker games, the bull sessions, the loneliness and the griping against rotation. Correspondent Pierpoint agreed on our choice of the 24th Division, but asked if he might concentrate on the 19th Regiment of that Division, because it had borne the brunt of the Division's fighting .....

BRIEFING BEGINS

MURROW: (VOICE ONLY) This, then, is Fox Company of the 19th Regiment of the 24th Division near dusk of a recent afternoon as the Regimental Commander greets and indoctrinates the new crop of replacements.

Dear Dave:

Thanks muchly for yours of April 11. I am delighted that the pictures met some measure of approval.

Am just back from Washington where General Bradley, amongst others, spoke of you in the highest possible terms. Forgive me for not answering your cable about Ike's successor. I attempted to thrash it out with Bradley, but he just stuck his chin out and wouldn't give an inch.

We will send you another kinescope or two in the course of next week. I think the one we did on the Missouri River flood last week was a fairly good job.

Dear Ed and Fred,

I had another showing of your pictures at a dinner party which I gave at my house last night.

The dinner guests, plus people I invited for the showing after dinner, totaled thirty and a full list of names is appended.

The pictures had a huge success with the Americans and French both. None of the Americans present had seen your show before, since they have been mostly living over here or traveling since it has been on the air.

Irwin Shaw, Milt Sperling, Doug Schneider and Teddy White were tremendously enthused. Irwin said it was the finest job of visual reporting he had ever seen. Sperling told me that the Korean report packed much more punch than any of the fictitious war stories they turn out in the Hollywood studios.

Eve Curie was, if anything, even more enthusiastic and said that your opening show was the finest reporting she had ever witnessed in any medium. Eve also liked the SHAPE report although she was, as you might expect, very critical of her own appearance - that is the photography. She thought that the SHAPE picture suffered from being shown along with the Korean piece, quite naturally, because of the difference in dramatic and human interest between a hot war story and a paper headquarters. She thought that the SHAPE report was excellent as far as it went, but that it left her with a longing to have seen more, particularly to have seen some soldiers and something of concrete Western defense outside the headquarters. This was not the opinion of most of the other viewers who understood that the picture had not promised to be anything more than a report on SHAPE. Irwin Shaw and Pierre de Leusse said that they had not really understood or appreciated what SHAPE was until they had seen this picture.

Eve called me this morning and I gave her your address, Ed, at the Park Avenue apartment. She is going to write you directly about the pictures.

I wish you would send me some new kines for more showings. Send them addressed to SHAPE, Public Information Division, APO 55, Postmaster New York, Attention Major Robert Cranston. If possible, use a CBS or See It Now label, so that Cranston will know immediately what it is and deliver it to me. In this way we avoid customs hold ups.

With best personal regards to you both,

Dear Dave:

This is a hasty and hectic note in answer to yours of November 29. I have discussed the matter with Chester since it would eventually come to him anyway. He suggests and I concur that Niven should turn in his expense account for the Paris operation in the usual way merely slugging it "See It Now". Seems to me that this method will avoid some bookkeeping on your part and the accounting can be out-straightened here.

Used your altogether delightful piece with Mrs. Roosevelt last Sunday. Both Schoenbrun and the photography excellent. Using part of your Plevan piece tomorrow if we ever get the show stuck together. Television is hell but we're getting a lot of help, particularly from you guys abroad. I am looking forward eagerly to the reunion at the year's end.

5 December 1951

Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System,
Madison Avenue, at 51st Street,
New York City.

My dear Ed,

Both General Lanham and David Schoenbrun have asked me to communicate directly with you on this subject.

As you can well understand, we have been subjected to heavy pressure from other networks, both for television clips of General Eisenhower but in particular for the release of the clip made at your request. Because of the agreement between us, General Lanham has rigidly adhered to what he promised.

It does, however, bring up a couple of points of which you and Fred Friendly should be aware. David Schoenbrun has been kept fully advised.

1. The Basic Problem: It was our understanding that you would let us know, well in advance, the exact time-and-date on which your SHAPE Program would be broadcast (including the Eisenhower clip). We asked Schoenbrun for a "target date" and he first gave us Sunday, 9 December. Since then, he has said that this date is out and that it may be Christmas week. Based on the possibility that it might be Sunday, 9 December, we airmailed two (2) fine-grain prints of the Eisenhower clip to the U.S. Army's Signal Corps Photographic Center at Astoria, New York, to be available for release. Nothing will be done by them until further instructions from PID, SHAPE. Now, we must know from you and Fred Friendly when you propose to release this show. If this information is not possible at this particular time, we must know one week in advance of broadcast, in order to carry out our obligations. I must therefore officially ask you to send us this information as soon as possible. Without it, we will remain in a most difficult position. I am sure you understand.

2. The Chief of Staff, General Gruenther, asked David Schoenbrun the other day if it were possible to include some French officers in the show. He made it very clear that we have no right to question what you use, under the principle of Free Press. By the same token, friendship gives one a right to suggest. General Gruenther thought that if General Bodet (who is in the sequence with General Festing) might appear in the broadcast, it would help tell of the contribution our French colleagues are making here, absence of whom would be conversely harmful. If you can ensure this, I will be grateful for some word, since the Chief of Staff undoubtedly will bring it up. He is as meticulous a boss as Bill Paley or Frank Stanton. (Or even Fred.)

3. Simultaneous release: I explained that we have had some trouble already on this item. A representative of another network scornfully called you "a genius", in front of General Lanham, in trying to prove that this film should be released forthwith. (Horrible reputation you have !) So that you may know in detail (Schoenbrun sat in the meetings which developed this principle), let me restate how we propose to proceed:

a. Newsreel deadlines are always a problem. Therefore, we have separated television, the entity, from newsreels. When an idea originates with a television company, we call it a "TV Idea", and television deadlines take priority. Conversely, when a newsreel company suggests an idea, it is called a "Newsreel Idea", and their deadlines take priority. Yours is a "TV Idea", obviously.

b. On the Friday before your Sunday broadcast, we will issue prints of this particular Eisenhower clip to all television and newsreel outlets. With this film will go a firm embargo, including time and date for your broadcast, without specifying that it is your broadcast. This will give the other companies a fair chance to work the Eisenhower material into any shows they may have at the same time on Sunday, or thereafter. This is our basic principle on all Eisenhower material. We realize that an embargo depends on honor and integrity. But so do contracts, the basis of our free civilization. So both you and I have no choice but to rely on honor and integrity. I cannot believe it will be broken. The prints will be issued the Friday morning (after you give us the definite Sunday date and time) from the Signal Corps Photographic Center at Astoria, New York. Simultaneously, in Paris, with a similar embargo, this same material will be released for European outlets.

It is most important that we get this date and time from you as soon as possible. The long delay in using this Eisenhower clip could cause a slip somewhere. If anyone else has an acceptable Eisenhower film/television idea, please know that it will be made and released in the same manner, and the timing will be determined, not by us, but by the originator, again.

Dear Ed,

As you know, I have been busy full time on the SHAPE film for See It Now. It has been necessary to keep Paul Niven here in Paris during this period.

Howard agreed to let Paul do this and got clearance from CBS Radio for that purpose, although I believe he merely said that I was very busy and needed help, without specifying the details for reasons I am sure you will appreciate.

The question arising now is the problem of Niven's living expenses here in Paris: Hotel, meals, taxis, etc. As you can imagine, it might raise a difficult issue if Paul were to bill CBS Radio for this. I feel myself that these expenses are logically chargeable on the See It Now budget, since Niven's work here permitted me to devote all of my time to the picture and since I am being payed expenses normally by CBS Radio. I discussed this with Howard who agreed that we put the matter up to you and relieve Niven of the necessity of taking it up with Chester.

Could you let me know whether you believe this is the correct procedure, and if so I will tell Niven to submit to me his expense accounts which I will pay by cheque and then send the receipt to you for reimbursement?

Best regards,

David

"SEE IT NOW"

CARL SANDBURG AT THE LINCOLN MEMORIAL

February 10, 1952

Lincoln's Birthday Program - Feb 10, 1952

18 Jan 52

Dear Carl Sandburg,

To put our phone conversation down on paper:

1. We invite you to be in Washington, Sunday, 10 February, to appear on "See It Now," Ed Murrow's show. Air time is 3:30 - 4 PM, eastern time. Your portion will run about three minutes.

Program tentatively is this:

Murrow will talk of Lincoln's birthday. He will say we asked Carl Sandburg, where would Sandburg take us for memorable places in Lincoln's life. Thereupon film will be shown of: a) log cabin, Hodgenville, Kentucky, birthplace. b) New Salem, restoration, store Lincoln kept. We'll pick the Offut store. c) Springfield, Illinois, Lincoln's home, house he lived in. d) White House, looking from Lincoln's room to Potomac.

Behind these pictures will be Sandburg's voice which we will record ahead of time, possibly when you're in Chicago. A few words on each place. For instance, the birthplace picture ... "So came the birth of Abraham Lincoln the 12th of February in the year 1809, in silence and pain from a wilderness mother on a bed of corn husks and bearskins ..." Or, also from your Prairie Years, the commentary on the New Salem Offut store, Offut's remarks: "Some day he will be President of the United States ... he can outrun, outlift, outwrestle and throw down any man in Sangamon County." You may of course wish to write new commentary for eadh place. This is merely illustration.

2. For the actual broadcast time, we are thinking of having you speak some of your Lincoln poetry from the Lincoln Memorial statue hall as our cameras pick up the statue and yourself. You may of course wish to write completely new lines.

3. Mr. Murrow's people have agreed that for your services they are to pay you five hundred dollars for the broadcast, plus travel expenses to and from Washington - Charlotte, North Carolina, plus hotel expenses here in Washington. I assume the method of payment will be worked out before broadcast time.

We will call you with complete details in sufficient time. Meantime, if you could work up four brief lines to describe the four places you've chosen, we could then arrange to record your voice speaking these lines, and dub the voice behind the film.

Take good care of yourself and we'll be seeing you.

Affectionately,

Joe Wershba

Dear Carl Sandburg:

This is to say my best thanks for the photograph and, belatedly, for your excellent contribution to the program.

The picture is being framed and will be hung in an appropriately prominent spot in my office. I am extremely proud to have it and shall indeed cherish it.

Dear Mr. Milner:

Thank you very much indeed for your letter of April 16.

We did in fact include both a picture and an identification of Mr. Stradling. It was done all too briefly, but the limitations of time cause us to cut each week a lot of things that we would like to include. Little as I know about the making of movies I was aware of Mr. Stradling's contribution.

In retrospect, I think we tried to cover too much ground in the Goldwyn piece and at some subsequent time I should like nothing better than to tackle a piece confined exclusively to the men who work with cameras. I know so little about the art myself and am so interested in it that I imagine a few million other people would react as I do. What do you think?

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I have been a faithful follower of your radio newscasts for many years and have enjoyed your factual reporting. It was therefore natural for me to follow you on your Sunday "See It Now" television programs, which reaches us here at 12:30 P.M. each Sunday.

Your interesting report on the "behind-the-scenes" activities at the Goldwyn Studio in Hollywood where Mr. Goldwyn was producing his $4,000.000.00 epic, "Hans Christian Andersen", once again proved to me that my time with you was worth delaying a Sunday drive. In your interviews with the seldom seen craftsmen of our industry who have for years made it possible for the millions to enjoy Motion Pictures, I find it strange that Mr. Harry Stradling, the Director of Photography for Mr. Goldwyn was left out of your telecast. Mr. Stradling has contributed to the art of Cinematography in such productions as "A Streetcar Named Desire" and is an Academy Award winner for his work on "The Picture of Dorian Gray".

I realize the time element and many other factors in timing such a program is a great headache. But as a member of the American Society of Cinematographers, I find it very difficult to overlook the omission of Mr. Stradling's name in your telecast.

Sincerely,

Victor Milner

Dear Sam:

It's churlish and ungracious of me not to have written sooner.

First of all permit me to express my deep appreciation to you and Frances for your most gracious hospitality. The role of guest suits me ill and normally produces a sense of uneasiness. On this occasion I felt completely at home both in your home and on your lot.

I should like to say my thanks to you and your associates on behalf of myself and my crew for the magnificent co-operation we received. I have now seen about two-thirds of the material we shot - some of the sound quality is not all that I could wish, but I think we shall be able to straighten that out. I still do not know exactly how to take hold of this story. We have got such a great wealth of material. Parenthetically the shots of you and Frances are quite magnificent.

We have tentatively scheduled the piece for April 13, and we will of course provide you with a kinescope of the final version for your personal use.

Perhaps at your convenience you will let me have such footage on Danny Kaye as you will permit us to use. We will of course be prepared to label it as a rehearsal if you wish.

I would ask you to extend my personal thanks to individual members of your organization but those who were helpful are so numerous that I would have to look at your organization chart to be able to list them all.

Having recorded a considerable variety of stories both for radio and television, I can tell you that none was more enjoyable than this one and my hope is that we shall be able to do an acceptable job with it.

DEAR ED:

I HAVE YOUR LETTER OF FEBRUARY 19TH AND I AM DELIGHTED THAT WE WERE ABLE TO COME UP WITH SOMETHING THAT SHOULD MAKE A GRAND AND EXCITING PROGRAM. YOUR IDEA OF THE APPROACH AND HOW THE PRESENTATION SHOULD BE HANDLED IS BRILLIANT. THERE ARE MILLIONS OF "JOES" AND "JANES" AS WELL, THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY WHO WOULD FEEL THRILLED TO BE ON THE "INSIDE" OF THE MAKING OF A GREAT PICTURE LIKE HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN, AND I AM SURE THAT IT WILL BE A PERSONALIZED THING WITH THEM AFTER THEY WATCH THE SHOW AS YOU PLAN IT.

YOUR LETTER MUST HAVE CROSSED MY LAST LETTER IN THE MAILS, BUT IN VIEW OF WHAT YOU WRITE I AM CONVINCED THAT IT WOULD BE A FINE IDEA FOR YOU OR YOUR WRITER TO COME OUT AT ONCE AND BETWEEN US WE CAN FORMULATE CONCRETELY A GREAT LAYOUT FOR THE SHOW. AS SOON AS THAT IS DONE, I WOULD SEE TO IT THAT EVERYTHING IS SET UP HERE SO THAT YOUR CREW COULD COME OUT IMMEDIATELY THEREAFTER TO DO THE NECESSARY SHOOTING ON THE LOT HERE.

BECAUSE OF THE GREAT SCOPE OF THIS PICTURE, I SUGGEST THAT THIS BE DONE AS SOON AS POSSIBLE WHILE WE HAVE ALL THE PRINCIPALS HERE AND WHILE WE CAN, IF NECESSARY, MAKE CERTAIN CHANGES IN OUR PLANS TO ACCOMMODATE YOUR NEEDS. I AGREE THAT YOU SHOULD BE ABLE TO DO THIS IN ABOUT A WEEK OF SHOOTING, BUT IF IT WILL REQUIRE MORE TIME, WE WILL BE HERE. I KNOW THAT YOU AND YOUR PEOPLE WILL ALWAYS BE COGNIZANT OF OUR PRODUCTION PROBLEMS, BUT I AM ANXIOUS FOR YOU TO GET OUT OF THIS THE BEST SHOW POSSIBLE FOR YOUR PROGRAM, AND I WILL SEE TO IT THAT WE ACCOMMODATE YOU TO THE UTMOST.

YOU MUST COME OUT FOR THIS YOURSELF, EITHER AT ONCE OR WITH YOUR SHOOTING CREW. FRANCES AND I WANT YOU TO BE OUR GUEST WHILE YOU ARE HERE AND I DO HOPE YOU WILL BE ABLE TO ARRANGE TO STAY WITH US.

ALL MY BEST.

SINCERELY,

Sam

P. S. THIS IS THE FIRST TIME I HAVE HAD A CHANCE TO WRITE YOU AND TELL YOU WHAT A GREAT JOB YOU DID ON TAFT THE OTHER DAY. I HAD PAUL HOFFMAN, ZANUCK, AND A SMALL GROUP TO AN ORGANIZING DINNER FOR THE GENERAL THE OTHER NIGHT AND EVERY ONE OF THEM MENTIONED WHAT A BRILLIANT AND DEVASTATING ANALYSIS IT WAS. YOU ARE ONE PERSON TO WHOM I DON'T HAVE TO SAY "KEEP UP THE GOOD WORK".

DEAR ED:

I UNDERSTAND THAT HERBERT MITGANG OF YOUR STAFF HAS BEEN IN TOUCH WITH DAVID GOLDING OUT HERE AND TOLD HIM THAT YOU AND YOUR PEOPLE ON "SEE IT NOW" THOUGHT WELL OF THE IDEA OF A HOLLYWOOD STORY ALONG THE LINES SET OUT IN MY LETTER THE OTHER DAY. IT SEEMS TO ME THAT SINCE MITGANG AND GOLDING WORKED SO WELL TOGETHER IN THE PAST ON SO MANY PROJECTS IT WOULD BE A GOOD IDEA IF THEY COULD GET TOGETHER AND WORK CLOSELY ON THIS ONE FOR ABOUT A WEEK OR SO.

HOWEVER, I CANNOT LET GOLDING GO EAST, BECAUSE HE WILL BE BUSY HERE ON THE COAST FOR THE NEXT SEVERAL MONTHS. I THINK IF YOUR MAN, MITGANG, CAME OUT HERE FOR A WEEK OR SO AND SPENT THAT TIME WORKING ON THE IDEA INTENSIVELY WITH GOLDING AND SOAKING UP THE GENERAL ATMOSPHERE AND SPECIFIC DETAILS THAT HE WOULD NEED FOR SUCH A STORY HE OUGHT TO COME UP WITH A REALLY GOOD SCRIPT FOR YOU.

OF COURSE WHEN HE IS OUT HERE WE WILL GIVE HIM THE FULLEST ACCESS TO THE PRODUCTION AND EVERYTHING WE HAVE, AND DO WHATEVER WE CAN TO FACILITATE HIS GETTING A GREAT STORY FOR YOU. AND, IF YOU FEEL IT WILL BE USEFUL TO YOU, I WILL BE GLAD TO SPEND SOME TIME WITH HIM MYSELF OR HAVE HIM TO LUNCH SO HE CAN GET WHATEVER BENEFIT THERE MIGHT BE OUT OF THAT. I REALLY BELIEVE YOU CAN GET AN EXCITING PROGRAM OUT OF THIS.

February 19, 1952

Dear Sam:

Let's do it. We will of course require much guidance and suggestions from you, but if we are to try our hand at doing a piece on the making of a movie we could not possibly find a better counsellor.

My ideas, so far as they have taken shape, are these: We do not attempt to do a piece on Hollywood. It's too big. So we do the story of the making of HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN. We make only brief reference to the competition between television and movies, but we manage to suggest that this bold venture by Goldwyn is in the tradition of the making of a better mouse trap. Our objective would be simply to take our viewers not only onto the lot, but permit them to get acquainted with both the planning and philosophy--even the financing if you agree--of a major production. We would want to film with our own cameras not only some of the major artists, but also the unknowns--the extras, the soundmen, and so forth.

Our general approach would be that of taking an individual viewer by the hand and saying: "Look, Joe, if you want a chance in person to talk with Goldwyn, wander around the lot, watch the actors working and relaxing; listen to the conversation, directions, rehearsals, that go into the making of a picture, then get a glimpse of some of the finished product, just come along with us."

I know too little about the making of a movie to be confident as to the impression we would leave with the viewer, but I would guess that it would be that the making of a movie of the proportions of HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN is both a complicated and exciting business requiring great sensitivity, imagination and skill of a high order.

We reckon it would take us about six days to do the actual shooting after we had agreed with your people upon the general character of the material we would require. Perhaps you would be good enough to suggest the week that might best fit your shooting schedule and that would provide us with the most interesting material.

I would hope to come out and do part of this one myself which would give me both professional and personal pleasure because it would provide the opportunity of seeing you and Mrs. Goldwyn again.

Young Sam and his delightful bride dined with us the other night and gave us great pleasure.

As ever yours,

DEAR ED:

I UNDERSTAND THAT YOUR PEOPLE AND DAVID GOLDING, OF MY STAFF, HAVE BEEN DISCUSSING THE POSSIBILITY OF YOUR DOING A STORY ON HOLLYWOOD FOR YOUR SUNDAY SHOW. I THINK THERE IS A GREAT IDEA IN SUCH A STORY WHICH WOULD BE TIMELY AND IMPORTANT AND MOST INTERESTING TO YOUR AUDIENCE.

I AM ENTIRELY WILLING THAT YOU USE WHAT I AM DOING NOW IN THE MAKING OF "HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN" AS THE SPRINGBOARD AND KEYNOTE OF THE STORY OF HOW HOLLYWOOD FACES THE FUTURE. IT SHOULD MAKE AN INTERESTING STORY: - HERE IS TELEVISION GIVING MOTION PICTURES THE TOUGHEST COMPETITION IT EVER HAD, HERE IS THE BOX OFFICE DROPPING 'WAY DOWN, HERE ARE SWAN SONGS BEING SUNG ABOUT OUR INDUSTRY, BUT YET HERE IS AN INDEPENDENT PRODUCER GOING AHEAD AND SPENDING FOUR MILLION DOLLARS ON "HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN". THIS IS THE LARGEST-BUDGETED PICTURE OF ALL THE PICTURES BEING MADE IN HOLLYWOOD THIS YEAR. IN ORDER TO BREAK EVEN, I AM GOING TO HAVE TO GROSS EIGHT MILLION DOLLARS WHICH, BELIEVE IT OR NOT, MEANS THAT SEVENTY-FIVE TO ONE HUNDRED MILLION PEOPLE WILL HAVE TO SEE THE PICTURE BEFORE I AM IN THE CLEAR. YET I HAVE THAT MUCH CONFIDENCE IN THE FUTURE OF MOTION PICTURES AND IN THE PUBLIC'S RESPONSE TO GREAT ENTERTAINMENT THAT I AM GOING FULL STEAM AHEAD.

I THINK THIS EXEMPLIFIES STRIKINGLY THE FACT THAT HOLLYWOOD AS A WHOLE IS MEETING COMPETITION TODAY - AND FIGHTING FOR ITS LIFE - BY GIVING THE VERY BEST IT HAS TO MAKING FINE ENTERTAINMENT. I AM SURE THIS COULD BE SPLENDIDLY DRAMATIZED BY DEVOTING A MAJOR PART OF THE SHOW TO A MOST INTERESTING SKETCH OF THE MAKING OF THE PICTURE AND EVEN SOME SCENES FROM IT. CONSIDERING THE PERSONALITIES AVAILABLE: DANNY KAYE, RENEE JEANMAIRE (WHO SCORED SUCH A SUCCESS WHEN SHE DANCED "CARMEN" WITH PETIT), FARLEY GRANGER, FRANK LOESSER ("GUYS AND DOLLS") WHO WROTE THE SCORE, MOSS HART WHO DID THE SCREENPLAY, CLAVE, THE GREAT FRENCH ARTIST WHOM I BROUGHT OVER TO DO THE BALLET SETS, MME. KARINSKA, WHO IS DOING THE COSTUMES, CHARLES VIDOR, WHO IS DIRECTING, THE SCOPE OF THE PRODUCTION AND ALL THE OTHER ELEMENTS, I THINK A TREMENDOUSLY EFFECTIVE JOB COULD BE DONE. WHEN THIS WOULD BE ROUNDED OUT WITH A PANORAMA OF HOLLYWOOD, TOGETHER WITH INTERESTING TELEVISION SHOTS AND FIGURES AND WITH YOUR MASTERFUL OVER-ALL PRESENTATION, I AM SURE YOU WOULD WIND UP WITH A GREAT SHOW.

I WOULD, OF COURSE, BE GLAD TO GIVE YOU EVERY COOPERATION AND THE ACCESS TO OUR PRODUCTION THAT WOULD LET YOU GET WHATEVER YOU NEEDED.

THIS WOULD MAKE THE SAME KIND OF OUTSTANDING SHOW AS YOUR VISIT TO A TYPICAL COAL MINE TOWN. YOU HAD WONDERFULLY INTERESTING MATERIAL THERE AND PROJECTED IT TO THE AUDIENCE IN SUCH A WAY THAT HELD ME - AND, I AM SURE, THE REST OF YOUR LISTENERS - SPELLBOUND. I AM SURE YOU CAN GET THE SAME FEEL INTO THIS KIND OF STORY ON HOLLYWOOD.

WITH ALL WARM REGARDS, I AM

THE MISSOURI CRESTS at OMAHA

FLOOD IN COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA

April 20, 1952

THE MISSOURI CRESTS AT OMAHA

APRIL 20, 1952

The Missouri River which starts up in western Montana at Three Forks reached the flood stage at Bismark and Pierre, South Dakota, and the disaster stage at Omaha and Council Bluffs. We remember most the hours after midnight when it crested and when no one was sure of the outcome.

MURROW: This is Thursday night and the big test. The river beats against the levees and the bridges with a thudding hum like a great heartbeat. The river seems to strum on the steel of the bridge. One giant searchlight slowly sweeps the dark levee, giving a few seconds of light to the men working in the night. All through the black hours, from its stationary mount on the Douglas Street bridge, this light throws its white beam over the areas where men have spent hours of sweat, where men wait to see if they will win or lose.

All during Thursday it had rained. At midnight it was cold. The mud could have been in Korea, Arnheim or the Bulge. These are Air Force boys. They're loading sandbags on a barge. The Air Force is responsible for a stretch of five miles of levee here. They load the sandbags on the barge and then when there's an emergency, a small break in the levee or a sand boil, a tug will come and pull this barge out onto the river. As you see, the men are all wearing their Mae Wests because when these sandbags are tossed out on the barge, they will go with it. And if the tug comes, it will come from down in this direction to come up and hook up onto the barge and pull it and these Air Force men out to the point of immediate danger.

Midnight passed and the levees held. The night was reluctant to lift its cover from a devastation above and below Omaha, where the river spread to 17 miles. The crisis came and passed almost imperceptibly as the great river rose up and then started to settle down.

And those of us who watched the river didn't know when the crest arrived. At four o'clock in the morning, we were back on the Douglas Street bridge between Omaha and Council Bluffs.

It's now four-thirty in the morning. The Missouri has crested, and if there's a certain unsteadiness in this picture, it is because of the thud and hammer of the Missouri River just below us. We're now on the bridge between Council Bluffs and Omaha. And I find myself for the first time in quite some time in agreeable conversation with a couple of traffic cops—two gentlemen who have been on this bridge for hour after hour, and I will ask them first to identify themselves.

Your name, sir?

JOHNSON: Horace Johnson.

MURROW: And your occupation?

JOHNSON: With the J. C. Penney Company in Omaha, Nebraska.

MURROW: How long have you been acting as traffic cop on the bridge here?

JOHNSON: Since Monday night.

MURROW: How much sleep have you had in the meanwhile?

JOHNSON: Oh, I'd say about twelve hours.

MURROW: And what about your family?

JOHNSON: Oh, they're at home.

MURROW: And they're in Omaha and safe from the flood so far.

JOHNSON: Yes, sir.

MURROW: Now we'll be back to you in a minute. But let's go over here and find the other friendly traffic cop at four-thirty in the morning. Your name, sir?

TUNNELL: Ken Tunnell.

MURROW: And your occupation?

TUNNELL: Union Pacific Railroad.

MURROW: I would like to get back again to this business of—all the people, not just you fellows in Civil Defense uniforms and so forth. What stimulated this . . . I mean, talk to me a little about it.

TUNNELL: Well, I don't see how you can put your finger on it to give a good explanation of it. It's just something that comes from people in this part of the country. When this country was new, that's the way we worked out here, and that's how this country was made great, in this part of the country where we are now, and I really believe that I'm . . . this is the greatest part of the country and the greatest people in the world is right here, in the Midwest. They had to be tough to start it. They're following through now with what we've learned from our ancestors.

Flood in Council Bluffs, Iowa

Dear Mr Murrow,

I regret that we did not have the opportunity to meet during your stay here in Omaha. Undoubtedly this has been a hectic time for you and I hope that SAC has been of some assistance.

At Lt Joyces request I asked Col W.R. Yancey, Chief of the Recconasiance Division, Directorate of Operations this Command to write a narrative of the role of "Strat Recce" in rendering assistance to the Engineers and Civil authorities. His narrative is the best that I have seen on the subject and should provide adequate background material for your use.

Ret'd 4/28

I would like to request that you send the photographs and negatives back to this office when they are of no further use to you. You may recall there was quite a flap a year or so ago when a photo mosaic of an large eastern city was "discovered" on the wall of a hotel. As the photo was of Air Force origin there was some criticism directed at the Air Force for releasing such a photo that could conceivably be of target planning value to an enemy.

Obviously use on television of this type photo would be of no benefit to the so called, "enemy" So, if you will return it to me at the address above my concience will be clear. Thanks and best wishes. Sincerely,

PUBLIC INFORMATION DIVISION
HQ. STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND
OMAHA, NEBRASKA

RELEASE # 314

Peacetime value of SAC's strategic reconnaissance work got a strong endorsement today from the Commanding General of the Missouri River Division of Army Engineers.

Brigadier-General Don Shingler, C.G. of all Engineer units battling the worst flood in the modern history of the Missouri River Valley, said photographic reconnaissance planes have furnished his command with invaluable aerial photos of the river from its headwater at Fort Peck, Montana, on down to below St. Louis, Mo.

"The aerial reconnaissance work being accomplished by the Air Force," General Shingler said, "is important not only in our day-to-day planning and disposition of flood fighting forces, but will be extremely valuable in providing an aerial photographic record of the behavior of the river in this greatest of all upper Missouri River floods."

RB-36s of the 28th Strategic Reconnaissance Wing, of Rapid City, South Dakota, and RB-45s of the 91st Strat Recon Wing, of Lockbourne AFB, Ohio, are giving the Corps of Engineers 3,000 miles of waterline-to-waterline aerial photo coverage of the flood-swollen Missouri River.

SAC's photo reconnaissance planes have taken thousands of pictures of the Missouri and all of its upper valley "feeder" rivers like the Little Missouri, Heart, Cheyenne, White, Big Sioux and Cannonball Rivers and Cedar Creek.

After the Corps of Engineers have planned their campaign against the flood on the basis of the photographs, they turn them over to requesting agencies for further study.

SAC's mission in war is destruction of an enemy's fighting potential, but in this peacetime emergency, General Curtis E. LeMay offered the Engineers full use of cargo transport aircraft and ordered the photo recon units into action in a convincing demonstration of ~~this~~ the command's flexibility and peacetime usefullness.

HQ STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND
OFFICE OF THE SPECIAL ASST

EXCLUSIVE FOR ED MURROW-

Reconnaissance aircraft of the Strategic Air Command have been photographing the crest of the Missouri River daily since 2 April 1952.

As a peacetime function these Strategic Reconnaissance aircraft are made available to furnish material to the Corps of Engineers; not only following the crest of the flood, but delivering photography from which the Engineers can accurately plot the actual flood stages as the waters rise and fall. The scheme of operations is a relatively simple one, so far as the mechanics of requesting the photographic coverage is concerned. It falls under the classification of Emergency Flood Control and the regional office of the Corps of Engineers in Omaha has authority to communicate directly with the Reconnaissance Division of Headquarters Strategic Air Command. As this coverage must be secured promptly, most of the requests are made by phone. As the request is received at Headquarters Strategic Air Command, an Operations Order is immediately forwarded to one of the Strategic Reconnaissance operational units. Normally the photography is flown in a matter of hours after the request is made unless the Corps of Engineers had had time to plan ahead and is able to make their request one or two days prior to the assignment.

The two units which have assisted in the Missouri River flood coverage have been the 91st Strategic Reconnaissance Wing at Lockbourne Air Force Base, Columbus, Ohio; and the 28th Strategic Reconnaissance Wing (Heavy) at Rapid City, South Dakota. The 91st, with their fast four-engine jet reconnaissance aircraft, can depart Columbus, Ohio, and make a one-run flight between Sioux City and Kansas City, cruising at above 30,000 feet, and return to Columbus in a matter of less than four hours. The coverage they secure on such a mission is tri-metrogon photography, scale 1/60,000 (from horizon to horizon); split vertical photography, scale 1/15,000 (approximately eight miles wide); and forward shooting oblique. The 28th Strategic Reconnaissance Wing, flying their huge RB-36's, can secure even more photography even though the smaller jet aircraft more than fulfill the demands of the Corps of Engineers.

An interesting piece of work was accomplished on the very first day this flood control photography was assigned. At approximately nine o'clock in the morning of 2 April, the Corps of Engineers called requesting coverage of the Little Missouri River from where it crosses the Montana-Wyoming state line 250 miles down to where it enters the Big "Mo". Eighth Air Force headquarters at Fort Worth, Texas, and headquarters for the 28th Strategic Reconnaissance Wing at Rapid City, were requested to secure flood control photography of this river on that day. The 28th Strategic Reconnaissance Wing was alerted and it so happened that an RB-36 was already airborne in the vicinity of the project. Before noon the aircraft had landed and the photography was being processed in the Reconnaissance Technical Squadron. This is characteristic of the daily operations as the flood waters have pushed their way toward Omaha.

The Missouri River has been photographed daily from its junction with the Yellowstone River near the border of North Dakota and Wyoming -- down through Bismark, North Dakota, into South Dakota through Pierre on to Sioux City, Omaha and St. Joe, Missouri. In addition the Heart and Cannonball Rivers, tributaries of the Missouri in North Dakota, and the Big Sioux from Watertown to where it enters the Missouri at Sious City have been covered.

As of 18 April, 26 requests have been flown covering 3800 river miles of photography. Even though such assignments are good training for the Strategic Air Command Reconnaissance crews, they are hopeful their products will assist the Corps of Engineers to harness our rivers and prevent recurrences of such disasters making Emergency Flood Control Photography a thing of the past.

A VISIT WITH CANDIDATE EISENHOWER

Ten days before the 1952 Republican convention in Chicago we chatted with General Eisenhower and Mrs. Eisenhower in the back yard of the home of Mrs. Eisenhower's mother, Mrs. John Sheldon Doud.

JUNE 29, 1952

EDWARD R. MURROW: General, is this campaigning like anything you've ever done before?

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER: Completely strange, and I must say it's mystifying.

MURROW: This sort of interferes with your golf game, doesn't it?

EISENHOWER: Very markedly.

MURROW: What about the painting?

EISENHOWER: Painting. I haven't even unwrapped my painting box since I've gotten here. Haven't had time.

MURROW: And bridge?

EISENHOWER: None. [LAUGHTER.] None. Very demanding activity, this thing, because there's so many facets—so many people to see and so many different things to do, including preparation of talks and meeting of people. It's very demanding.

MURROW: Do you find that writing political speeches is more difficult for you than writing military documents and orders?

EISENHOWER: Yes, because it's not only a strange world, but you know I'm merely trying to be honest and show my own approach to these problems. There's so many of 'em.

MURROW: that yo Why no

MURROW: General, you've said repeatedly that you would not engage in personalities. Why not?

EISENHOWER: I believe nothing is gained by dealing in personalities; moreover, when you deal in personalities, you create hurt feelings, and they are very difficult ever to heal. In a way, it is an unforgiveable thing, if it is not necessary in order to show the difference between, let's say, doctrine or principle. Moreover, I personally have been the target of many kinds of personal attacks, and finally, I think they create the feeling in me, it wasn't a very big man that made them.

MURROW: General, why did you decide to go to Chicago for the convention?

EISENHOWER: Ed, you've known me for a good many years, and particularly the latter years when I have been one of the senior Army officers and you got used to a situation in which I was sort of a boss, at least over my own staff, my own surroundings, my own movements. I'm not any more. These so-called political associates have taken over, and I'm obeying their orders and their recommendations.

MURROW: You know, General, it's probably going to be a lot hotter in Chicago than it is here.

EISENHOWER: I've no doubt about that, but it's warm enough here, and Mamie thought about bringing us out some iced tea and she'll be along in a second.

MURROW: Here she is now. I'll just bring up this . . .

MRS. EISENHOWER: Here, here. Hope I get it down.

EISENHOWER: There you are. I hope you can pour it. You're the hostess.

MRS. E. [LAUGHS]: I can pour it, all right. Of course you might get a little extra ice, but then . . . Ed, do you like to have sugar in yours?

MURROW: No, I'll have it just as it comes. Thank you. Mamie, how are you enjoying this campaigning?

MRS. E.: Well, I might admit it's been terrifically interesting as far as I'm concerned. I've been much impressed with the women. The number of women that have gone out to work.

MURROW: What sort of questions do the women ask generally?

MRS. E. [LAUGHS]: There's always one they ask, and that's about Korea. That's the one question that most women ask. I think it's because they're probably mothers and—what's going to happen to their sons, or maybe their grandsons—how Korea is going to affect the world from now on in.

EISENHOWER: Incidentally, they always ask that question very sympathetically because they know that our boy goes to Korea this month. They always ask it very sympathetically.

MURROW: You probably miss your own son and your grandchildren, don't you?

MRS. E.: Oh, I should say we do. The house is mighty, mighty lonesome without them.

MURROW: General, do you mind being called a Conservative?

EISENHOWER: I don't mind what names they call me. I remember when my mother used to conserve things in the fall, and she didn't conserve the cockleberries and the sunflowers; she conserved the good things out of the garden. All that I'm trying to do is conserve the good things that we've had all these years.

MURROW: You don't mind his being called a Conservative either, do you, Mamie?

MRS. E. [LAUGHS]: Not when he explains it like that.

MURROW: Tell me, does he get irritable now working these long hours under strain all the time?

EISENHOWER: Don't answer. Don't answer.

MRS. E.: To tell you the truth, I don't see him long enough to know whether he is or not.

MURROW: The other day Senator Lodge came out here and made some rather optimistic statements, and there seems to be a considerable amount of optimism around your headquarters. How do you feel about it? Are you confident? Are you making any predictions?

EISENHOWER: Ed, Cabot Lodge and his associates are experienced politicians. They know what's going on in a struggle like this. Moreover, they're honest men and they're certainly not trying to kid themselves or kid me. Moreover, and beyond this, I never went into a fight in my life except to win. So my answer would have to be, yes, I share their confidence.

Dear Commodore Richards:

Belatedly many thanks for the kind words of January 6. The trouble with this business is that once a show is finished one never manages to keep level with the correspondence resulting from it because there is too much work to be done on the upcoming show. It was good of you to write as you did and I'm glad the show was a source of pleasure for you and your family.

Sincerely yours,

My dear Mr. Murrow:

May I express my admiration and thanks for your wonderful program rebroadcast last Saturday afternoon. We have made a point of watching constantly your weekly series, "See it Now", but never thought one of our family would appear on the screen with you. That, however, is exactly what happened on your Christmas broadcast - Major T. L. Randall, USMC is my son-in-law and the joy you brought our daughter, his wife, when she saw him well and talking to you can be better imagined than expressed.

Your week by week program is in my opinion one of the highlights in life today and may I thank you for the educational and splendid guidance you are giving the American public in these disturbed times.

As we have mutual friends, I hope that I may have the pleasure of meeting you in the not too distant future.

Again, with many thanks for what you are accomplishing and with sincere hopes for your continued success, I am

Most cordially,

My dear Ed:

All at B.I.S. are most appreciative of your great generosity in giving us the British portion of your Korean film which will be tremendously valuable to us, particularly in the absence of anything comparable from our own sources.

Jack Aistrop, our TV and Radio officer, in conjunction with Fred Friendly and Hank Hanson, both of whom have been most helpful, has extracted 2-1/2 minutes from the film which we propose to use on TV interview programs in conjunction with British visitors to this country (such as the Chaplain-General of the British Armed Forces, for instance, who is currently in New York, and who was recently in Korea) appearing on out of town TV stations using 35 mm equipment.

We should like to give due acknowledgment to you and to C.B.S. on each and every program, unless you have any objections to our doing so, in which case please let me know right away.

Once again, Brother Ed, a million thanks for providing us with something we have been wanting for a very long time and

ISMAY

Hand-in-glove with Churchill - his agent - a finger in every pie.

Begin in India as Cavalry subaltern 1902. - Why chose Army as career. Is it true one officer so stupid brother officers noted it?

Reminisce about pig-sticking, polo, finances, dances.

What did you read in those days - did you believe "if they didn't speak English, to hell with them"?

Where did you spend First World War?

Committee of Imperial Defense - how did it work? - what kind of man was Hankey?

The years of suspense, '36 to '39 - Why was Churchill left in the political wilderness by both Baldwin and Chamberlain? - What was your attitude toward the Munich Agreement? - Your personal estimate of Neville Chamberlain?

Did the war when it came give you a sense of relief?

Liaison between Britain and France during phony war period - Why no staff conferences with Belgians and Dutch?

Trips to France before and after Dunkirk - Horse pistol - How communicated telephonically from Paris to London - Why no more British fighters sent to France - First memories of De Gaulle - Petain - Weygand.

British reaction to Dunkirk (Victory).

Churchill's method of running a war.

Why didn't the Germans try to invade in 1940? And could they have succeeded?

Memories of the Battle of Britain - Famous tribute by Churchill - Operations Room Number 11 Group Fighter Command - Decision to send half of available tanks around the Cape to the Middle East.

Early contact with Americans - Hopkins, Winant, Harriman, Roosevelt.

First meeting with the Russians - Churchill's comment if Hitler invaded Hell - Did Russians drink as much as advertised - First impressions of Stalin -

Argument about aircraft versus surface ships - Harris and Tom Thumb Phillips - Scharnhorst and Gneisenau reaction.

Reaction to individuals, Roosevelt, Eisenhower, Marshall.

Did German attack on Yugoslavia save the Russians?

What was the essential difference in planning techniques as between British and Americans?

What do you recall as major arguments?

Do you agree with Montgomery that the war could have been won in 1944?

Service in India with Mountbatten during independence.

Secretary-General of NATO.

Estimate of present position - Changes required.

Dear Pug:

Thanks for yours of November 28th. No hurry at all. We will make payment when and to whom you designate, and we shall also send you a print so that your children and grandchildren may have it.

I have now seen two installments of the Churchill series, and while the critics have acclaimed them, I am distressed at certain inaccuracies.

The editing of our conversation progresses and my confidence in the final result is undiminished.

My dear Ed,

I am dreadfully sorry to hear that you have been laid low with pneumonia. Having had it three times, I can sympathise with you very sincerely, but I implore you to take a good long holiday and get thoroughly fit before you start rampaging again.

The payment that your Company proposes to make for the very pleasant afternoon that I spent with you takes my breath away. At first I thought that you or your secretary had added an extra nought by accident (have you?): and then I thought of the lighthearted steeplechase jockey who observed on receiving his winnings, "Fancy getting all this for what I love doing".

Anyway, I do not feel it would be right for me not to allow my children to benefit by your very generous offer, and I am consulting the lawyers who look after the Trust which I have made for them, and which neither Darry nor I can touch, whether it would be possible for this absurdly generous payment to be made direct to the Fund. May I let you know later?

I shall be most interested to see how the boiled down version of our interview turns out. It must have been very painless, because I haven't the faintest recollection of anything that either you or I said. Mind you make the B.B.C. buy it, as otherwise I won't see it, but I am told they are very stingy.

All the very best and my most grateful thanks for your quite ridiculous financial proposals.

Yours ever

November 22, 1960

Dear Pug:

Pray forgive my delay in writing. I have been laid low with pneumonia for the past two weeks.

As I cabled you both the pictures and the content of our effort are admirable, and I am eager to get at the editing. Will let you know when it is scheduled. It has the makings of a memorable hour of television.

We owe you the sum of $2,500 and insist upon making payment. If you persist in your refusal to accept it, please let me have your instructions regarding your favorite charity.

It now appears possible that I shall be in London briefly sometime in middle or late January, and if so I hope to bask in the sunshine of your countenance without benefit of cameras.

Dear Ed,

Am just about finished with Pug's Memoirs. It is the most complete and interesting book produced about World War II.

What a "good war", as he always said he had,- the right man for his job and so fair, yet frank. Am enjoying it tremendously and thank you for sending it.

Am off tomorrow for two days' shoot with Harry Sears. The first day he is shooting pigeon which is new to me in USA. During my tour of duty in the Pacific I had some wonderful pigeon shooting near Tulagi.

Your "Polaris" was a grand and fascinating show. I never saw you looking better. That dark suit I recommend even for shooting. My friend, Jim Smith, started "Polaris" when Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air and "Polaris" was named for his "North Star Ranch" in Aspen, Colorado.

Pug is quite wrong regarding Bill Halsey winning the Battle of Leyte Gulf. I was ordered back from my six destroyers to work on a big rocket with Mitcher's support and I happened to be going through Pearl the day of the above battle and lunched with Nimitz. I have never seen him so serious and definitely "mad" about something. After lunch Forest Sherman told me that Bill Halsey had made a "bust" and I think he very nearly lost his job.

Yours,
Paul.

Dear Charles:

I am never any good at writing what I think you fellows call "blurbs," but here are a few sentences. Do with them what you will:

> "Throughout the war, General Lord Ismay was Mr. Churchill's agent. He had 'a finger in every pie,' and he has written the record with humor and restraint."
> "General Lord Ismay's career stretches from pig-sticking in India as a young subaltern to prickly diplomats as Secretary-General of NATO. Along the way, he served as Mr. Churchill's personal Chief of Staff, and he has written the record with brilliance and objectivity. His book is the best of those done by the 'writing generals.' "

Charlie, this is pretty dreary stuff, but maybe your experts can make something of it. If not, let me know and I will try again.

Dear Ed:

On the Ismay, I wonder if you'd be willing to put down on paper something along the lines of the enthusiasm for the book which you expressed to me yesterday on the telephone? A good quote from you would be most useful in our advertising and publicity program.

I also wonder if you would care to give us the names of some people to whom you would like us to send the book in advance of publication?

As you are doubtless aware, we are confronted here with the problem of a first-class book by a great man of whom most people in this country have never heard. We therefore want to make extraordinary efforts in advance of publication to get people to realize what a treat they have in store for themselves. Anything you can do to help, in addition to the tremendous help that the TV show will be, would be much appreciated by all of us, as well as by your faithful admirer Pug.

I'll be in touch with you as the time approaches for the visit. Don't you hesitate to be in touch with me if there's anything at all that I or anyone else here can do to help.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Tom Guinzburg has asked me to pass on to you the details of Lord Ismay's visit in October. Lord and Lady Ismay are scheduled to arrive on the Mauretania on October 6th, and will stay in New York (as the house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Tree) until Monday, October 17, when they fly to Chicago. Their next stop is Washington, on the 23rd, and then Baltimore on the 25th. They sail on the 27th, going direct to the ship after coming up from Baltimore that day.

During the period October 6 - 16, Lord Ismay has the following commitments:

Mon., Oct. 10 - New York Herald Tribune Book and Author Luncheon
Thurs., Oct. 13 - a luncheon and informal discussion session with military correspondents, sponsored by the British Information Services (you will be hearing about this yourself)

In addition, the Council on Foreign Relations has expressed interest in having Lord Ismay be the speaker at one of their late afternoon informal meetings, but no definite commitment has yet been made. Lord Ismay has also indicated that he wants to go to Philadelphia for a day - probably Wednesday the 12th. Since he has asked us to limit his engagements to one each day - and nothing before lunch - perhaps you will want to write him direct about your proposal. His address is Wormington Grange, Broadway, Worcestershire, England. I should think Friday the 7th, Tuesday the 11th (he has a dinner engagement that evening but I doubt that would interfere with anything you might have in mind), or Friday the 14th might be the best times to aim at. And of course there is also the weekend (the 8th and 9th).

You probably know that Mr. Bolte, who is in charge of arranging Lord Ismay's program, is away until Tuesday. If you need to know anything more before then, please don't hesitate to let me know.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Ed:

We are to become in the fall the proud and happy publishers of Pug Ismay's memoirs. I am sure you knew him during the war, and I am equally sure you will like his book. I am attaching herewith a set of English page proofs which we've just received.

Pug has volunteered to come over here for a visit around about publication time, which is now scheduled for October 10th. He will arrive on the 7th and be here until the 21st of October. He will probably do a Pilgrims dinner during that time, and he's agreed to speak at the Herald Tribune Book & Author Lunch on the Monday of publication. It occurred to all of us that, depending on what your own fall program plans are, you might well want to involve him in something or other. I should think he would be a marvelous person for you to have a person-to-person depth interview with; or one of a team on a small-world-type program, perhaps with two or three American generals, reminiscing about the last war and reflecting about our present defense posture. But I won't presume to give you notions.

I hope you will want to read the book, and I hope you will want to work out something on the air when this especially noble lord is here.

"SEE IT NOW"

THE BERLIN SHOW

September 22, 1953

ERNST REUTER IN THE REICHSTAG

SEPTEMBER 22, 1953

Dr. Ernst Reuter was Mayor of West Berlin during the time of the Communist blockade. He was a violent anti-Communist and a successful one. In September of 1953, correspondent Howard K. Smith stood with him in the gutted Reichstag building near the Brandenburg Gate. One week later, Mayor Reuter was dead.

HOWARD K. SMITH: How long, Dr. Reuter, do you think this condition can continue, with Berlin being divided in this fashion?

MAYOR REUTER: What can we do? As long as there is no decision between the world powers whether or not they can come to an agreement, we have to stand here. When we started in '48, everybody said to me, "It cannot last for more than one year." But what shall we do? We have to be heroes. We have to be heroes—we don't want it. What can we do?

SMITH: Mayor Reuter, regarding your optimism about reunification of Germany, how do you foresee that coming about?

REUTER: It can come about only by using every means of pressure, persuasion, strengthening our moral force and showing to the Soviets that they are not in a position to digest Germany—that it doesn't give sense for them to be obstinate, to stand on a place which is lost for them anyway.

SMITH: What would we do? Would we try to get them into a conference?

REUTER: I think we have to test them, to test them every day and certainly by means of a conference, too. Well, nobody can foresee what will be the outcome of the conference, but the Soviets are not free in their behavior. If nothing comes out the desperation of our people in East Germany will become greater; their resistance will become greater. The Russians will know that very well.

SMITH: Well, are we doing the right things now, or are we doing enough of the right things?

REUTER: Sometimes I have the feeling that we are acting too slowly and the co-ordination of the Western world is a very difficult business; I know that. And the strength of the Russians is our weakness and our lack of co-ordination, our lack of imagination to go ahead and to press them quicker and stronger than we have done before.

SMITH: What do you think about Sir Winston Churchill's idea of a kind of Locarno to give the Russians a guarantee of security?

REUTER: Yes, you know, old Churchill, during all his life, has been a man of imagination and something in his idea was not so bad. It is a pity that the Western world is moving so slowly and discussing everything for months and—we have an expression, "zerreden"—I don't know what it means in English.

SMITH: To speak things to pieces.

REUTER: Ja. Well, that . . . that is, we have to overcome this tendency in our own ranks, too. But now I beg your pardon. I have to go back to my office.

SMITH: Well, Mayor Reuter, thanks very much for showing me this building. It has been fascinating. I want to stay and take another look. Good-by and the best to you.

REUTER: Well, thank you. Good-by. I wish you all the best, and my best greetings for the American people.

Dear Ed:-

I saw your Berlin show the other night and just wanted to compliment you on a magnificent job.

I haven't been in Berlin personally since 1948 and the progress in some degree has been impressive but in others (the amount of rubble still existing) seems negligible.

I really enjoyed the show and there is a great deal of very favorable comment about it here.

Sincerely,

Mr. Edward R. Murrow

Herewith the Howard K. Smith statement you wanted - from the Berlin show on SEE IT NOW:

"The industry with which these people work, despite the ruins, despite the demoralizing division of their country, convinces me that the Germans could have become easily the leading people in Europe if only they didn't have the fatal inclination to try to become it by war. Still to me they are the most industrious, the most capable, and politically, the most stupid, the most dangerous people in Europe."

Dear Ed,

A friend of mine from WBNS-TV sent this on to me in hopes you might like it.

Incidentally, your initial program was just the greatest. Could you please rustle me up the last statement Smith made...

I'm downstairs room 407....temporarily!

Keep up the good work.

Best.

BEST SELLERS LEND THEMSELVES TO TV

For your pleasure . . . WBNS-TV presents scintillating comedy and spine-tingling adventure as a part of its gigantic line-up of new fall shows . . . "Topper", a weekly comedy series adapted from the famed Thorne Smith novels, co-starring Anne Jeffreys, Robert Sterling and Leo G. Carroll, is the new CBS-TV comedy show which occupies the Friday, 8:30 p.m. spot on channel 10.

Miss Jeffreys and Sterling play two charming ghosts who inhabit a newly-acquired home of a whimsical gentleman named Cosmos Topper. The urbane but laughable specters, known as George and Marion Kerby, are accompanied by a canine ghost called Neil, a St. Bernard portrayed by the professional dog actor, Buck. Carroll plays the role of Topper and Lee Patrick is Topper's wife.

The rib-tickling Topper fantasy stemmed from a first novel, "An Improbable Adventure", which appeared in 1926. It was an instant success, and the late Thorne Smith, its author, wrote a sequel titled "Topper Takes A Trip", in 1932. The two books have had a combined sale of 4,000,000 copies in the United States and Canada. In the 1930s the stories were made into highly successful motion pictures starring Roland Young.

Anne Jeffreys and Robert Sterling, husband and wife in real life as well as in the "Topper" series, are both making their debuts in a regular television series. A seasoned stage and screen player, Miss Jeffreys is best known for her starring role in the Broadway production, "Kiss Me Kate". Sterling had the leads in "Johnny Eager", "Two-Faced Woman", and other films. Leo G. Carroll, a veteran of the stage, starred in Broadway's "Angel Street", "The Late George Apley" and "The Druid Circle". His Hollywood credits include a long list of top films. Lee Patrick has played in 25 Broadway shows and 50 motion pictures. The dog, Buck, is a grandson of the great St. Bernard that played in "The Call of the Wild", starring Clark Gable.

"Topper", which is co-produced by John Loveton and Bernard L. Schubert, is presented by Camel Cigarettes.

TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION

"I Led 3 Lives", a weekly series of half-hour TV shows which dramatizes the experiences of Herbert A. Philbrick, is currently being seen under sponsorship of the Weidemann Brewing Co., on WBNS-TV, Tuesdays, 9:30 p.m.

In 1950, Philbrick, young Boston suburbanite and business man, wrote a book, "I Led 3 Lives", in which he detailed his 9 years of undercover work for the Federal Bureau of Investigation . . . work accomplished inside the Communist Party of America.

Now the book has been adapted for television, with Hollywood actor Richard Carlson playing the role of Philbrick. Carlson, star and director of over 40 motion pictures, was chosen because, after a long search for just the right actor, he was found to be perfect for the part . . . clean-cut, intelligent, serious and youthful. Carlson — a Phi Beta Kappa with a Masters degree from the University of Minnesota — played opposite Ethel Barrymore in two stage successes and won rave notices for his work in the title role of "Mr. Roberts". His most recent achievements "It Came From Outer Space", "All I Desire", and "Magnetic Monster", all box office hits.

Philbrick was 24 years old in 1940 when his adventures began . . . a resident of Melrose, Mass., he was husband and father of a growing family, leader in the affairs of his Baptist church. He was embarked upon a career as advertising man for motion picture houses in the Boston area . . . and, in that year, like so many intelligent, serious-minded and patriotic young Americans, he participated in community activities related to the National Emergency. He helped form "Youth for Victory", a clearinghouse and executive center for youth organizations in the Boston Area. He soon realized that "Youth for Vistory" and some of the affiliated groups were becoming Communist-dominated. He took this grim information to the FBI. The Bureau asked that he remain active in the youth work and "play along".

He was to observe Red tactics and aims and report his findings to the FBI. At the same time, the FBI warned him that, should he be identified among Communists who ran afoul of the Bureau, he could expect no protection. On the other hand, the "comrades" constantly spied on him. He operated entirely alone, his life, family, and career in constant danger.

The films of "I Led 3 Lives" are semi-documentary in technique, with Mr. Philbrick himself serving as technical director throughout production. Actual documents, sketches made by Philbrick on the scene and at the time of his experiences, photos and other sources of factual detail have been carefully reproduced in dramatic form for this TV series. None of "I Led 3 Lives" is fiction . . . it is all true!

Editorial

Ed Murrow's hour-long See It Now documentary on Berlin already has earned every possible word of praise in the critics' vocabulary. It was television at its finest, a journalistic achievement that won the respect of even the most cynical newspapermen. All we can add to what has been said about TV's shining hour is a word of respect and admiration for the sponsor, the Aluminum Company of America, which paid for the intelligent and thorough reportorial job.

The Berlin story, it is to be hoped, was a glimpse of the tremendous information impact that television will have in the future. Mere narrations of today's news events, even on newsreel film, do not by themselves make for an informed citizenry. Only by means of such thoughtfully produced documentaries as Crusade in Europe, Victory At Sea, and Murrow's programs on Korea and Berlin, can television present today's world to Americans in proper perspective.

This task, in our opinion, is just as important as TV's entertainment job. The networks know how to produce good comedy, entertaining variety and absorbing drama. Murrow and his co-producer, Fred W. Friendly, have come up with a pattern for informing—and doing it in a relatively short space of time. All too little, incidentally, has been said about Mr. Friendly, the invisible half of the team who must share in the Berlin story accolade.

It is unfortunate that many youngsters, whose minds are uncluttered by prejudice and misinformation, were denied seeing the Berlin documentary and will not see future See It Now offerings. In the East, at least, the program has been scheduled at 10:30 P.M. on Tuesdays, a school night. One less comedy or crime show at an earlier hour in the CBS weekly schedule would make room for See It Now, a program that should be a must for junior high and high school students.

BERLIN CLOSE

The ststus of Berlin cannot be solved in isolation.../.It will remain the flash point for mutual murder and suicide so long as the nations of the world are poised to use the ultimate weapons.../.There is no value,at this point in time ..in trying to asses the responsibility for this state of aff airs...Berlin remains a hostage to the future of mankind..Few people in the west would willingly die for Berlin..It is reasonable to assume that the Russians feel the same way...They have threatened but they havent acted...fxxxtxxx

Berlin is a crime against economics,map making and military strategy..in fact a crime against evrything except the determination of two and a quarter million germans to remain free...From the Russian point of view the existence of West Berlin is intolerable...For the west to abandon it is unthinkable...Maybe time,the mutual erosion of two competing systems, or a sudden burst of international sanity regarding disarmament may produce a stable solution...But for the present Berlin remains what it has been.. a symbol,a thermometer of the cold war or possibly the destruct button of this planet....

My dear Mr. Murrow:

I cannot resist the impulse to send you a "fan note" regarding your wonderful TV program last week about Berlin, on "See It Now."

I think my husband will tell you that I am not given to over-enthusiasm, especially about matters connected with television but I was truly enthusiastic about that particular program of yours, over a week ago.

In the intervening time I have found myself thinking back to it many many times. In other words, it certainly enriched my "background of thought and experience." It ought to be shown in every college and school in the entire country which owns a television set!

With cordial greetings and many thanks,

Yours sincerely,

Dear Ed:

From Berlin your report was effective enough to be heard around the world.

And, as far as crediting Ammident for cancelling its program: you didn't cancel "Danger" — you merely re-emphasized it!

I only hope that the danger of mere passive interest in German welfare and progress is somewhat obviated by your superb reporting.

My congratulations.

Sincerely,

Charles

Dear Mrs. Williams:

Many thanks for your letter about the Berlin show. It was an interesting and stimulating trip, and I felt it was a worthwhile project. A letter like yours makes me feel the time and effort expended on making the program were well spent. I am proud of the good colleagues who contributed so much to the success of the show.

Best regards.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

This is just a note to express my thanks to you for making it possible for us to see present day Berlin on that one hour T.V. show.

It was a wonderful experience, I can assure you. Walter & I flew in on the air lift in November 1948, a very tense time as you know.

Walter was not home that evening so missed seeing the program and hearing what was said.

Liked your closing statement!

Thanks so much for what you do for all of us Americans.

Remember us to Mrs. Murrow — all our best to you.

With warm regards,

Ethel Williams

MILO J. RADULOVICH - DEXTER, MICHIGAN

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Good evening. A few weeks ago there occurred a few obscure notices in the newspaper about a Lieutenant Milo Radulovich, a Lieutenant in the Air Force Reserve and also something about Air Force Regulation 35-62. That is a regulation which states that a man may be regarded as a security risk if he has close and continuing association with communists or people believed to have communist sympathies. Lieutenant Radulovich was asked to resign. He declined. A Board was called and heard his case. At the end, it was recommended that he be severed from the Air Force although it was also stated that there was no question whatsoever as to the Lieutenant's loyalty. We propose to examine, insofaras we can, the case of Lieutenant Radulovich. Our reporter, Joe Wershba:

JOE WERSHBA:

This is the town of Dexter, Michigan ... population 1500.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

This statue is at the head of Ann Arbor Street. "Erected by the citizens of Dexter to the heroes who fought and the martyrs who died that the Republic might live." This is the story of Milo Radulovich .. no special hero, no martyr. He came to Dexter one year ago after ten years in the Air Force..won a general commendation for working on a secret weather station in Greenland. Now he is a Senior at the University of Michigan eight miles away. His wife works nights at the Telephone Company. They live at 7867 Ann Arbor Street. This is Milo Radulovich.

MILO RADULOVICH:

The Force does not question my loyalty in the least. They have reiterated that on several occasions. They have presented me with allegations against my sister and father that they have - to the effect that my sister and dad have taken - have read what are now called subversive newspapers, and that my sister and father's activities are questionable. Thats the specific charge,or allegation I prefer to call it, against them. Against me, the actual charge against me is that I had maintained a close and continuing relationship with my dad and my sister over the years. I had spent the last seven years studying or actually working in meteorology. That is weather forecasting - and now for the past approximately year and a half or two, I have been studying Physics at the University of Michigan. Well, I think I am being a realist about it. Anybody that is labeled with a security risk in these days especially in Physics or Meteorology simply won't be able to find employment in his field of work. In other words, I believe that if I am labeled a security risk - if the Air Force won't have me - I ask the question - who else will?

EDWARD R. MURROW:

This is Selfridge Field, Headquarters of the 10th Air Force, where the Radulovich hearing took place. There was a Board made up of three Colonels whose recommendation was that Radulovich be separated from the service as a bad security risk, quote for having maintained a close, continuing association with your sister and your father unquote. The Board also stated, "No question as to your loyalty is involved." No reporters were permitted at the hearing and the Air Force refused to provide us with a transcript of the hearing. (It was unclassified, however).

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Lieutenant Radulovich was defended by Attorney Charles C. Lockwood, and this is his report on the hearing.

CHARLES C. LOCKWOOD:

When this case started, the President of the Hearing Board placed a sealed envelope in front of him and said: "These are the allegations. Now proceed to exonerate yourself." There were twelve charges made by the Air Force - eight of them against the sister and four of them against the father. We put in several disinterested witnesses who testified definitely and positively upon the allegations made by the Air Force. These witnesses gave unchallenged testimony and they gave it under oath. The Air Force did not produce a single witness. We were not told who the accusers were. We have no right to confront them or cross-examine them. But at the conclusion of the trial, although we had met the allegations, the Air Force made findings at the conclusion of the hearing that every single allegation was true. They disregarded every bit of testimony we introduced and the statements of all our witnesses. As a matter of fact, we have had no hearing at all. We have had no day in court. In all the thirty-two years that I have been a practicing attorney in Detroit, I have never witnessed such a farce and travesty upon justice as this thing has developed. Now this whole theory of guilty by relationship is something that was adopted back in the thirteenth and fourteenth century and then abandoned as being inhuman and cruel. It was later revived in Germany under Hitler and Himmler and it died when they did. Now the Air Force, for some unknown reason, has revived this intolerable guilty by relationship and the whole country is shocked as a reason - by reason thereof.

CHARLES C. LOCKWOOD:

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Dexter has been a town for over one hundred years ... has had no spectacular news stories, no cause celebres ... But they are vitally concerned with the case of Milo Radulovich ... and they are willing to discuss it. This is John Palmer, Chief Marshall of the town. He has known Radulovich a year.

JOHN PALMER:

I find him to be a good fellow here and the people were quite shocked in Dexter when they found out about it - and as I read about it more in the papers, why its still a mystery to me why they are condemning him for something that his father did. Certainly, he can't condemn his father and cast him aside just because he read a paper that he wasn't supposed to read. I couldn't do that. Neither could any other boy who had a father.

WERSHBA: Is there any talk about his moving out of town?

PALMER: Yes I hear he is moving out of town. You know, I'd stick around and see it through, I wouldn't run and I don't think he should. If he could get employment - why stick around and stay with it - still be a good neighbor to us like he has been in the past. We would like to have him here if he'd stay.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Next we went down Ann Arbor Street to the dry cleaning store managed by Mrs. Madeleine Lewis.

MRS. LEWIS:

Well, I felt like so many others in Dexter that Milo really was getting a pretty bad deal on this and we had quite a lot of faith in the boy - and so I started a Petition and had - well the biggest share of the business people sign the Petition that his loyalty wasn't questioned and we thought that it would be better if only the people that knew him personally signed, and every signature on the Petition were people that are his friends.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

After Mrs. Lewis we went to see A. G. Wall, the town dentist. For twenty-nine years he was Dexter's Mayor.

DR. A. G. WALL:

The information that I have the only thing they seem to have on this boy is the fact that some of his relatives are communist or communist inclined, and from my viewpoint I can't see how they can hold a man responsible for the views and actions of his relatives because of the fact that you can't control them.

ERNST ALSASSER: (GAS STATION)

I don't see why he should be held responsible for what his father and sister did. I know I wouldn't want to be held responsible for what my father did.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

That was Ernst Alsasser. He runs a gas station. From there we traveled two blocks to talk to Steve Sorter. He is Post Commander of the American Legion and drives a beer truck.

STEVE SORTER:

I wouldn't know him if he came down the middle of the street. And thats beside the point. What I want to say is this - that I do believe that if the Air Corps or United States Army or whoever they are that are purging him gets away with it, they are entitled to do it to anybody. You or me or anybody else. If it comes to the point where you and I are held responsible for the activities of any member of our family, then we all better head for cover - or we better uncover what is already started.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Detroit is 53 miles from Dexter. Milo and Nancy Radulovich go there every six weeks (according to the testimony) to visit his father, John Radulovich... The older Radulovich has for the past 26 years worked for the Hudson Motor Company. Before that he worked in the coal mines. Reporter Wershba went to see Claude Bland, an officer of Radulovich's Local U.A.W. He was a character witness at the hearing.

WERSHBA: Hello Mr. Bland. I understand you are Recording Secretary for Local 154 of the Auto Workers Union. I was wondering if you would answer a few questions about old John Radulovich. What is your Union's position and your position on Communists in the Union?

BLAND: We don't want any part of them and if we find any we should have the purpose of removing them from our midst.

WERSHBA: Well, Mr. Bland, what about these charges against John Radulovich?

BLAND: I think its preposterous from what I know of the case from its inception.

WERSHBA: What about this paper he was supposed to be reading?

BLAND: I heard reports that he read papers, which to me doesn't mean a thing, because naturally people of foreign extraction will naturally read papers printed in the language with which they were more familiar. Thats ... they said he read Serbian papers.

WERSHBA: Do you think John qualifies as a subversive in the plant?

BLAND: I would never classify John Radulovich as subversive in any way, shape or form.

WERSHBA: Then you have known him quite a while, eh?

BLAND: I have known him since 1937. I worked with the man in the Department for 2 years - in '45 and '46 - ate lunch with him on many occasions. I never heard him say one word regarding the Communist philosophy.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Milo Radulovich's father lives at 3953 Nottingham Street. He owns his own house. According to Milo, his father denies subscribing to the Daily Worker and said he subscribed to the Serbian newspaper which is pro-Tito because he liked their Christmas calendars. This week John Radulovich and his wife decided to send a letter to the President of the United States.

JOHN RADULOVICH:

Dear Mr. President: I writing to you with heavy heart. I am an American citizen who come here 39 years ago from Serbia. I serve America in the army in the first world war. My boy Milo was in this last war. My whole life, my whole family is American. Mr. President, I writing to you because they are doing a bad thing to Milo. They are wrong. The things they say about him are wrong. He has given all his growing year to his country. Mr. President, I am an old man. I have spend my life in this coal mine and auto furnaces. I ask nothing for myself. I ask is justice for my boy. Mr. President, I ask your help.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

This is the sister, Margaret Radulovich Fishman. She neither defends nor explains her political activities.

MARGARET RADULOVICH FISHMAN:

I do feel very personally. I feel very badly about the thing. I feel that he is being forced to undergo a strain for a very unjust cause. I — I feel that my activities be what they may — my political beliefs are my own private affair and I feel that the charges leveled against me and by reason of which they are trying to purge him from the Army just seem to me to be a fantastic trend in this country. Its ... I mean you know since when can a man be adjudged guilty, which is in effect whats happened to him, because of the alleged political beliefs or activities of a member of his family.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Back in Dexter, we returned to the wooden frame house on Ann Arbor Street and talked to Milo's wife.

WERSHBA: Nancy, considering you are a mother with two kids, in your heart of hearts, wouldn't you have preferred that Milo would have kept sort of quiet about this and maybe it would have passed over? And nobody would have known about it?

NANCY: Well no. I wouldn't want him to take it lying down. If he did, he would be admitting something that we aren't guilty of, and I don't see how this should have happened to us when we have done nothing to warrant it.

WERSHBA: Do you think you might have avoided all trouble if Milo would have said: "Well, I will resign and quit?"

NANCY: No. No. I wouldn't want him to do that. As far as the publicity is concerned, it makes the rest of the country know whats happening and they all feel for us and want to help us. I don't regret anything at all - him coming forward and fighting it.

WERSHBA: Well Milo, what about this close and continuing relationship that the Air Force talked about in terms of you and your father and sister?

MILO: That charge is defined by the Air Force as visiting frequently, writing frequently, or living at the same address as the accused. In my case - I don't mean to apologize or anything like that for my relationships or my relatives, but I have maintained throughout this entire hearing that what my sister does, what political opinions or activities she engages in, are her own affair because they certainly do not influence me. She is a woman ... married, about to have a child ... 29 years of age .. perfectly capable of making her own decisions .. a mature adult. The close association I have maintained in the hearing and this is what the Air Force hung its removal decision on - I told them in the hearing that I felt that yes I was close to my sister and my father and that I was born into it. I mean she is my sister and he is my father. I am his son and I am her brother and I certainly can't cut the blood tie nor do I wish to cut the blood tie and they quoted me directly those words in their findings. In other words, the implication seemed to me at least to be that MILO: if I had said "I will cut the blood ties, et cetera" everything would have been beautiful with the Air Force. Well, I simply cannot see that type of reasoning. Furthermore, as far as a physical, close association goes, I didn't have it. It was impossible. I was in the Service since I was 17 years of age and we proved in the hearing that no - that is no physical close continuing association was present between myself and my sister. However, the Board felt that they must have felt that there is still a feeling of goodness toward her or brotherly love you might say rather than an antagonism because I was actually asked why I did not denounce my sister's views. Well, the word "denounce" in the dictionary means not just denouncing views. It means saying something to punish an individual and to actually attack the individual.

WERSHBA: I guess a lot of people must have asked you from time to time -- wouldn't it have been a lot easier for you if you had - well just sort of kept quiet about the whole thing - maybe resigned and nobody would have known anything about it at all. This trouble wouldn't have come to you?

MILO: Yes. Thats right. I could have signed a resignation form which was titled RESIGNATION IN LIEU OF ELIMINATION FROM THE SERVICE and this would have given me an honorable discharge. However, the honorable discharge would have stipulated that I have been discharged because the Air Force could not trust me. In other words, because I had been discharged as a security risk.

MILO: And I certainly didn't believe in my own heart that I was a security risk. I didn't believe in view of my past record with the Air Force that I was ... that I should take this lying down.

WERSHBA: What happens to your two children - your 5 year old and 5 month old in terms of you?

MILO: Yes. If I am being judged on my relatives, are my children going to be asked to denounce me? Are they going to be asked on what their father was labeled? Are they going to have to explain to their friends why their father's a security risk? I see absolutely that this is a chain reaction if the thing is let stand as first recommendation sent out by the Board. I see a chain reaction that has no end to anybody for anybody.

WERSHBA: Maybe you thought about this too. Just what is your view of democracy?

MILO: Well, I believe that democracy is a state of being where the society is free. Each individual is free to do as he chooses as long as it does not bring physical harm or physical danger or impoverishment or anything like that to other individuals. I think that people in a democracy should be the ultimate authority over everything. That is over the military and over the civilian branches of the government. The people in a true democracy have and always should have the final say. I don't believe that this procedure that I have been subjected to by the Air Force is in that democratic tradition.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

This is the transcript of the hearing. It is not classified. We got it from the Lieutenant's lawyers. I would like to read you just a bit of it. The lawyer says: "This whole proceeding is taken over objection."

The President of the Board says: "That is understood and adequately shown in the record. Will the Recorder introduce the government's evidence.

RECORDER: I would like to introduce into evidence as Exhibit F, the classified investigative file.

PRESIDENT: It will be received and will be considered by the board.

THE LAWYER: Is it being received as a closed envelope?

PRESIDENT: It is a confidential investigative file.

LAWYER: It is a report to the Air Force by someone or some agency, is that right?

PRESIDENT: It is a consolidation of reports by various investigative agencies of the government.

THE LAWYER: Of which the respondent is not informed, does not see and has no way of knowing what it is except as found in the statement of reasons?

PRESIDENT: That is correct.

MURROW: Later the President says: "It is not in a sealed envelope in a strict sense."

MURROW: The lawyer replies: "May the record show it is an envelope approximately 9 x 12 inches with a rubber band placed around same and scotch tape along the edges which have been broken up, that is the scotch tape, which we can fully see from where we are sitting, with no right to examine it."

MURROW: Then the lawyer says to the President of the Board? "Do you think we all have the right to transmit our views and publish them?"

MURROW: And the President of the Board replies: "I might decline to answer that question in that I am not on trial for my views and my personal views might not be the views of the Air Force."

MURROW: Perhaps you will permit me to read a few sentences just at the end because I should like to say rather precisely what I mean. We have told the Air Force that we will provide facilities for any comments, criticism or correction it may wish to make in regard to the case of Milo Radulovich. The case must go through two more Air Force Boards routine and channels before it reaches Secretary Talbott who will make the final decision. We are unable to judge the charges against the father or the Lieutenant's sister because neither we nor you nor the Lieutenant nor the lawyers know precisely what was contained in that manila envelope. Was it hearsay, rumor, gossip or hard, provable fact backed by creditable witnesses; we do not know. There is a distinct difference between a loyalty and a security risk. A man may be entirely loyal, but at the same time be subjected to coercion, influence, or pressure, which may cause him to act contrary to the best interests of national security. In the case of Lieutenant Radulovich, the Board found that there was no question of his loyalty, but that he was regarded as a security risk. The Security Officers will tell you that a man who had a sister in Warsaw might be entirely loyal, but would be subjected to pressure as a result of threats that might be made against his sister's security or well being. They contend that a man who has a sister in the Communist Party in this country might be subjected to the same kind of pressure, but here again, no evidence was adduced to prove that Radulovich's sister was a member of the Party, and the case against his father certainly was not made. We believe that "the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father," even though that iniquity be proved beyond all doubt, which in this case, it was not. But we believe, too, that this case illustrates the urgent need for the Armed Forces to communicate more fully than they have so far done, the procedures and regulations to be followed in attempting to protect the national security and the rights of the individual at the same time. Whatever happens in this whole area of the relationship between the individual and the state, we do ourselves - it cannot be blamed upon Malenkov, Mao Tse Tung or even our allies.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

It seems to us that - that is to Fred Friendly and myself that that is a subject that should be argued about endlessly.

You may have noticed we left out the middle commercial and saved it for the end. We hope you might find it interesting now.

SHOW #10 SEE IT NOW Nocwmvwe 24, 1953

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Good evening. Five weeks ago tonight, this program devoted considerable time to the case of Lt. Milo Radulovich, an Air Force Reserve Officer, whom a Security Review Board felt was a security risk . There were no charges against Radulovich, only against his sister and father. The case had been under the consideration of the Air Force ever since. At the conclusion of our report five weeks ago, we took the opportunity to offer criticism, comment or correction. Today, the decision was reached on Lt. Milo Radulovich, and here is the Secretary of the Air Force, Harold E. Talbott.

SECRETARY OF AIR FORCE, HAROLD E. TALBOTT:

Mr. Murrow, as Secretary of the Air Force, it is my sworn duty to uphold and protect the security of the United States. I am also keenly aware of my responsibility to protect the individual rights and privileges of each man and woman in the United States Air Force. The preservation of our American way of life requires that we must be alert to safeguard our individual liberties. I have given the case of 1st Lieutenant Milo J. Radulovich the most serious consideration. I have decided that it is consistent with the interests of the national security to retain Lieut. Radulovich in the United States Air Force. He is not, in my opinion, a security risk. Routine investigation had produced certain information which raised a real question as to whether Lieut. Radulovich was a security risk as an Air Force officer.

SECRETARY OF AIR FORCE, HAROLD E. TALBOTT:

This information related not to Lieut. Radulovich's own activities and views but to those of other individuals with whom Lieut. Radulovich appeared to be closely associated. It led an Air Force Board to question whether Lieut. Radulovich should be retained in the Air Force Reserve. The policy of the Department of the Air Force is not to discharge any officer or airman as a security risk without giving him notice of the derogatory information in the Air Force's possession, and a full opportunity to present his own case in justification of his retention in the Air Force. In the course of the hearings, Lieut. Radulovich testified at length concerning his relationship with his sister. He did not attempt to explain or justify her reported activities, but he maintained that he would not be influenced by them. Lieut. Radulovich is a mature officer with a family of his own. He served honorably and well for 14 months as an Airman, and 6 years as an officer on active duty with the Air Force. After reviewing the entire record in this case, I am convinced, that under all the circumstances, the nature of Lieut. Radulovich's association with his sister is not such as to make her activities and beliefs the determining factor in this case. I am also convinced that the record does not support the conclusion that Lieut. Radulovich's father has engaged in activities of such a type as to bear upon the decision in this case. The question raised as to security has thus been resolved in Lieut. Radulovich's favor, and I have, therefore, directed that Radulovich be retained in his

This next report we call "The Argument in Indianapolis." There was considerable argument there last week between the American Legion and a group of people who wanted to start a local Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. This report was all filmed in a period of five days, and all the arguments will be presented by the people who actually participated. Our reporters: Joe Wershba and Ed Scott; our cameramen: Charlie Mack and Marty Barnett.

That shaft is an Indiana landmark - a Memorial to those who died in the war between the States. Located at almost the exact center of the State of Indiana - 3 blocks North of here is a Memorial to the dead of World War I. This is the Indiana World War Memorial. In the last part of October, a group of Indiana citizens booked the auditorium for the night of November 20th, for a meeting to form an Indianapolis Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. On November 16th, four days before the meeting, the reservation was cancelled by the auditorium management. W. Roland Allen, a department store executive, begins the story for us.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

W. ROLAND ALLEN:

On the 16th of October, a group of 60 or 70 fine men and women -- professors from Indiana University and Perdue University, physicians, lawyers, housewives, and other good folk got together in a local hotel here to decide whether or not it would be wise to form an American Civil Liberties unit here in Indiana. Some very simple committees were set up, one of which was to find a place to speak in. A few weeks later, we all got a notice that a room had been secured at the Indiana War Memorial, a vast and huge building, erected in memory of the men who died in World War I - incidentally, fighting we think, for civil liberties. We had the East Room of that building and felt secure in immediately sending out notices to several hundred people of the time and place of the meeting. A few days before that meeting was scheduled, we heard to our surprise, that the Hall had been disallowed our group as a result of a protest from the American Legion and the Minute Women, a group by the way, that I personally had never heard of before.

And so, the old problem of controversy came up, and many people mistook controversy for conspiracy.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Next, Wershba went to F.J. "Star" Brown, manager of the War Memorial, and asked why permission to use the auditorium had been withdrawn.

F.J. "STAR" BROWN:

When the American Civil Liberties Union applied to me to have a meeting, their local representatives in Indianapolis, as far as I knew, were very reputable people, representing business and learning in Indiana. So I granted them the privilege of setting the date for this meeting. After two weeks had gone, I began to get letters from various groups, including the American Legion, the Minute Women of Indiana, and others ... realizing that this meeting must be of a controversial nature, and not agreeable to the rules and regulations that govern the use of this Indiana World War Memorial, I thereupon cancelled the meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union.

WERSHBA: Tell me, did you ever find out who these Minute Women of Indiana are?

A. I do not know anything about the Minute Women of Indiana. There is an organization of Minute Women but I don't know anything about them.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

This is 3650 Washington Boulevard, the home of one of Indianapolis' Minute Women. This is Miss Marguerite Dice, a past officer of the organization who stated that she does not speak officially for the Minute Women but does not feel her statement contravenes their policy.

MISS MARGUERITE DICE:

It has been said in the course of this dispute that the War Memorial Building was erected for the men who died in the last World War. That is not the whole truth. It was erected in memory of those men who gave their lives for the protection and preservation of the principles on which this country was founded. The inscriptions, in and outside of it, bear witness to this. What a travesty it would be to open its doors for a meeting to which Communists are welcome when we know the open and avowed purpose of such is to overthrow our government by force and violence as well as by infiltration.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

The heaviest objections came from the American Legion. This is Indiana State Commander, Roy M. Amos.

AMERICAN LEGION COMMANDER ROY M. AMOS:

The American Legion can never agree that the Indiana War Memorial is a fitting place for a meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union. The Memorial is hallowed ground. It is a shrine sacred to the memory of thousands of Hoosier patriots, many of whom died in Korea fighting Communism. As such, it must never be used as a sounding board for the advocacy of any policy of pampering Communists to the virtual exclusion of all others.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

The decision that the War Memorial could not be used was announed on Monday. On Tuesday, the Civil Liberties people called the Claypool Hotel. A clerk told them the Chateau Room was available. Shortly after that, it was discovered that it had been previously booked. Then, the American Civil Liberties Union called the Continental Hotel on North Meridian Street. After that, the Riddick Piano Company which has a large studio that is generally for rent. Next, the Civil Liberties Union went to the Public Library and asked for their auditorium. After that, the Indianapolis YMCA. All of these places reported that they were either previously booked or for other various reasons unavailable for the Friday night meeting.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Wednesday, the American Civil Liberties Union, went to the Knights of Columbus on North Delaware Street and were offered their large Hall. A price of $50 was agreed upon - but that night, the Knights of Columbus auditorium was withdrawn. We asked Grand Knight Donald Latendresse why.

GRAND KNIGHT DONALD LATENDRESSE:

We seem to have gotten involved in the midst of a situation we had no desire to become involved in. We had been approached as to renting our Hall to the American Civil Liberties Union, and at first thought, could see no reason why it wouldn't be all right. However, upon further investigation, we find that it was a controversial issue, and since our membership is comprised of some 15-hundred who have various views on different things, we felt that we didn't want to become involved in a controversial affair which might lead to internal strife in our organization. We felt that since the issue was controversial that we should remain in the middle. However, it seems that you can't remain in the middle in a situation such as this. The very fact that we were approached by the organization to rent the Hall put us in the middle, because if we refused we were taking sides, and if we accepted, we were taking sides.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Of the 33 newspapers, 2 ran editorials. The Indianapolis Times, a Scripps-Howard publication, opposed the Legion's ban and stated that liberty belongs to everyone or to no one. The Indianapolis Star, also Republican, said the Legion had a right to oppose the views of the American Civil Liberties Union, but had no right to prevent their meeting.

Four churches were approached. None were available for the Friday night meeting. Then, less than two days before the meeting, an auditorium was finally offered. This is the corner of Vermont and New Jersey Streets, just a few blocks east of the War Memorial Building. Victor L. Goosens, Pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church offered them his church's Social Center. It was accepted. We asked Father Goosens why he had interested himself in this controversy.

FATHER VICTOR L. GOOSENS:

Well, I suppose you could say that it was in rather a casual way that I became involved. The request was simply brought to my attention that the American Civil Liberties Union was rather anxious to find a place to meet, and the idea was put forward that perhaps they might be interested in using our auditorium, and of course, I was perfectly willing to let them have it, even though they had been denied the use of several other auditorium, for the simple reason that I had no reason to believe them unfit or unworthy for the use of our premises. And so, as the controversy developed, I found that it was not only a situation in which we ought to actually let them use it, but that we really should insist that they be given a place to meet for the simple reason that it seems to me that there is something much more basic involved here than merely the idea of a meeting place. We have to be very careful, of course, to recognize the rights of minorities. You know, we all of us at some time or other are going to find ourselves in a minority group. Perhaps it might be politically or it might be religiously or it might just be a minority group on some other question, but we are going to find that we are at some time or other in a minority, and it is possible for any group outside of the legally constituted branches of government to restrain another from peaceful assembly and from the right to express themselves freely --- then all our liberties are in danger, and I feel that way about it, that if an organization no matter how well intentioned it might be in its purposes -- if one organization can prevent another group of people who are not traitors, who are not subversive, from gathering together in peaceful assembly to discuss and to speak freely, then what guarantee would there be that later on another group might not decide that when I or my people might gather together for purposes of worship or the exercise of freedom of religion, that we should be stopped?

FATHER VICTOR L. GOOSENS:

EDWARD R. MURROW:

The meeting was held on Friday night, but that same night the Indiana Department of the American Legion held an executive session. Part of their business was to protest the Civil Liberties Union meeting. Commander Amos presided.

At virtually the same moment in the meeting hall of St. Mary's (3 blocks from the church), Professor Ralph F. Fuchs, of the Indiana University Law School was calling to order the first meeting of the Indianapolis Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. Because these two meetings, running simultaneously, so paralleled each other in subject and debate, we have chosen to present them as we have political debates, with each side answering the other. The Legion spokesmen can be distinguished by the traditional Legion overseas caps.

LEGIONNAIRE:

You are assembled here tonight to receive information on a new development on the "red firing line" in Indiana.

PAUL CLAY (ACLU):

I don't like to be told that anybody can't have a meeting. It gets my Irish up.

LEGIONNAIRE:

Mr. Commander, members of the Executive Committee, the fact that the meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union is being held in the Social Center of a Catholic Church does not constitute an endorsement of the American Civil Liberties Union by the Catholic Church. The use of the Hall for the meeting was granted on the grounds that the organization had not yet been declared subversive by the Attorney General, and I hold with the American Legion that every effort should be made to expose any and all who are attempting to spread subversive propaganda.

W. ROLAND ALLEN:

This week's adventures in our community remind me of the old American habit of answering a man who says he wants to talk ... we say: "Well, why don't you go hire a hall?" This week we found ourselves having great difficulty in carrying out that old American habit. But those who understand the spiritual purpose and the constitutional purpose of the American Civil Liberties Union are not going to be afraid. This is no time to be afraid,

LEGIONNAIRE

The issue is the alerting of the people of Indiana to the fact that there is being established in Indiana a Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. This is an organization that is parading its avowed purposes of protecting the Civil Rights of individuals. With such a purpose the American Legion can never quarrel. The American Legion itself is a Civil Liberties organization because it has repeatedly gone to the defense whenever veterans' constitutional rights were threatened or invaded.

LEGIONNAIRE:

MERLE MILLER (ATTORNEY): (ACLU):

I first heard of the American Civil Liberties Union about 20 years ago, but I heard of it from a Supreme Court Judge of this State -- a conservative old Republican, and I have come to realize that a true Conservative and a true Liberal will find themselves side by side protecting the civil rights of their fellowmen. For the true meaning of the word "conservative" means that you wish to conserve the best of the past and pass it on the way you got it. A true Liberal means a tolerance for the convictions of others and a willingness to hear them out. And so, in Civil Liberties, we find strange folks side by side who disagree on anything with everybody else excepting on the right of those who disagree with them to be heard.

LEGIONNAIRE:

The Indiana Department of the American Legion, with documentary evidence at hand of the facts that the speaker for the meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union has subscribed to and been a member of an organization listed as subversive, took the stand that the Indiana War Memorial dedicated to the memory of our war dead should not be used as a sounding board for his philosophy or policy.

LEGIONNAIRE:

PROFESSOR RALPH FUCHS (ACLU):

I take great pleasure in presenting Mr. Arthur Garfield Hays of New York, General Counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union.

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS:

There is only one thing that I know of on which President Eisenhower and ex-President Truman seem to agree. And that is on the good work done by the American Civil Liberties Union. President Eisenhower made the following statement in connection with a dinner honoring 10 Civil Liberties organizations:"I am sure the people of the United States join in honoring the work of the distinguished, private agencies which are doing so much to guard civil rights and to advance human rights in our nation." Since I understand the American Legion doesn't fully agree, I want to quote on what Douglas MacArthur said on December 30, 1949. Roger Baldwin is the man attacked today by the head of the Legion here. MacArthur said: "Roger Baldwin's crusade for Civil Liberties has had a profound and beneficial influence upon the course of American progress with countless individuals finding protection in the nobility of the cause he has long espoused. He stands out as one of the architects of our cherished American way of life.

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS:

LEGIONNAIRE:

Mr. Commander, in my hand I have a clipping taken from the Nation magazine of June 28, 1932. This clipping is an advertisement of the American Civil Liberties Union which asks the reader to join with them in fighting the Smith and MacCarran Act. I believe that any organization that would advertise such a fact cannot have the interest of the United States at heart. And I think Commander Amos is right in exposing them in Indiana.

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS:

Ten percent of our time has had to do with communists. As I said during my talk, what worries us chiefly is that the non-communists are the people who suffer. And what is the matter with a controversial subject? Controversy is as American as the Rocky Mountains or the Fourth of July.

LEGIONNAIRE:

I understand that the American Civil Liberties Union has gone to the defense of Harry Bridges - according to all the information I have had on the matter Harry Bridges is the head of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, which was expelled from the National C.I.O. in 1949 for following the Communist party line. The United States Government has sought the deportation of Bridges on the ground that he is a subversive alien and obtained his citizenship under fraudulent conditions. An organization which gives aid and comfort to anyone such as Bridges does not belong in Indiana.

LEGIONNAIRE:

LEWIS GREENBERG (ATTORNEY):

I think that they are pretty sacred to our concept of civilization -- is that we say to one another "Let us agree to disagree agreeably." So far as I am concerned, the views of the extremists, whether from the right or the left, are rather obnoxious, but I feel that when they are met in the court of public opinion, with trial and error, with freedom to express and to nail the lies, that freedom and truth will become victors.

DR. NORMAN BOHER (AMERICAN LEGION):

Mr. Commander, fellow members of this Executive Committee, having full faith in and of the facts we each possess, as working Legionnaires of the Department of Indiana, I move that this Executive Committee approve the action taken by our Commander and this Department in this matter involving the American Civil Liberties Union, and I move and propose that we make this action unanimous.

LEGIONNAIRE:

Mr. Commander, I, Orin Nailan, of the 9th District, school supply salesman, take great pleasure in seconding this motion.

ROY M. AMOS:

Gentlemen, you have all heard the motion as it has been made and duly seconded. Is there any question on the motion? Any discussion? All those in favor of the motion as made, vote by the usual sign of AYE.

CHORUS: "AYE"

Those contrary - no. Its been duly carried. Thank you so much.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

The Legion had its say and its Resolution, and the Civil Liberties Union had their meeting. Indianapolis is still there and controversy is everywhere.

FATHER VICTOR L. GOOSENS:

Well, the fact that there was more excitement made me that much more concerned, because it proved to me in a way, that the time had come when we had to take a stand on that -- when the climate is such that so many people are so quick to take the law into their own hands or rather I should say perhaps, to ignore the law and to deny to others the right of peaceful assembly and free speech - - then somebody has to take a stand on the subject and prove to them that they are in their activities actually un-American in their way of procedure. And its up to us, I think, to lead the way because we know that the freedoms - the American freedoms are all based upon the rights which God has given us and if the church and religion do not uphold those basic principles which come from God, then who will?

FATHER VICTOR L. GOOSENS:

EDWARD R. MURROW:

That was the argument in Indianapolis last week. Good night and good luck.

Thanksgiving Day, 1953

Sirs:

I wish to take this opportunity to express to you and your staff my own and my family's deepest, sincerest expressions of thanks, respect and gratitude.

This world wailfully crys out for men of your strength, caliber, ideals and your ability to place the outspoken word where it can be most effective...with no fear of where the chips may fall.

For my family, here in Michigan, no words exist that can do justice to your fight against injustice and attacks on our way of life. It is even more frightening when these injustices and attacks radiate from cherished institutions and consequently organizations like your own that stand and question an action, are rare indeed. I realize that I was a symbol or a part of a much larger complex texture. Like the chain however, where one link weakens or is cut, the whole must fall.

Your commentary on my case with the USAF had the effect, as if a lens, to focus the real significance and danger of guilt by association and relationship, of state vs individual, onto the screen of the American people. The resulting reaction from the people I will always cherish and will think of it as the real reason for Mr. Talbot's reversal of his own opinion on my case.

There is no greater judge in all the world or in this land of ours, than the people aroused. This has been true time and again. From our early days to the present. Unquestionably this has been one of the great dynamic qualities that have made us and kept us free. "The great normal majority" of America will always stand as the final unbreakable barrier to any trend toward Communism or Fascism.

Again, our deepest gratitude for your interest and fight, both to you, Mr. Friendly and Mr. Wershba and crew who were in Dexter with us. The basic brick and mortar of America has been bolstered upwards by your program on our case and the reaction to it.

Sincerly yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow —

Just a note while I am on a short vacation.

As the Attorney for Milo J Radulovich I want to express my deep and sincere appreciation to the Aluminum Company of America, the National Broadcasting Co. and yourself for the magnificent program you presented dealing with the Radulovich family and the Radulovich case.

I regard your program as the turning point in the case. Without this program I seriously doubt if President Eisenhower would have known of the case and we would have achieved a reversal of the original decision.

My one great regret was that we were unable to view the broadcast in Detroit but we heard from all over the country what a tremendous impression it created.

It took a high degree of leadership and courage, Mr. Murrow to do what you did and it took abiding faith in the principles of the case as we conceived those principles to be.

In the years ahead I feel that the Radulovich case will be looked upon as one of the great land marks in the never ending fight to protect our basic liberties and traditional American way

Very many thanks for your nice letter and comments about the Radulovich Story. It was most gratifying to all of us who worked on the program to find public reaction overwhelmingly favorable. We had felt it a worthwhile project and the general response has proved that we were right.

Many thanks again for writing.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I'm sorry it's taken me this long to do this, but Jack Gould's piece on Sunday made me feel guilty about not having written sooner. I agree with every word of Gould's -- and much more. You've got imagination and guts -- two qualities altogether too rare in television today. The Radulovich case history will certainly make television history.

I've been meaning to write to you for some weeks now about an idea I've got in which you might be interested. But this will have to wait. I want this to be simply a mash note from a devoted fan of yours.

Dear Ed:

Last evening, Jim Seward telephoned me at home in reference to a mutual problem. After this had been resolved, I enthused over your broadcast of this past Tuesday evening. I mentioned to Jim that it was not my custom to write "fan letters" but I felt that you had been so thorough and justifiably critical in your approach that this particular broadcast could not help but establish the entire series as an outstanding public service. Jim said he thought that you might be pleased to know of my reactions, and, hence, this letter.

While your programs have maintained a very high journalistic standard, I cannot recall any program in recent years which, in my opinion, did so much to expose a situation which should never have existed and which I am confident will be rectified without delay.

I might add, in closing, that several members of our firm, knowing of my interest in CBS, came in to see me yesterday to tell me about the broadcast, and there was complete unanimity in praising your recognition of a very inherently dangerous situation, and in the manner in which you presented the facts made available to you.

With kind personal regards, I remain

Briefing

on United Nations Affairs

A Biweekly Digest and Analysis Vol. I, No. 13 November 9, 1953

Political

Racial-religious anti-Westernism in the General Assembly was extended to political ad absurdum with the decision of many Eastern delegates to abstain on any formal action supporting US exposure of torture-induced germ warfare "confessions" by US flyers. The Arab-Asian bloc does not doubt the validity of the evidence. But it dislikes recent US stands opposing them in UN voting. Result has been to block a collective UN condemnation of palpably false Communist charges.

Action on Communist atrocities to general war prisoners may be easier to get. The US Army's release of the report surprised the US Mission but it promptly moved to get the subject on the Assembly agenda. Some delegates express concern, however, that the timing of the release might jeopardize the already paralytic steps towards a Korean peace conference.

The Arab-Asian drive for political equality touches nearly all General Assembly committees. On Tunisia they scored a 29-22 victory for a paragraph calling for its sovereignty and independence. They rolled up a 38-2 vote labelling South Africa's treatment of her Indians contrary to the Charter. The 19 abstainers included the white members of the Commonwealth, 5 Latin American states and most of Western Europe. The US voted 'yes' but expressed the belief that a new resolution was unnecessary and a bar to negotiations South Africa is willing to try outside the UN.

Michael Scott, Anglican clergyman with "credentials" from native chiefs in the Rhodesias and Nyasaland, instigated debate on the new Central African Federation of these territories which brought the UK to the point of walking out. The UK holds that creation of the Federation is not UN business.

Scott is privately unhappy over opposing his own government and wishes it would accept international accountability for dependent lands.

Watch the forthcoming debate on disarmament for clues on what effect a US decision to build its field forces around atomic weapons would have on the prospect for UN atomic control.

Speculation here includes two opposing views. One is that the US may be preparing to move for prohibition of the strategic atomic weapon, the bomb, now that it has tactical atomic arms for its field forces. Another is that the US may be forced into a position of thwarting UN atomic control if, after it had based its defense on atomic weapons, Russia were to concede to US-UN international inspection terms, demanding in return that all atomic weapons be outlawed. This the US could hardly approve since Russia would have a preponderance of other military forces.

Some observers believe the spread of atomic production may be the real hope for peace since, with production general, the deterrent effect might also be general, as in the case of gas warfare.

Economic

The extended effort to create a Special Fund for Economic Development, against the reluctance of major contributors to activate it, is nearing an end. A US proposal will be adopted, possibly unanimously, despite feelings that its effect is indefinite postponement of UN action. The resolution will call on governments to use for development savings from internationally supervised arms cuts.

Also expected is the creation of a missionary unit (Spaak and Santa-Cruz are mentioned) to visit governments and gather their views on how the Fund would operate. Steps toward drafting the Fund's statutes will probably follow.

Ideas put forward include these:

1) Development capital is needed to forestall acceptance of "extremist theories". 2) Capital presently flows mostly to extractive operations, thus confirming or adding to the imbalance in many economies.

3) Stability in raw material prices, and in balance of payments, is a prime need. 4) The "great democratic powers" must prove that economic prosperity is not based on defense expenditures.

5) Economic problems are now global. 6) Loans to the raw material countries would help Europe to sell more hard goods to them. 7) The $250 million needed to launch the Fund is minute compared to arms outlays.

8) In the words of the Netherlands, "Under the present circumstances the free world must remain disposed to resist aggression but, at the same time, we must recognize that in the long run economic development of under-developed countries is a still more positive contribution to the peace and security of this world."

News stories of increasing food output - such as India's record crop - are misleading. Globally, food production has caught up with population growth, says FAO. BUT food output in the Far East has reached only pre-war levels and the population has grown 20%. In Latin America food yields per head are 5% under pre-war. Europe has touched pre-war par and North America is producing 20% per capita more. Seventy per cent of the world's population eats less than the world's average diet.

Qualitatively, the largest food increases are in wheat and corn. Per capita availabilities of many protein foods have dropped. Wheat and corn are in oversupply in terms of the market in some countries. Cotton too. Watch for production cuts. Core fact: price machinery does not move food in needed quantities to large population segments without purchasing power in under-developed countries.

World trade in food is changing sharply under the initial impact of efforts to develop. Spread of industry, mining and commerce increases consumption of domestic food supplies and cuts food exports. The Far East, once a major food exporter, is now a big importer. Food exports from the Far East have fallen two-thirds. Europe, once biggest food customer of the East, now is increasingly dependent on imports from North America. Pre-war, North America food imports and exports balanced; now North America is largest net exporter of food.

A tariff war has been avoided and time gained for the domestic uncertainty over US and UK trade policies to work themselves out. This was the main achievement of the Contracting Parties to GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, at their Geneva meeting now closed.

Politically, the salient fact was the development of anti-preference strength in the debate on a waiver wanted by the UK in favor of certain imports of food items from Commonwealth countries.

Tariff schedules due to expire this yearend have been opened for extension until July 1955. The whole picture will be restudied at the October 1954 meeting. Japan may be dealt with by GATT signatories on GATT terms, and Japan will join GATT working parties. Canada has so accepted Japan.

UNKRA's office at UN HQ is now a field office. The Agency HQ is in Korea. The US has paid in $15 million of the $50.7 million appropriated by Congress for reconstruction for fiscal 1954. Twenty-eight nations have given $85.7 million for aid to Korea since 1950. The US total is $65.7:

Social

The shape of the long-run program the US hopes to see emerge in the human rights field has been revealed to the Assembly. It is intended as a substitute for earlier US support of a covenant to give legal form to the tenets of the Declaration of Human Rights. The 3-part US proposal is well rooted in UN thinking and practice. It is offered as the basis of an action program when the Covenant has been completed.

Included in the suggestion are: 1) an annual review of the status of a single right, such as freedom of religion, for example; 2) annual reports from governments, prepared with the advice of national human rights commissions, on actions taken in the human rights field; 3) extension of the technical assistance program to facilitate human rights through offering fellowships, regional seminars, and expert services to requesting governments for the development of mass media, administrative procedures, organization of interested non-governmental groups, etc.

The effectiveness of DDT is waning. It still has a punch on initial application but evidence is piling up that insects develop resistance to it after repeated use in an area. It now appears that a constant series of substitutes will be needed and these are being sought. This and other problems are currently under study at a WHO symposium in Rome on control of disease-carrying insects.

BRIEFING's private report on UNICEF in action: It was coins and sweets for Hallowe'en trick-or-treat children, not coins instead of sweets as naively predicted by UNICEF officials. Anyway, it worked.

Four programs designed to reduce relief charges on the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East have been activated in the last year. But "it is now clear that the rehabilitation of all the Arab refugees, in existing economic and political circumstances in the Near East, is for all practical purposes impossible".

That's official language for Arab unwillingness to compromise in any way the principle of repatriation of their 875,000 homeless people.

UNWRA's Advisory Commission and directorate recommend to the Assembly extension of the agency through June 1955, additional relief outlays, and an increase to $293 million (from $250 million) for economic rehabilitation.

The Assembly Record

Here is the Eighth Assembly's record so far on plenary actions.

It has: 1) Adopted a concerted program of action in the social field for the UN and the agencies. This recognizes the inter-relation of economic and social development and calls for activities yielding early and permanent results for a maximum number of people. These would give priority to bettering food distribution and dietary practices, strengthening health services and fundamental education, increasing employment opportunities and housing. Techniques specified include community development projects, training programs and development of organizations for administering social programs.

2) Put UNICEF, the Children's Fund, on a permanent basis.

3) Requested the Secretary General to invite non-members who are members of specialized agencies or the Court to accede to Convention on Political Rights of Women. 4) Urged members to take educational and legislative steps to develop political rights of women in territories where full rights are not now enjoyed. 5) Authorized the Secretary General to provide technical assistance in promoting rights of women. 6) Also in prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities.

7) Continued for 5 years the Office and the High Commissioner of Refugees, G. J. van Heuven Goedhart. 8) Asked all nations to aid in solving refugee problem through resettlement, integration and repatriation.

9) Transferred the 1926 Slavery Convention from the League to the UN.

10) Recognized the present shape of technical assistance in public administration by approving new terms of reference with emphasis on regional and national programs instead of the originally conceived International Training Center at UN HQ. Also approved direct expert services, inclusion of program in regular budget, and use of contributed technical assistance funds where requested services are related to economic development.

11) Adopted an 8-part resolution on technical assistance which a) urges governments to support 1954 program financially - at least up to the 1953 goal of $25.3 million - over a period longer than one year where legislatively possible, and to publicize program; b) approves Technical Assistance Board controls on agency expenditures and asks for check on TAB expenses.

12) Reconstituted Negotiating Committee on Extra-Budgetary Funds.

13) Elected as non-permanent members of the Security Council - Brazil, New Zealand, Turkey replacing Greece, Chile and Pakistan. 14) Created a Committee of Good Offices to try to untie the Security Council knot on new members.

15) Elected to Trusteeship Council India and Haiti, replacing Dominican Republic and Thailand with one place remaining to be filled.

16) Extended the life of the UN Tribunal in Libya until 1955 Assembly.

17) Elected to Economic and Social Council Ecuador, Czechoslovakia, Norway and Pakistan, replacing Philippines, Poland, Sweden, Uruguay.

18) Elected 15 individuals to International Law Commission.

19) Amended Assembly rules in hope of shortening Assembly.

Dear Mr. Flood:

Many thanks for your letter about the Radulovich Story. Enclosed is a copy of the script as you requested.

It is very good of you to offer to be of assistance to Lt. Radulovich but I do not think there is anything you can do for him at this time. He already has legal representation, and as far as I know the whole matter now rests with the Air Force which will make its final decision in due course.

Thank you again for your interest.

Mr. Edward R. Morrow,
CBS, Radio - Television,
New York, New York.

Dear Mr. Morrow:

I am not sure that you will recall me, but I have met you upon occasion when I was a member of Congress from the Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, district. When in Congress, I served on the Foreign Affairs Committee and later upon the Appropriations Committee and the Sub-Committee of that Committee for the Departments of State, Justice and Commerce and also on the Sub-Committee for the Armed Services.

My district is in the hard coal fields of Pennsylvania where I was born and raised, and where the vast majority of the people are of the first, second and third generation Slav origin, such as Polish, Ukranian, Czech and Slovak, etc. I mention this merely to indicate to you my lifelong acquaintance with these people and to indicate the basis for my complete shock as to the manner in which the Government is handling the case of the Air Force Officer, Lt. Milo Radulovich.

I address this letter to you, first, to compliment you upon your keen and vigorous analysis of the problem, and to encourage your forthright attack against this unbelievingly supine reaction by the Air Force Board toward this American citizen. I write this, as well, to you so that if, for any reason, you or this young man think I can be of assistance, either legally as his counsel or associate counsel, or if I can serve as a spokesman for him in some way you might think proper, you can consider me at your service. Incidentally, I am not of the Slav origin myself, as my name might indicate, but I'm strictly Irish on both sides all the way back, and I suppose that, among other things, causes me to be incensed when I think the Government is pushing anyone around because of their national origin, or because of the torturing of some theory of security beyond the rule of reason.

To me, it is obvious that the Air Force Board ordered this Lieutenant discharged primarily because of their own feeling that to continue his service in the Army might require them to answer to some Committee or other with respect to their evaluation of the degree that a sister's or a father's political philosophy might conceivably affect a loyal officer in the Air Force, with eight years' service, in the performance of his duty.

Unfortunately, I missed your much talked about broadcast on this matter, and if you would be good enough, I wish you would send me a copy of the broadcast which I will return to you when I read it unless you wish me to keep it.

I have before me a New York Times Editorial on the matter, which refers to comments by several Detroit papers on the same subject.

I have been around a long time, in and out of the Government, but this is, indeed, a black spot on the escutcheon of our Government, and about as medieval a concept as I have ever encountered in many a day.

Very truly yours,

Daniel J. Flood

Television Really Grows Up With Help of Ed Murrow

By MARTIN LEE

For this man Edward R. Murrow we become more and more grateful. Good TV and the good way of life have no abler and more effective champion among those who get paid to appear before the camera and microphone.

Murrow's full-program devotion on last week's "See It Now" to the case of Lt. Milo Radulovich, whom the Air Force unjustly purged because he did not renounce his father and sister, was a combination of reportage, public service and citizenship that made all of us the better and more aware of our responsibilities to our democracy. And Murrow and his competent collaborator Fred Friendly have to share the credits with their sponsor, Alco, for paying for a program of such non-commercial content.

Then there was Murrow's spotlighting on his other TV show, "Person to Person," of the man of the hour, Arthur Godfrey, following the hectic headline clambake the big star had gotten himself into. This was excellent box-office showmanship and fine TV journalism.

Ed Murrow is proving that television can be important, interesting, inspiring and yet be easy to take.

THE JUST-NOTED Arthur Godfrey, by the way, may be seen in his recently-made history of flight documentary, "Flying with Arthur Godfrey," on Channel 2 at 11 this morning.

THE STORY of Willie Pep, the Hartford champ, is being planned as the content of a new TV series.

WHATEVER HAPPENS to the WTIC-Hartford Telecasting rivalry for Channel 3, the idea that WTIC first propounded to have WDRC withdraw its application and then join forces with the Travelers worked like a charm in the case of WONS and WHHT, whose fast merger and subsequent withdrawal of the latter's application quickly brought to Hartford its first TV franchise, Channel 18.

The new company which will run the new UHF telecaster, owned 55% by General Teleradio (the General Tire interests that own WOR-TV in New York, the Yankee network and dominate Mutual) and 45% by The Hartford Times, which must sell its interest in WTHT, undoubtedly has one of the best deals in the UHF field. Much of the area, which has long been awaiting its own TV station, has been spaded by WKNB, the New Britain-based station which has done an excellent job in converting viewers to ultra high frequency.

ABC MAKES some of the best programming news in video. The past week brought the new Gloria De Haven show at 7 Monday-Wednesday-Friday and Lisa Ferraday's celebrity-interview session at the same time Tuesday-Thursday on Channel 7.

Coming up Tuesday night at 9:30 will be the new drama session which will alternate with the "U. S. Steel Hour" in that period. The initial showing in the new series will be a Western, "Outlaw's Reckoning," with Eddie Albert and Wallace Ford.

And Wednesday night at 9 Jean Carroll, a comedienne whose first TV a few years ago gave us good ideas about her, starts a situation comedy series on ABC with Alan Carney and Lynn Loring

HERALD CRIME CASES

By NANCY HENDRICK

No Clues in 22 Years, Murderer Mocks Justice

Not all the murder investigations in which the late State Police Commr. Edward J. Hickey participated during his long career in crime-busting resulted in the arrest and conviction of those guilty of the crimes.

A modest man and a realist, Hickey would have been the first to disclaim the description "infallible" that some of his more enthusiastic admirers tried to pin on him.

He well knew that infallibility is not in the province of mankind. Although Hickey did solve an overwhelming majority of the murder mysteries with which he was confronted, there were one or two homicides that baffled even this super-sleuth.

They say that there is no such thing as a perfect crime. Yet there are Connecticut killers whose crimes may have been imperfect, but who got away with them nevertheless.

BATTERED, SHOT

One of these was the baffling murder of Emil Houle, a 24-year-old Bristol automobile salesman who was killed under mysterious circumstances 22 years ago.

Although his slayer may be alive today and although another person may know that slayer's identity, this case bids fair to go down in Connecticut crime history as unsolved.

Houle's lifeless body was found slumped in a car parked on a lonely road, notorious as a lovers' paradise, at the foot of Johnnycake Mountain in the Leesville section of Bristol, on Thursday morning, Sept. 10, 1931.

He had been battered over the head with a heavy instrument and shot through the heart.

His body was discovered by two youngsters who summoned Bristol police. Hickey, then Hartford county detective, and a detail of officers from the Hartford State Police barracks joined the investigation soon after.

FINDS KNIFE

They conducted a thorough examination of the car and the surrounding territory. Some yards distant a constable picked up a putty knife, the blade of which had been broken.

About 100 yards away the searchers found a .32 caliber Army revolver from which one cartridge had been discharged.

While it was possible that the revolver might have been thrown from the car, its tightly closed doors and windows seemed to eliminate the suicide theory.

Moreover, the bullet had penetrated the heart in such a manner as to make it impossible for Houle to have thrown the gun the distance from the car at which it was found and then to have closed the window and doors of the vehicle.

The car in which Houle's body was found belonged to the auto sales company where he was employed.

The slain man, a French-Canadian, had been working for that firm for several months. His employer had the highest praise for him.

Houle was last seen alive when he left the auto firm at 4:20 P.M. two days before his body was found.

There was no coat on his body and no coat was found in the car, although he was reported to have worn one at the time he left the company's office.

A check of persons who had passed by the murder scene revealed that few had noticed the death car.

The road on which Houle's auto was parked was on the property of a large tract surrounding water holdings of the city of New Britain. A watchman there said he had seen the car on Wednesday.

FARMER SPOTTED CAR

A Burlington farmer came forward to say that he had driven by the spot sometime after nine Tuesday evening and had noticed the car although he paid no attention to it.

He said he didn't think it was strange that the car should be parked at that point because he had gotten used to seeing autos in the lonely sector, especially during warm weather.

As for the car itself, the headlights were turned off and the brakes were set. However, the ignition switch had been left on.

Police theorized that either business jealousy or a quarrel over a woman motivated the slaying.

Houle was not known to be much of a lady's man, although he had been attentive to an 18-year-old girl.

Proceeding first on the theory of business jealousy, Det. Hickey took into custody a fellow employe of Houle.

This person, 21-years-old, who shall be nameless, had a job like Houle's at the same Bristol auto sales company.

The murder suspect was reported to have resented Houle's selling ability.

On that ill-fated Tuesday, both young men had asked for the murder car. Each said he wanted to show the auto to a prospect.

Houle won out over his rival and drove off with the car, never to return alive.

Hickey grilled Houle's business rival, but the latter proclaimed his innocence.

KEY SUSPECT

But his nervousness when taken to the murder scene and his jitters when confronted with the death gun convinced police that they were on the right track.

The suspect, it was soon established, had served a year in jail for stealing cattle. More recently he had been arrested in Terryville on a charge of evading payment of a bill.

He had been hired on probation by the auto firm and his employment was to become permanent only if he made good.

He had not been any too successful selling cars and was openly jealous of Houle's sales ability.

The business jealousy angle was not entirely satisfactory, however. While jealousy and resentment might have given rise to quarrels, they are weak motives for murder.

The possibility that Houle, the suspect and Houle's girl friend constituted a love triangle was explored, but it was soon established that the young woman did not even know the other man.

Was there another woman in Houle's life, another woman who was also sought by Houle's business rival?

Police toyed with this theory as the weeks sped by without a break in the investigation.

Lending weight to the theory was the fact that the murder scene was little used except by amorous couples. Had Houle and the suspect both tried to get the same car to take the same woman to the lonely trysting place at Johnnycake Mountain?

But, although scores of persons were questioned, not one could provide any answers to these interesting questions.

Nor could Houle's grief-stricken family in Canada furnish any clues although Harrison Hotchkiss, veteran investigator in the Hartford County state's attorney's office, went to Canada to interview them.

Nor was Hotchkiss any more successful in determining ownership of the death gun North of the border. A similar effort at finding the gun's owner had been unsuccessful in Connecticut.

By this time the suspect who had been so nervous when first arrested, had regained his composure. He insisted that he was innocent and maintained his calm under repeated grilling.

The authorities finally decided they were detaining the wrong man and let the suspect go.

His conduct, after his release, did nothing to rearouse their suspicions.

The 18-year-old beauty whom Houle had been dating was completely cleared, too.

She readily admitted she had been going out frequently with Houle, but maintained that she had not seen him since the day before his death.

As far as she knew, she said, she was the only woman in Hou she was the only woman in Houle's life.

SEEK 'OTHER WOMAN'

But the more the police pondered, the more they were inclined to believe that there had been another woman in whom the 24-year-old salesman had been interested.

This interest, they concluded, was of a far more passionate and clandestine nature than his interest in the 18-year-old lass whom he had planned to marry.

That the "other woman" was married, or else deeply committed elsewhere, also entered into the authorities' speculations. They theorized that the husband or jilted lover had followed Houle and the woman to their rustic trysting place and surprised them there.

But if there was another woman who held the key to the Houle murder mystery, she never came forward to unlock the door to its solution.

RHEUMATISM

Normally, all joints of the body are well lubricated.

In Rheumatism the inflammation in the joints affects the lubricating fluid which in turn causes the patient to suffer pain. The amount of pain depends upon the extent of the inflammation.

A pressure on a nerve trunk at the spine interferes with the nerve supply to the membrane of the inflamed joint.

When infected teeth, tonsils, sinuses, gall bladder, etc., send poisons through the body the poisons naturally affect the joints already weakened by low resistance due to nerve impingements.

We locate the source of this nerve pressure with an X-ray machine and with a sensitive nerve instrument. When located we correct the CAUSE.

Mr. M.

Mr. Murrow, I have some thoughts regarding your telecast of October 20, which I would appreciate your giving some thought to. I would further very much appreciate your thoughts also in answer to my questions.

With the "influx" of cummunistic thinking in the United States, we need probably more than anything else democratic discussions among the citizens. Discussions of such important subjects as you dramatized on your television show of October 20. If this was the prime motive behind this telecast, then, Mr. Murrow, you succeeded.

However, only a certain percentage of your audience are of the type inclined to discuss or debate the issues involved...particularly in the way you basically presented the issue — one-sidedly. Your ability of analyzeing this incident, and others, is beyond question. Very few of your viewers ever consider your opinions as opposed to theirs. You form their opinions for them.

Now for my opinions — and see if you agree.

The loyalty of the Air Force officer was not questionned. But the loyalty of his sister and father were. No man can be purged by his association with others as you and others pointed out. Webster says about the word "purge", "A ridding, as of a nation or party, of elements or members regarded as treacherous, disloyal, or suspect." The Air Force did not ask this man to resign his position because of any of these elements. He was asked to resign because of his immediate family's tendencies which could conceivably place undue pressure on him.

The sister and father in this case were not being proved as disloyal. The case in point is whether or not a man could be forced to resign from the service because of his associations with others. From the officer's own words one can realize how close blood ties are — or could be. He is not being questionned as to his present activities being detrimental to the security of the nation. But being in the service, and because of his close relationships with doubtful individuals, he could conceivably be placed in a situation where he would be "forced" to act against the security of the country. For this reason, he is as the Air Force stated, "A Security Risk". I repeat — RISK.

I think you will agree with me, Mr. Murrow, that the case is a debatable one. And that certainly it could be argued for hours on end with no agreement.

It is because of this fact alone that I take point with you on your handling of the telecast. First of all, a mass medium such as television does not reach only those persons interested and informed enough to make their own decisions on such a case. Secondly, you as a respected, renown, loyal American news analyst can too easily actually form impressions and develope ideas. I'm afraid your handling of this situation did not stimulate discussion, but decisevly formed opinions without the viewers' objective thinking.

I realize your lack of time during a busy day to answer every letter pertaining to your television shows. However, being a little selfish, I would appreciate your thoughts in answer to this letter.

Sincerely,

Dear Ed:

A few months ago at the party the Streets gave for Ferdie and Delia Kuhn, you were saying that you weren't entirely happy with TV, that there were so many things that didn't lend themselves to pictorial treatment that you wanted to go into.

That may be so, but we have just seen The Case of Milo Radulovich, and it is a little difficult to understand your frustration. Your are to be envied at being able to do what you have done--and having a sponsor that would let you do it. There must certainly be thousands of newspapermen who saw that tonight who are absolutely green with envy.

But beyond that, they are deeply grateful for the blow you have struck for real reporting, and for decency, and for the standards of fair play and elemental justice.

It was deeply moving. There sure is a hell of a lot of life in Angle-Saxon law and the American Constitution --even enough to make a TV program out of. I am sure that the spirits of Milton and Vayne and Wise and Hooker are resting easier tonight. As for T.J. he must be fair beside himself.

Dear Messrs.Friendly

That much belabored phrase "in the public interest" was never so much deserved as in the case of your Radoulovich presentation tonight. It would be a gross oversight to neglect saying so when TV does something uniquely its own, considering how often it is abused for floundering.

As good as the content was, it wouldn't have meant nearly so much had not the presentation been as good as it was. I wish I had public space to say so: since I don't, the least I could offer is one small letter on this side to balance the many others you will doubtless get on the other side.

Dear Ed,

That was a fine job of reporting you and Fred Friendly did on the Radulovich case. This whole mess has needed an airing for a long time, and it did not surprise me in the least that it was Murrow who came up with a treatment equal to the gravity of the issue. Here in Washington, the whole affair was handled as straight spot news and after the first break, was relegated to the inside pages of the local papers — even the Washington Post.

Congratulations again for the excellent show, and my very best wishes for your continued success.

Dear Mr Murrow:-

Several times I have told your wife how deeply I appreciate the value of the liberal influence you are exerting on public opinion by the vividly documented and humanly understanding quality of your TV and radio programs. But after watching the story of this accused air force boy deprived of his personal reputation because of family loyalty and with no chance to see the incriminating evidence, all placed before our minds and eyes in unescapable focus, I feel that I want to say a direct "Thank you" to you.

It is a relaxation and a relief to see fearless truth placed before one lucidly now in this time when our basic freedoms are under strain not really, I believe, from the outer enemy but from the more insidious foes within of fear and self concern and the obsessions they tend to fasten upon the public mind.

Please continue your heavy doses of sanity and kindly yet factual reporting. We need them crucially. Also please give yourself time to relax among our lovely hills of home from what must be a terrifically heavy program of preparation to administer the above doses!

With best wishes and renewed thanks to both you and "Janet"

TALBOTT'S STATEMENT

Secretary of the Air Force Harold E. Talbott released the following statement today concerning the case of First Lt. Milo J. Radulovich:

As Secretary of the Air Force it is my sworn duty to uphold and to protect the security of the United States. I am also keenly aware of my responsibility to protect the individual rights and privileges of each man and woman in the United States Air Force. The preservation of our American way of life requires that we must be alert to safeguard our individual liberties.

I have given the case of First Lt. Milo J. Radulovich the most serious consideration. I have decided that it is consistent with the interests of the national security to retain Lt. Radulovich in the United States Air Force Reserve. He is not, in my opinion, a security risk.

Routine investigation has produced certain information which raised a real question as to whether Lt. Radulovich was a security risk as an Air Force Officer. This information related not to Lt. Radulovich's own activities and views such as to those of other individuals with whom Lt. Radulovich appeared to be closely associated. It led an Air Force board to question whether Lt. Radulovich should be retained in the Air Force Reserve.

The policy of the Department of the Air Force is not to discharge any officer or airman as a security risk without giving him notice of the derrogatory information in the Air Force's possession and a full opportunity to present his own case in justification of his retention in the Air Force. In the course of the hearing, Lt. Radulovich testified at length concerning his relationship with his sister. He did not attempt to explain or justify her reported activities, but he maintained that he would not be influenced by them. Lt. Radulovich is a mature officer with a family of his own. He served honorably and well for 14 months as an airman, and 6 years as an officer on active duty with the Air Force. After reviewing the entire record in this case, I am convinced that, under the circumstances, the nature of Lt. Radulovich's association with his sister is not such as to make her activities and beliefs the determining factor in this case. I am also convinced that the record does not support the conclusion that Lt. Radulovich's father has engaged in activities of such a type as to bear upon the decision in this case.

The question raised as to security has thus been resolved in Lt. Radulovich's favor. I have therefore directed that Lt. Radulovich be retained in his present status in the United States Air Force.

1. Have you reached a decision in the case of Lt. Milo Radulovich?

Yes, I have, Mr. Murrow. As you know, the Selfridge Air Force Base Board found that on all the evidence in this case there was reasonable doubt that Lt. Radulovich was a good security risk. The Board recommended that his commission in the United States Air Force Reserve be terminated. The Commanding General of the Continental Air Command reviewed this case. So did the Air Force Personnel Council here in Washington. They concurred in the original finding and recommendation. The Judge Advocate General of the Air Force then reviewed the case. He found that Lt. Radulovich had been accorded all of his legal rights during the hearing and processing of this case. I personally reviewed this case very thoroughly. As I would in all cases of this nature, I made a careful study of the investigative files, the transcript of the hearings, and the opinions and recommendations of the reviewing officers. After full deliberation I have directed that Lt. Radulovich's Reserve commission be terminated.

2. Did the various boards of review have information regarding the Lieutenant, his sister, and his father that was not made available to the Lieutenant or to his lawyers?

Yes.

3. Why was that information kept secret?

Certain information must be kept secret. The President himself has so directed. I am sure the American people demand it. To do otherwise would invite double disaster.

(1) We would have been so stupid as to tell the enemy exactly how and where we have penetrated his operations.

(2) We would have jeopardized the source. In the Communist conspiracy this may mean death.

4. Could you give us one or two examples of similar cases where a man's relationship with the Air Force has been terminated because of the political activities or beliefs of members of his family or associates?

The Air Force has never terminated anyone for that reason alone. We must know how dangerous were the activities of the man's associates - how close was the relationship - how great the opportunity for pressures. As a matter of fact, in the majority of such cases which have gone to hearing we have cleared the individual and retained him in the service. I prefer not to discuss any other specific cases. We do not and will not publicize the identity of individuals in such proceedings. If publicity is given as in this case, it is by the choice of the individual himself. As long as I am Secretary it will be the policy of the Air Force to handle these cases in the American way which will protect the privacy, privileges, and dignity of the individual to the greatest extent possible.

5. What is the basic document or regulation under which these actions are taken?

Air Force Regulation 35-62 has been issued in accord with the Armed Forces Reserve Act of 1952. The provisions of this Regulation are in full agreement with the Executive Orders of two Presidents and Department of Defense directives. Actually under the Armed Forces Reserve

Act we have authority, on recommendation of a Board of Officers, summarily to dismiss without a hearing where required in the national interest.

6. Why did the Air Force grant Lt. Radulovich a hearing with counsel when under the existing law such a hearing was not mandatory?

As I said before, we have authority to terminate a man's Reserve commission without notice of charges or opportunity for defense. We do not choose to do it that way.

7. Now perhaps you would explain to us the difference between a loyalty risk and a security risk?

The question of loyalty addresses itself to a man's allegiance, devotion, and attachment to his country. Disloyalty carries with it overtones of treason. The security risk question is entirely different. The single issue there is can the Government, on behalf of the people of this nation, entrust with confidence a particular individual with national secrets. For example, the Government cannot have complete confidence in a man who talks too much, drinks to excess, is a sexual pervert, or even mentally unbalanced. Obviously the Government can have no confidence in a man who is active in the Communist cause. The Government dare not trust with its secrets the man who regardless of motive may be subject to coercion, influence, or pressure which may cause him to act contrary to the best interests of national security.

8. May I ask, Mr. Talbott, why do you consider a man who has relatives or close associates active in the Communist organization to be a security risk?

As I said before, that in itself is not enough. In addition, the overall circumstances present must indicate that because of this association the man might unwittingly or because of pressure, coercion, or influence give away secret information. To show you how the Communist Party itself takes advantage of such relationships, I would like to quote from a booklet entitled "Whom and How to Recruit," published by the Communist Party. Whom does it tell them to recruit first? Let me quote. "You have relatives, those in your immediate family...Start the list with the people you know best, your relatives..." And, Mr. Murrow, the Party considered this technique so effective that it issued a later pamphlet which I hold in my hand called "Party Building." These instructions not only require recruitment of relatives but they describe members of the family - and I quote - "The first line of reserves" of the Party. You may ask does this work? Is it effective? I am sure the people of this country will not soon forget how effective this technique can be when they remember the case of Sergeant David Greenglass. Greenglass was considered a loyal American. His associates so testified. He had access to sensitive military information. His sister brought influence to bear upon him and converted him to her way of thinking. Today he is serving a 20-year term for espionage. His sister was Ethel Rosenberg. She has been executed as an atomic spy.

9. Are you personally convinced, after studying the complete file, that a representative group of civilian lawyers, conscious of the requirements of national security, would have judged Lt. Radulovich to be a security risk?

Yes, I do believe so. I cannot put myself in another man's mind but I believe that they would find as we did. I would like to point out, however, that such an informal body has the power of judgment but not the burden of responsibility. I, on the other hand, have been appointed by the President as Secretary of the United States Air Force. As such, it is not only my duty to exercise my best judgment in this case and make a just decision, it is also my responsibility to protect the security of the United States.

10. Would you care to make any general comments on this basic problem which, as I see it, is a conflict between national security and personal freedom?

Mr. Murrow, I agree that elements of conflict certainly appear to be involved in this entire situation. There are, of course, difficulties in attempting to maintain maximum security in the nation and on the other hand protecting the personal rights of all individuals who may be concerned. We certainly do not want to accomplish total security to the detriment of the individual. To do so, would turn America into a totalitarian state - with the state the master of the people. The totalitarian state demands security at any cost - even the destruction of human dignity. Problems involving national security are problems of all the people. They will demand, as they should, that these problems be solved in the best traditions of our nation. This is exactly what the Air Force is trying its best to do. I am personally concerned and will continue to be concerned with the problem of conflict in this situation. We must insure that on a day to day basis the Air Force, charged with a major share of the protection of our nation, be internally secure. This security must not, however, result at the expense of the rights and reputations of our people. If we follow this significant American approach, we will successfully defend against external and internal threats to our nation and at the same time preserve our cherished democratic traditions.

We didn't really expect bouquets from any of our competitors so this makes your note all the more delightful.

Best regards.

Sincerely yours,

INDIANAPOLIS CIVIL LIBERTIES DISPUTE

AN ARGUMENT IN INDIANAPOLIS

NOVEMBER 24, 1953

EDWARD R. MURROW: This next report we call "the argument in Indianapolis." There was considerable argument there last week between the American Legion and a group of people who wanted to start a local chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. This report was all filmed in a period of five days, and all the arguments will be presented by the people who actually participated. Our reporters: Joe Wershba and Ed Scott; our cameramen: Charlie Mack and Marty Barnett.

That shaft is an Indiana landmark—a memorial to those who died in the war between the states. Located at almost the exact center of the state of Indiana, three blocks north of here, is a memorial to the dead of World War I. This is the Indiana World War Memorial. It has an auditorium that seats five hundred and forty. In the last part of October, a group of Indiana citizens booked the auditorium for the night of November 20, for a meeting to form an Indianapolis chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. On November 16, four days before the meeting, the reservation was canceled by the auditorium management. W. Roland Allen, a department-store executive, begins the story for us.

W. ROLAND ALLEN: On the sixteenth of October, a group of sixty or seventy fine men and women—professors from Indiana University and Purdue University, physicians, lawyers, housewives, and other good folk—got together in a local hotel here to decide whether or not it would be wise to form an American Civil Liberties unit here in Indiana. Some very simple committees were set up, one of which was to find a place to speak in. A few weeks later, we all got a notice that a room had been secured at the Indiana War Memorial, a vast and huge building, erected in memory of the men who died in World War I—incidentally, fighting, we think, for civil liberties.

We had the East Room of that building, and felt secure in immediately sending out notices to several hundred people of the time and place of the meeting. A few days before that meeting was scheduled, we heard to our surprise that the hall had been disallowed our group as a result of a protest from the American Legion and the Minute Women, a group, by the way, that I personally had never heard of before.

And so the old American problem of controversy came up; and many people mistook controversy for conspiracy.

MURROW: Next, Wershba went to F. J. "Star" Brown, manager of the War Memorial, and asked why permission to use the auditorium had been withdrawn.

F. J. "STAR" BROWN: When the American Civil Liberties Union applied to me to have a meeting, their local representatives in Indianapolis, as far as I knew, were very reputable people, representing business and learning in Indiana. So I granted them the privilege of setting the date for this meeting. After two weeks, I began to get letters from various groups, including the American Legion, the Minute Women of Indiana, and others. Realizing that this meeting must be of a controversial nature, which are not agreeable to the rules and regulations that govern the use of this Indiana World War Memorial, I thereupon canceled the meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union.

WERSHBA: Tell me, did you ever find out who these Minute Women of Indiana are?

BROWN: I do not know anything about the Minute Women of Indiana. There is an organization of Minute Women, but I don't know about them.

MURROW: This is 3650 Washington Boulevard, the home of one of Indianapolis' Minute Women. This is Miss Marguerite Dice, a past officer of the organization, who stated that she does not speak officially for the Minute Women but does not feel her statement contravenes their policy.

MISS MARGUERITE DICE: It has been said in the course of this dispute that the War Memorial Building was erected for the men who died in the last world war. That is not the whole truth. It was erected in memory of those men who gave their lives for the protection and preservation of the principles on which this country was founded. The inscriptions in it and outside of it bear witness to this. What a travesty it would be to open its doors for a meeting to which Communists are welcome, when we know the open and avowed purpose of such is to overthrow our government by force and violence, as well as by infiltration.

MURROW: The heaviest objections came from the American Legion. This is Indiana State Commander Roy M. Amos.

AMERICAN LEGION COMMANDER ROY M. AMOS: The American Legion can never agree that the Indiana War Memorial is a fitting place for a meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union. The Memorial is hallowed ground. It is a shrine sacred to the memory of thousands of gallant Hoosier patriots, many of whom died in Korea fighting Communism. As such, it must never be used as a sounding board for the advocacy of any policy of pampering Communists to the virtual exclusion of all others.

MURROW: The decision that the War Memorial could not be used was announced on Monday. On Tuesday, the Civil Liberties people called the Claypool Hotel. A clerk told them the Chateau Room was available. Shortly after that, it was discovered that it had been previously booked. Then, the American Civil Liberties Union called the Continental Hotel on North Meridian Street—after that, the Riddick Piano Company, which has a large studio that is generally for rent. Next, the Civil Liberties Union went to the Public Library and asked for their auditorium. After that, the Indianapolis YMCA. All of these places reported that they were either previously booked or for other various reasons unavailable for the Friday-night meeting. Wednesday, the American Civil Liberties Union went to the Knights of Columbus on North Delaware Street and were offered their hall. A price of fifty dollars was agreed upon. But that night, the Knights of Columbus auditorium was withdrawn. We asked Grand Knight Donald Latendresse why.

GRAND KNIGHT DONALD LATENDRESSE: We seem to have gotten involved in the midst of a situation we had no desire to become involved in. We had been approached as to renting our hall to the American Civil Liberties Union, and at first thought could see no reason why it wouldn't be all right. However, upon further investigation, we find that it was a controversial issue, and since we—our membership is comprised of some fifteen hundred who have various views on different things—we felt that we didn't want to become involved in a controversial affair which might lead to internal strife in our organization. We felt that, since the issue was controversial, that we should remain in the middle. However, it seems that you can't remain in the middle in a situation such as this. The very fact that we were approached by the organization to rent the hall put us in the middle, because if we refused, we were taking sides; and if we accepted, we were taking sides.

MURROW: Of the three newspapers, two ran editorials. The Times, a Scripps-Howard publication, opposed the Legion's ban, and stated that liberty belongs to everyone or to no one. The Indianapolis Star, also Republican, said the Legion had a right to oppose the views of the American Civil Liberties Union, but had no right to prevent their meeting.

Four churches were approached. None was available for the Friday night meeting. Then, less than two days before the meeting, an auditorium was finally offered. This is the corner of Vermont and New Jersey streets, just a few blocks east of the War Memorial Building. Victor L. Goosens, pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, offered them his church's social center. It was accepted. We asked Father Goosens why he had interested himself in the controversy.

FATHER VICTOR L. GOOSENS: Well, I suppose you could say that it was in rather a casual way that I became involved. The request was simply brought to my attention that the American Civil Liberties Union was rather anxious to find a place to meet, and the idea was put forward that perhaps they might be interested in using our auditorium; and of course, I was perfectly willing to let them have it, even though they had been denied the use of several other auditoriums, for the simple reason that I had no reason to believe them unfit or unworthy for the use of our premises. And so, as the controversy developed, I found that it was not only a situation in which we ought to actually let them use it, but that we really should insist that they be given a place to meet, for the simple reason that it seems to me that there is something much more basic involved here than merely the idea of a meeting place.

We have to be very careful, of course, to recognize the rights of minorities. You know, we all of us at some time or other are going to find ourselves in a minority group. Perhaps it might be politically, or it might be religiously, or it might just be a minority group on some other question—but we are going to find that we are at some time or other in a minority, and it is possible for any group outside of the legally constituted branches of government to restrain another from peaceful assembly and from the right to express themselves freely. Then, all our liberties are in danger, and I feel this way about it: that if an organization, no matter how well-intentioned it might be in its purposes —if one organization can prevent another group of people who are not traitorous, who are not subversive, from gathering together in peaceful assembly to discuss and to speak freely, then what guarantee would there be that, later on, another group might not decide that when I or my people gather together for purposes of worship or the exercise of freedom of religion, that we should be stopped?

MURROW: The meeting was held on Friday night; but, that same night, the Indiana Department of the American Legion held an executive session. Part of their business was to protest the Civil Liberties Union meeting.

At virtually the same moment, in the meeting hall of St. Mary's, three blocks from the church, Professor Ralph F. Fuchs, of the Indiana University Law School, was calling to order the first meeting of the Indianapolis chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. Because these two meetings, running simultaneously, so paralleled each other in subject and debate, we have chosen to present them as we have in political debates, with each side answering the other.

LEGIONNAIRE: You are assembled here tonight to receive information on a new development on the "red firing line" in Indiana.

PAUL CLAY [AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION]: I don't like to be told that anybody can't have a meeting. It gets my Irish up.

LEGIONNAIRE [PRIEST]: Mr. Commander, members of the executive committee. The fact that the meeting of the A.C.L.U. is being held in the social center of a Catholic Church does not constitute an endorsement of the American Civil Liberties Union by the Catholic Church. The use of the hall for the meeting was granted on the grounds that the organization had not yet been declared subversive by the Attorney General, and I hold with the American Legion that every effort should be made to expose any and all who are attempting to spread subversive propaganda.

W. ROLAND ALLEN: This week's adventures in our community remind me of the old American habit of answering a man who says he wants to talk. We say, "Well, why don't you go hire a hall?" This week we found ourselves having great difficulty in carrying out that old American habit. But those who understand the spiritual purpose and the constitutional purpose of the American Civil Liberties Union are not going to be afraid. This is no time to be afraid.

LEGIONNAIRE: The issue is the alerting of the people of Indiana to the fact that there is being established in Indiana a chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. This is an organization that is parading its avowed purposes of protecting the civil rights of individuals. With such a purpose the American Legion can never quarrel. The American Legion itself is a civil-liberties organization, because it has repeatedly gone to the defense of veterans whose constitutional rights were threatened or invaded.

MERLE MILLER [ATTORNEY, A.C.L.U.]: I first heard of the American Civil Liberties Union about twenty years ago, but I heard of it from a Supreme Court Judge of this state, a conservative old Republican, and I have come to realize that a true conservative and a true liberal will find themselves side by side protecting the civil rights of their fellow men. For the true meaning of the word "conservative" means that you wish to conserve the best of the past, and pass it on the way you got it. A true liberal means a tolerance for the convictions of others and a willingness to hear them out. And so in civil liberties we find strange folks side by side who disagree on anything with everybody except on the right of those who disagree with them to be heard.

LEGIONNAIRE: The Indiana Department of the American Legion, with documentary evidence at hand of the facts that the speaker for the meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union has subscribed to, and been a member of, organizations listed as subversive, took the stand that the Indiana War Memorial dedicated to the memory of our war dead should not be used as a sounding board for his philosophy or policy.

PROFESSOR RALPH FUCHS [A.C.L.U.]: I take great pleasure in presenting Mr. Arthur Garfield Hays of New York, general counsel to the American Civil Liberties Union.

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS: There is only one thing that I know of on which President Eisenhower and ex-President Truman seem to agree, and that is on the good work done by the American Civil Liberties Union. President Eisenhower made the following statement in connection with a dinner honoring ten Civil Liberties organizations: "I am sure the people of the United States join in honoring the work of the distinguished private agencies which are doing so much to guard civil rights and to advance human rights in our nation." Since I understand the American Legion doesn't fully agree, I want to quote from what Douglas MacArthur said on December 30, 1949. Roger Baldwin is the man attacked today by the head of the Legion here. MacArthur said: "Roger Baldwin's crusade for civil liberties has had a profound and beneficial influence upon the course of American progress. With countless individuals finding protection in the nobility of the cause he has long espoused, he stands out as one of the architects of our cherished American way of life."

LEGIONNAIRE: Mr. Commander, in my hand I have a clipping taken from The Nation magazine of June 28, 1952. This clipping is an advertisement of the American Civil Liberties Union, which asks the reader to join with them in fighting the Smith and McCarran Act. I believe that any organization that would advertise such a fact cannot have the interest of the United States at heart. And I think Commander Amos is right in exposing them in Indiana.

HAYS: And not ten per cent of our time has had to do with Communists. As I said during my talk, what worries us chiefly is the fact that the non-Communists are the people who suffer. And what is the matter with a controversial subject? Controversy is as American as the Rocky Mountains or the Fourth of July.

LEGIONNAIRE: I understand that the American Civil Liberties Union has gone to the defense of Harry Bridges. According to all the information I have ever had on the matter, Harry Bridges is the head of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, which was expelled from the National C.I.O. in 1949 for following the Communist Party line. The United States Government has sought the deportation of Bridges on the ground that he is a subversive alien and obtained his citizenship under fraudulent conditions. An organization which gives aid and comfort to anyone such as Bridges does not belong in Indiana.

LEWIS GREENBERG [ATTORNEY]: I think that they are pretty sacred to our concept of civilization—is that we say to one another: "Let us agree to disagree agreeably." So far as I am concerned, the views of the extremists, whether from the right or the left, are rather obnoxious; but I feel that when they are met in the court of public opinion, with trial and error, with freedom to express, and to nail the lies, that freedom and truth will become victors.

DR. NORMAN BOHER [AMERICAN LEGION]: Mr. Commander, fellow members of this executive committee: Having full faith in and of the facts we each possess, as working Legionnaires of the Department of Indiana, I move you that this executive committee approve the action taken by our Commander and this Department in this matter involving the A.C.L.U. and I move and propose that we make this action unanimous.

ORIN NAILAN [LEGIONNAIRE]: Mr. Commander—I, Orin Nailan, of the Ninth District, school-supplies salesman, take great pleasure in seconding this motion.

AMOS: Gentlemen, you have all heard the motion as it has been made and duly seconded. Is there any question on the motion?

Any discussion? All those in favor of the motion as made, vote by the usual voting sign of Aye.

CHORUS: Aye.

AMOS: Contrary: no. It's been duly carried. Thank you so much.

MURROW: The Legion had its say and its resolution, and the Civil Liberties Union had their meeting. Indianapolis is still there and the controversy is everywhere. Now, Father Goosens again.

FATHER GOOSENS: Well, the fact that there was more excitement made me that much more concerned, because it proved to me, in a way, that the time had come when we had to take a stand on this. When the climate is such that so many people are so quick to take the law into their own hands, or rather, I should say, perhaps, to ignore the law and to deny to others the right to peaceful assembly and free speech—then somebody certainly has to take a stand on the subject and prove to them that they are, in their activities, actually un-American in their way of procedure. And it's up to us, I think, to lead the way, because we know that the freedoms—the American freedoms—are all based upon the rights which God has given us. And if the church and religion do not uphold those basic principles which come from God, then who will?

MURROW: That was the argument in Indianapolis last week. Good night and good luck.

"CITIZENS FIRST" VETERANS GROUP MARKS TENTH ANNIVERSARY AT CONVENTION

WASHINGTON,D.C., November 28 — The American Veterans Committee (AVC), the veterans organization whose slogan is "Citzens First, Veterans Second", will hold its national convention in Atlantic City, N.J., on December 4,5, and 6.

Hundreds of veterans from all parts of the United States will gather at the President Hotel for the convention which marks the tenth anniversary of the founding of the unique veterans organization in 1943.

AVC has been known for its opposition to special privileges for veterans and for its support of civil rights, civil liberties, and international cooperation. In these respects, it has generally differed with older veterans groups such as the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The Atlantic City convention will open Friday evening, December 4, with policy committee sessions, followed by plenary sessions on Saturday for the adoption of platform and resolutions. The Convention Banquet on Saturday evening will hear addresses by Congressman Charles Howell of New Jersey and Congressman Richard Bolling of Missouri, as well as from past national chairman Charles G. Bolte, author of "The New Veteran", Gilbert A. Harrison, publisher of the New Republic magazine; and Robert R. Nathan, prominent economist. Richard Meyner, Governor-elect of New Jersey, will also speak to the delegates. At its Sunday session, the convention will elect new national officers.

Convention Chairman is Michael Straight. Serving with him on the convention arrangements committee are: Irving M. Engel, Cong. F.D.Roosevelt,Jr., Bill Mauldin, Senator Paul M. Douglas, Thorton N. Wilder, Ronald Reagan and Gov. C. Mennen Williams, and others.

November 28, 1953

BACKGROUND INFORMATION ON AMERICAN VETERANS COMMITTEE

The American Veterans Committee, a new kind of veterans organization, grew out of correspondence among a group of fighting men in World War II.

Gilbert Harrison, a native of Los Angeles, California, who was then a corporal in the infantry, had started the ball rolling by writing a letter to about 35 people in 1943. This group developed into a committee of correspondence which numbered about 150 in 1944, and was organized formally as AVC in April of that year.

From the first - and unlike all other veterans groups - AVC has been devoted to its motto of "Citizens First -Veterans Second." AVC recognizes that the great mass of American soldiers, are basically, citizens in uniform, and when they shed their uniforms they become citizens again.

AVC believes that patriotism consists of working for an expansion of democratic freedoms within the United States, active U.S. participation in the creation of a free and peaceful world, and development of a realistic veterans program. It has vigorously opposed Communism and fascism.

OPPOSES BONUS RAIDS ON TREASURY

One of AVC's first achievement was helping to write the G.I. Bill of Rights. Then, because it opposes raids on the U.S. Treasury by veterans or by any other special groups, AVC led the successful battle against the adoption of the Rankin bonus proposals.

(more)

The organization believes in rightful benefits for veterans to (1) help them make up for time lost in service; and (2) provide proper and decent assistance for war-disabled veterans and for the families of disabled or those killed on the battlefields. But with the U.S. veteran population growing ever larger, it regards general pensions and bonuses as false panaceas that can endanger the nation's financial stability.

Instead, AVC has actively supported extending the coverage and increasing the benefits of Social Security for all citizens. AVC also has backed the Hoover Commission recommendations for reforming the Veterans Administration.

Recently, it formed a Veterans Benefits Reappraisal Commission to re-examine the entire hodge-podge of existing veterans legislation and to bring in recommendations for a reasonable program designed to fit the needs of the constantly expanding number of veterans.

WORLD OUTLOOK

AVC's interest in the United Nations goes back to its inception. The young veterans group was represented at the creation of the UN at San Francisco, with Gilbert Harrison serving on the American party that accompanied Secretary of State Stettinius. Since that time, the veterans group has worked to support and strengthen the UN.

A major role was played by the AVC in the formation of the World Veterans Federation, created in 1950 and today representing 17 million veterans in 22 countries. The WVF, which has just completed its Fourth General Assembly at The Hague, is dedicated to "peace with freedom" and carries on an extensive program in the field of rehabilitation of disabled veterans.

PRACTICES DEMOCRACY

AVC has given more than lip service to democracy. All its chapters are non-segregated, including those in the deep South. It has supported civil rights legislation, FEPC, anti-lynching, anti-poll tax, and anti-segregation legislation. It has vigorously attacked Senator Joseph McCarthy for his "guilt by accusation" tactics.

(mOre)

'Cleaned House' by Democratic Means

The organization ridded itself of communists and fascists by democratic methods: hearings were held to determine whether certain individuals could, in view of their records, honestly subscribe to the AVC's Statement of Intentions. Many could not, and were banned from the organization. The decisions of these hearings were appealed to the state courts and AVC was upheld in the dismissals. Few, if any, other organizations, have accomplished this signal victory by democratic means. Today, AVC's constitution prohibits membership of fascists and communists..

In the early post-war years, AVC spearheaded the long-running fight to hold the line on rent and price controls. An AVC sponsored housing conference in Washington rallied public support behind the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill. AVC opposed the Taft-Hartley Act.

On the international front, AVC has supported the Marshall Plan, the North Atlantic Treaty, international control of atomic energy, the Point Four Program and world federalism. The organization strongly backed UN resistance to Communist aggression in Korea.

Prepared 'CREDO' for PUBLIC EMPLOYEES

AVC has called repeatedly for higher standards among public officials and has prepared the "Credo of a Public Servant" to serve as a "Hippocratic Oath" for elected, appointed and merit system public servants.

AVC members represent all facets of American life. They include such men as President Eisenhower, Senator Paul Douglas, Congressmen Jacob K. Javits, Richard Bolling, Barratt O'Hara, and Franklin D. Roosevelt,Jr., Governor G. Mennen Williams of Michigan; Robert R. Nathan, economist, Bill Mauldin, cartoonist, E.J. Kahn,Jr. New Yorker writer, Ronald Reagan, actor; and many others.

National chairmen have been Charles Bolte in 1946, Chat Paterson in 1947, Gilbert Harrison in 1948 and Michael Straight from 1949 to 1952. The current National Chairman is Curtis Campaigne, Jr., Montclair, N.J. attorney, who has just been appointed Executive Director of the World Veterans Fund, financial arm of the World Veterans Federation.

Objectives of AVC are best stated in the preamble to its constitution:

"We, as veterans of the Second World War, the Korean Conflict, and World War I, associate ourselves regardless of national origin, creed or color for the following purposes:

"To preserve the Constitution of the United States; to insure the rights of free speech, free press, free worship, free assembly, and free elections; to provide through social and economic security to all; to maintain full production and full employment in our country under a system of private enterprise in which business, labor, agriculture and government cooperate; to promote peace and good will among all nations and all peoples; to support active participation of this Nation in the United Nations and other world organizations whose purposes are to improve the cultural, commercial and social relations of all peoples; to provide such aid to disabled veterans as will enable them to maintain the position in society to which they are entitled; to provide such financial, medical, vocational, and educational assistance to all veterans as is necessary for complete readjustment to civilian life; to resist and defeat all attempts to create strife between veterans and non-veterans; and to foster democracy. We dedicate ourselves to these aims, and for their attainment establish this constitution."

December 18, 1953

Dear Commander Brewer:

Thank you for your letter of November 30. I regret that your Legion post feels that we departed from the practice of objectivity in our report on Indianapolis. The editing of film on a report of this kind is exceedingly difficult and I can only say that we did not consciously do violence to the truth. You may be interested to know that the rather considerable volume of mail we received as a result of this program did not reflect the criticisms contained in your letter.

No one is more aware than I am of the difficulties involved in presenting a picture of a local situation which will be factual and balanced in all respects. We tried. I assume your final question is rhetorical. As a reporter, I am not obligated to choose between the Legion and the ACLU. I have many friends in both organizations and I am disposed to think both serve a useful function, but in this particular case, my duty as I see it was to present as accurately as I could the positions taken by the two organizations. This we tried to do and I am sorry you think we failed.

I would much rather be called objective than brilliant or successful, and I hope that subsequent programs may do something to restore your obviously diminished confidence in my objectivity.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow

New York City, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Our Legion Post was quite disturbed over your program last Tuesday night. On several occasions many of us have been informed "listen to Edward R. Murrow, he's objective." But after viewing your Indianapolis report it gives us cause to wonder.

Far from being factual, your report seemed to be slanted and sprinkled with innuendos apparently designed to influence public reaction. You made it appear that Indianapolis would countenance a "town hall meeting" only under duress.

You injected politics into the issue when really politics were not involved.

You distorted the position taken by the Indianapolis Times by calling it a Republican paper and by not revealing its editorial views on the subject.

You failed to mention Arthur Garfield Hay's background and the imposing anti-Americanism record compiled by ACLU's founder - Baldwin.

You made it appear that this was purely a struggle between free, loyal and patriotic Americans seeking the right of self-expression and being denied it by a group of determined, partisan Legionaires.

We ask you, is this your pattern of factual reporting or did you just slip up on the Indianapolis job?

And we would further like to ask you: if you had to make a choice between the Legion and ACLU as to which organization better serves the public interest, which one would you take?

Sincerely yours,

Loren Brewer

Dear Miss Dice:

Thank you for your thoughtful letter of November 28th. With reference to your remarks concerning the SEE IT NOW program of November 24th, most of the communications we received indicated that our viewers thought we had done an impartial presentation of the situation as it existed. I would like to take this opportunity to thank you again for the participation in the program and all the cooperation you gave us.

I wish that time permitted my discussing with you at length the other matters you raise in your letter, but since I am leaving for Korea tomorrow night it is not possible for me to write more at the moment.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr.Murrow:

The CBS Radio and Television Station has called for my opinion of your television program,SEE IT NOW,given Tuesday evening,Nov.24,1953. I told the man who called me that I intended to write you about it.

I must say,Mr.Murrow, that I think it was definitely slanted in favor of The American Civil Liberties Union. This was evident by the fact that the two persons who were given the longest time on this program(one at the beginning and one at the end(both of which are strategic parts of any program) were Mr. Rowland Allen and the priest, who were speaking in favor of the ACLU. They stamped the program. As to my own part of the program, I had very little time to prepare for it and no time on the program was specified for me. I was as brief as possible, but you saw fit to cut out my last sentence entirely which was short but I felt very much to the point I was making. Since then I have thought of many other things I could have said! Since you evidently made this trip out to Indiana in the spirit of a crusader to rescue the civil liberties of our citizens which were in danger of being completely lost due to the activities of the American Legion and one of members of our Text-books Commission, let me give you now a few of the points I was unable to make on my appearance on your program.

Since we have a statute on the books in Indiana originally put there in 1935;but never enforced(due to the activities of at least one of the members of the new chapter here of the Civil Liberties Union)until by the efforts of the women citizenry in 1940, which takes the Communist Party off of the State Ballot and thus virtually out-laws it as a political party,it would be very unseemly,to say the least, for any building erected by the State of Indiana, to open its doors to an organization that welcomes Communists to its membership. Such a meeting, I am sure, could be legally challenged.

However, since there is no law yet, which specifically denies the members of a group which desires and purposes to overthrow our government by force and violence as well as by infiltration, to hold meetings whenever they can find a place, I maintain there is no infringement of the civil liberties even of Communists. When I was active in connection with The Minute Women U.S.A.Inc. I found churches that preferred not to have us meet in them although there could be no charge made against our patriotic purposes. It never occurred to me that they were depriving us of any civil liberties. The owners of church property had their rights too. And I read in the papers that the Catholic Bishop of Indianapolis intends hereafter to exercise them.

It seems a strange thing that Mr.Rowland Allen, a trusted employee of the L.S.Ayres Department Store (I say trusted because he has been there many years) did not think of the comfortable and adequate auditorium in the Ayres store which would have taken care of all that wished to attend the meeting. The store is open one evening a week so that for an evening meeting this would have been perfect. Certainly the management of the store would have granted the request of such an old employee and it is possible they may even be in sympathy with his ideas. I wonder why that did not occur to him. It would have saved you an arduous and, to my mind, completely futile trip. You don't think it possible (do you?) that the Civil Liberties Union wanted to be refused by the War Memorial, by the Knights of Columbus and by various churches in order to show how they are persecuted in Indiana?

At this point, let me digress to say a few words about your radio talk on Robin Hood. First of all I must admit I have never been one of your fans. I never could get interested in your style; and as your program has heretofore been at the same time as a broadcast that I have preferred, I have never listened to you regularly until recently. Then I heard your summary after the election of Eisenhower and I thought I had never heard anything better of its kind. It was wise and fair and well balanced. I decided I would listen to you when I could. In the shake-up of programs (radio) this fall I found that I could easily, and without the sacrifice of any other program, listen to you regularly. But again I was disappointed in the substance of what you gave. You avoided topics in which I was especially interested. I did not like your approach to questions or your conclusions. Then came your broadcast on Mrs.White which distorted completely the news I had read of the incident. She did not ban the story from the reading of children. I have just called her and she said she did not ban the story even for text-books --the newspaper accounts were distorted. She had found that the version of Robin Hood offered by the text-books was written by a Communist writer. As she knows now, that they do nothing by accident,she assumed and she had reason to suspect that something lay back of that. She is a young woman,Mr.Murrow, with 4 children and she became interested in the things that were happening to their test-books. If you haven't investigated this subject,please do so before you make another such attack-in the interest of fair play. I am an old opponent of Communism. I know their tactics and I know what they are trying to do to the thinking of our teachers and our children. It is not a pretty story. Your flippant,ironic broadcast took none of this into account. You were trying to preserve the tradition of the old English tale. Tell me, Mr. Murrow, when did you first read it? Did you attend public school? Was it in your old readers in the grades up to the 7th? Or was it in High School or college? Was it from some library, or was it a gift? No one in Indiana presumes to ban any natural by which you were caught by the story. But we do expect our children to be taught to read in our public schools from text-books that will inspire them and teach them right modes of thinking and action. And we do not expect to leave to the Communists the choice of books, the re-writing of old stories or the kind of interpretation the teachers will give. Now if this be treason to your ideas of civil liberty, make the most of it!

It is a little strange, is it not? that the ACLU rises more often to defend Communistic organizations and individuals than any other? Since we have as our heritage in this country more civil liberties than any country I know I do not see any need of the ACLU for the protection of patriotic citizens.

Before closing I would like to express my appreciation for the efficiency, courtesy and kindness of the members of your staff, Mr.Werba et al. in taking me through my part of the program.

Very sincerely,
Marguerite Dice

My dear Mr. Murrow:

This was a magnificent civil liberties program! I take my hat off to you for the fight you are making in a sensitive field. Things like this do more to promote belief in the Bill of Rights than the activities of any of us in other media.

But I must say I was tremendously impressed by the film itself, the excellent judgment shown to present a balanced program. Certainly the editor and cutter deserve congratulations. There was so much that happened, and no doubt so much film, but it was amazing to anybody connected with the matter that such a well rounded view could be presented in half an hour.

And incidentally, let me add that by the time you got through, the American Legion crowd seemed like a bunch of storm troopers.

Congratulations, and an expression of my admiration.

Cordially yours,

Arthur Garfield Hays

RE: Indianapolis "See It Now"

The enclosed statement by Roy M. Amos was delivered to me with the request that I forward it to you.

Roland Allen of Ayres (and ACLU) was lavish with his praise of the way the whole problem was handled. He felt you gave both sides a good opportunity to speak their views.

Man on the street comment here is flavored of course by the views of the individual. The Legion stand is definitely not unpopular here. (See enclosed clipping). There are some, however, who feel the Legion acted in a ridiculous manner.

Most thinking people with whom I have discussed the television program agree the subject was presented fairly.

The Indiana American Legion is glad that millions of Americans had the opportunity through Ed Murrow's program to become acquainted with the conflict of views in respect to the American Civil Liberties Union. We regret, however, that this program did not extend to the basic issues of the entire controversy insofar as The American Legion was concerned.

Never was the use of a religious building by the ACLU, or the right of these individuals to freedom of speech and assembly an issue. The American Legion is sworn to uphold those rights.

The issue was the deception which has been practiced in the past by the ACLU on good and patriotic citizens in the name of Civil Rights under which they collected defense funds used in large part for the protection of Communists, subversive aliens and native traitors.

The fact remains that the ACLU, despite its fine phrases, was originated to defend draft dodgers in World War I, and that it has a consistent record of protecting Communists and subversives. To have permitted such a group to use the Indiana World War Memorial in our opinion would desecrate that hallowed shrine, which is dedicated to those who gave their lives in defense of their country.

ACLU Pro And Con

To the Editor of The Star:

I noticed a story in The Star listing the arguments presented by the two sides in the American Civil Liberties Union controversy.

Roy Amos, of the American Legion and Merle H. Miller, ACLU spokesman, presented their arguments in a very clear and concise manner listing events and dates. Both arguments were very persuasive and gave the feeling that even though the Legion is a patriotic organization, the ACLU has done many things to prove their ideals and actions are patriotic.

It is only after you complete the article and sit back and do a little thinking that you begin to realize a completely new approach is being used by an old time organization, the ACLU. When you review Mr. Amos' points one by one you will notice that every event he accuses the ACLU, or its sponsors, of participating in was dated from 1920 right down to the present date.

Mr. Miller, of the ACLU, then presented the other side of the story. Note that in all but one case the patriotic act he cited consisted in nothing more than just protesting some action. When analyzed, this could mean that only a letter and a 3-cent stamp was spent in defending the oppressed. In only one case does he mention that they spent any of their money or did anymore than just go on record as opposing the suppression of free speech. Of the eight incidents Mr. Miller listed, all but one took place in the last twelve months.

By having their protest letters very carefully catalogued they are able to present documentary proof that they advocate free speech to all citizens no matter who they are or what they represent.

Dear Ed:

I would like to write a letter of gratitude to every member of your staff who worked on your "See It Now" program last night. It was a great tribute to your own vision as well as to the potential contribution television can make to life in a democracy.

You have done many good things recently, but this was the first time I felt a real excitement about the medium as a constructive force in our society. It was a master stroke of luck that it came just before McCarthy.

CHRISTMAS IN KOREA

DECEMBER 29, 1953

EDWARD R. MURROW: This is Korea, where a war is going on. That's a Marine, digging a hole in the ground. They dig an awful lot of holes in the ground in Korea. This is the front. Just there, no-man's-land begins, and on the ridges over there, the enemy positions can be clearly seen. In the course of the next hour we shall try to show you around Korea a bit. Now to Bill Downs.

BILL DOWNS: In Korea, the GI's have three enemies: the Communists, the weather and the hills. This is how they are combatting the latter. This is the Topeka Trail.

TRUCKS GOING UP AND DOWN TOPEKA TRAIL—BULLDOZER PUSHING EARTH AROUND.

DOWNS [SHOUTING TO BULLDOZER OPERATOR]: What is your name?

WILLIAM FOX: William Fox. Herrin, Illinois.

DOWNS: What outfit?

FOX: 378th Combat Engineers Battalion. People have heard about the Burma Road, but you're going to hear of the Topeka Trail before this is over.

DOWNS: I understand one of these things got out from under you not very many days ago.

FOX: Yes, sir.

DOWNS: What happened?

FOX: I got blew off the cliff.

DOWNS: Oh, you did? Get hurt?

FOX: I didn't, no sir.

ROBERT PIERPOINT: This is Bob Pierpoint speaking to you from a Marine outpost on the Western front. I'd like to show you some of the terrain here that the Marines are defending in this particular area. First of all, directly behind us is no-man's-land. Our patrol sometimes makes contact with enemy patrols right in no-man's-land, down there in the rice paddies. Usually they move across no-man's-land to Hill Yoke, which is directly in front of us now. Yoke is the rather gray ridge line that you see, the closest one with a little snow on top. That is enemy territory.

ROBINSON: Well, it's pretty cold in the night, sir.
MURROW: Been getting much incoming fire?
ROBINSON: Not up here, sir.
MURROW: Good ridge, eh?
ROBINSON: Yes, sir.
MURROW: You like it?
ROBINSON: Well, if you've gotta be up here . . . [LAUGHTER.]
MURROW: If you have to be on one, this one's all right. Is that it?
ROBINSON: Yes, sir.

ANNOUNCER: "See It Now," originating in Korea, continues immediately after this pause for station identification.

MURROW: [FROM LIAISON PLANE]: This is Korea, a country that stands on edge. A boy down on the ground, who was just back from the front, said we might take some pictures up here and send them back home as a Christmas card, and that's what we've been trying to do. We are flying just behind our artillery positions. We are not permitted to photograph in advance of that line, but it really doesn't matter because most of these hills look alike, and they stretch all the way from Pusan up to the front. They are very much the same sort of hills, whether it happens to be Heartbreak Ridge, Triangle, Pork Chop, Papasan —they all are different in size and shape. From the top there stretches out ahead more hills. And each one of the hills, from Pusan, or rather from the Naktong River up here, has been paid for in blood. That's an Air Force relay station.

PIERPOINT: This is CBS correspondent Bob Pierpoint. We're up on top of a mountain, high in the mountains of Korea. I can't tell you exactly where, but we're with a radio relay team of the Air Force. These boys live up here on their lonesome spot and maintain communications for the Air Force around through Korea between the various ground units. Now let's go down into barracks down here, where it is a little warmer, and find out how they like this job. Say, how do you Air Force men feel about being stationed on a ground unit on top of a mountain in the middle of nowhere?
AIRMAN: Well, up here on this mountain, gosh darn it, all you can get up to see is mountains. [LAUGHTER.]
PIERPOINT: You guys get your mail up here pretty regularly?
AIRMEN [VOICES TOGETHER]: Yes.
PIERPOINT: How about Christmas mail? Did that get here in time?

Then just to the right of Yoke—Hill 66. We send our patrols to feel out their defenses on Hill 66 at night. Behind Hill 66 is a strong enemy fortress known as Tai Dok San. It's that long ridge line that you see almost the farthest away—very well defended by the enemy. It's their commanding terrain feature in this area. If you follow the end of Tai Dok San, off to our right, just below it, you can see a very small portion of the top of Bunker Hill. Bunker Hill is now known as the sandiest beach in Korea, because it has been so heavily pounded by artillery and air strikes.

PIERPOINT: Why don't you fellows, first of all, just introduce yourselves?

PFC. DUVAL: My name is Pfc. Duval, Central Falls, Rhode Island.

PFC. HENDRICKSON: I'm Pfc. Hendrickson, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

PIERPOINT: What do you think of this war?

HENDRICKSON [PAUSE]: Can't see the sense of it.

PIERPOINT: You can't.

HENDRICKSON: No.

PIERPOINT: Think we can win it?

HENDRICKSON: Sure we can win it.

PIERPOINT: Think we can go up the Yalu?

HENDRICKSON: Believe we could.

PIERPOINT: What do you think?

DUVAL: I believe we could, too.

PIERPOINT: How would you like to be one of the first mortar platoons up there?

DUVAL: I wouldn't mind it too much.

HENDRICKSON: Be all right with me. We probably would anyway.

PIERPOINT: You probably would at that. Well, what do you think would happen when we get up there?

HENDRICKSON [PAUSE]: I don't know. Not much, I guess.

PIERPOINT: There would still be Chinese on the other side?

HENDRICKSON: Yes. That's right.

DUVAL: That's right. Still be Communists.

PIERPOINT: Then what's the use of going up there?

HENDRICKSON: Change of scenery. [LAUGHTER.]

PIERPOINT: Just getting bored with this around here. Are you married?

HENDRICKSON: Yes, I am.

PIERPOINT: Have you a family?

HENDRICKSON: Well, a wife.

PIERPOINT: Would you like to say something to her?

HENDRICKSON: Well, I would.

PIERPOINT: All right. There is the wife right there. [POINTS TO CAMERA] Talk to her.

HENDRICKSON: Hi, honey.

MURROW: We are on the Marine section of the front again. This is a battery of 105s, six guns in all, or tubes, as the gunners call them. They are going to do some firing now because they just had a big shoot; and out in the target area, a distance of about seven thousand yards, they got a very satisfactory secondary explosion, so they are going to lay the six 105s on that target again right now.

STAFF SERGEANT FORD: Number 1 . . . three rounds . . . charge five . . . charge six . . . correction, 3,1,4,2.

GUNNER: Correction, 3,1,4,2.

FORD: Left side, 2,9,7.

GUNNER: Left side, 2,9,7.

FORD: Elevation, 4,1,3.

GUNNER: Elevation, 4,1,3.

FORD: Stand by. Fire!

[FIRING OF GUNS.]

MURROW: They tell me that this gun is called "Baby." Who named it anyway? [GENERAL LAUGHTER.] What about it?

FORD: Well, sir, it was me, sir. Section chief.

MURROW: What is your name, Sergeant?
FORD: Staff Sergeant Ford, sir. Milton Joseph Ford, to be exact.
MURROW: Milton Joseph?
FORD: That's right, sir.
MURROW: And no laugh. You must really have discipline. [LAUGHTER.] Have you got your Christmas presents all right?
FORD: Yes, sir. I'm waiting now on about five more.
MURROW: About five more. Heard from your girl?
FORD: Yes, sir!
MURROW: Good! Tell me, where are you fellows from? Where's your home?
MARINE: Rhode Island.
MURROW: Rhode Island? What part?
MARINE: Pawtucket.
MURROW: And yours?
SECOND MARINE: Brooklyn, New York.
THIRD MARINE: Utica, New York.
FOURTH MARINE: Hampton, Virginia.
FIFTH MARINE: Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.
MURROW: Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Coal miner?
FIFTH MARINE: Yes, sir. [LAUGHTER.]
MURROW: Where's the farmer?
MARINE: Well, I should say he was a farmer.
MURROW: Was a farmer. How big a farm?
MARINE: Approximately fourteen hundred acres.
MURROW: Where?
MARINE: In Illinois.
MURROW: Who is taking care of the farm now?

MARINE: Pop's taking care of it.

MURROW: Pop's taking care of it?

MARINE: Pop and the little brothers.

MURROW: I'll bet Pop is eager for you to get home and do a little work.

MARINE: Well, I don't know if he'll get much work done. [LAUGHTER.]

MURROW: You got any Christmas presents?

ANOTHER MARINE: Not yet, sir.

MURROW: What would you fellows like to be doing if you were home right now? [LAUGHTER.]

MARINE: Are you kidding? [MUCH LAUGHTER.]

MURROW: What about it?

FORD: Well, I'll be frank. I'd like to be sitting in a car with my girl friend right now. [GENERAL LAUGHTER.]

MURROW: Who's the man first to be released from here? Who's got his points coming up first?

MARINE: Here he is. Corporal Black.

MURROW: How long do you have to go, Corporal?

CORPORAL BLACK: Well, I've got two months to go—if I stay here twelve months.

MURROW: Are you counting it by months or days?

BLACK: I'm counting it by hours. [GENERAL LAUGHTER.] Never get home soon enough.

MURROW: Well, Merry Christmas to all of you fellows, and thanks very much indeed.

VOICES: Same to you.

Merry Christmas to you, too.

MURROW: Right. Now over to Ed Scott.

SCOTT: We are standing on the flight deck of the U.S.S. Consolation in waters off Korea. We are waiting for a helicopter to land on the flight deck with patients direct from the front.

[HELICOPTER APPROACHES AND LANDS ON FLIGHT DECK. PATIENTS UNLOADED AND CARRIED BELOW ON STRETCHERS.]

SCOTT: We've dropped down here into Ward 3C of the Consolation to talk with some of these fellows who have been brought back from the front by helicopter. Hi ya, boy. How are you feeling?

PATIENT: Pretty good, sir.

SCOTT: Pretty good?

PATIENT: Yes, sir.

SCOTT: That's fine. What is your name?

PATIENT: Terry Goulis —— [INDISTINGUISHABLE.]

SCOTT: And where are you from?

PATIENT: California. El Monte.

SCOTT: California. Where?

PATIENT: California. El Monte.

SCOTT: Uh-huh. Where did you get it? Can you tell us a little bit about what happened?

PATIENT: MOR—building a bunker [P.A. SYSTEM INTERRUPTS] incoming mortar . . .

SCOTT: MOR—building a bunker, eh? How long have you been in? I mean, when did you go into the service?

PATIENT: March 16, sir. Fifty-two.

SCOTT: Fifty-two. How long have you been over here?

PATIENT: Four months.

SCOTT: Four months, eh?

PATIENT: Yes, sir.

SCOTT: You got anything you want to say about this war?

PATIENT: Wish it was over a long time ago.

SCOTT: Can you speak up a little bit?

PATIENT: Wish it was over a long time ago.

SCOTT: Have you got any message you want to send back home, to your folks or wife?

PATIENT: Send it to my mom and dad. Send it to my mom and my dad and everybody back home.

SCOTT: Say hello to them for you? You bet. You'll be all right, fella. Now, take care.

PATIENT: Thanks.

SCOTT: You bet. So long. This has been the picture from a hospital ship, somewhere off Korea.

[JOE WERSHBA IN AIRPLANE TALKING OVER VOICES OF TWO KOREAN GIRLS BROADCASTING IN KOREAN.]

JOSEPH WERSHBA: This is Wershba. We are on a C47. We're going over enemy territory. This plane is the Psychological Warfare plane. The two women you see, two young Korean girls, are broadcasting from this plane through a loud-speaker in the belly of the plane and that message is being heard down below. In front of me is a pile of leaflets, leaflets which say: "Bring this leaflet in and you will be given safe passage. Signed General Mark Clark." In other words, leaflets designed to destroy the will to resist.

[KOREAN GIRL SPEAKS IN KOREAN OVER LOUD-SPEAKER.]

This operation is the actual throwing out of the leaflets. You will notice he pulled a pin there. There is an actual fuse operation on this thing—and there they go. I'm sorry we can't follow them. I have a few of those leaflets in my hand that we can show you: safe-conduct passes for the enemy, if they want to surrender, signs, little post-card things, showing how the Russians and the Chinese Communists are pushing the North Koreans into war when the North Koreans don't want to go—and typical anti-North Korean propaganda, but designed to make it easier for the North Koreans to want to quit. From time to time when the girls have stopped talking, sometimes they sing, and today in the Christmas spirit they have been singing "Silent Night." I wonder if you could do it again—you, Kim. Give us "Silent Night," huh? Sing. Okay?

[KOREAN GIRLS SING "SILENT NIGHT" IN KOREAN.]

And now over to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: That's the Spoonbill Bridge across the Imjin River. In Korea, rivers and hills seem to be the two things that are important, both of them making fine defensive lines. The Spoonbill Bridge is actually an underwater bridge. It was designed that way because during flood period the water will be twenty feet above the level of that bridge, and the bridge just stays there, and all the debris and logs float right over it. Down there in that Amtrack there is a boy named Kenneth Tuttleton. He comes from Dallas, Texas. And what he's doing with that Amtrack is breaking up the ice so that it doesn't crowd too hard against the piers. And we shouted down to Kenneth Tuttleton and asked him how he liked it, and he said, "I am just as happy down here as though I was a duck," and will we tell the folks in Dallas hello and Merry Christmas; so we agreed to do it.

DOWNS: This is Bill Downs standing beside military supply route highway 33, Korea. This is the gateway to Korea—the main invasion route. This is what the current fighting is all about. The side that holds this route holds Seoul. Twelve miles to the north is the 38th Parallel. Twelve miles beyond that is the front. This is the Uijongbu Valley where the North Koreans came down on that fateful June 25th, a century ago it seems, and took the South Korean capital of Seoul.

This the village of Kanung-ni, at least what's left of the village after armies have fought over it four times. This was a house. People used to live there. I have seen the same picture too many times in Russia, in France, in Germany—too much broken homes, I guess; but the human animal is a pretty tough individual, whether he is German or French or Korean or Russian or Chinese or South Korean, as are these kids. He always manages to survive, and the village of Kanung-ni is surviving and coming back. This is a side of war we don't see very much of, but probably it's the most important part of all—whether or not that old man, that little girl can walk down the muddy road of their village in freedom. Now over to Larry LeSueur.

LARRY LESUEUR: Je parle francais tres mal mais vous parlez anglais tres bien. What is your name?

LOIC JAMMET: My name is Jammet.

LESUEUR: Jammet?

JAMMET: Jammet.

LESUEUR: And what part of France do you come from?

JAMMET: From Brittany. I come—from Brittany.

LESUEUR: I see. And how long has this French battalion been here?

JAMMET: Oh, now more than two years. They come in 1950. November 1950.

LESUEUR: I see. Qu'est-ce que vous pensez necessaire finir la guerre? What do you think we need to finish this war?

JAMMET: I don't see exactly how we can finish this war because it is very difficult. If we go in Manchuria, if we go in the north of Korea, we will be very near of China, and the war will not be finish. If we stay along the 38th Parallel, it will be the same thing. I think it is a good joke for the Russian, and we don't see exactly how we can finish this war. [SHRUGS AND SIGHS.]

LESUEUR: What do you think we should do?

JAMMET: I think we are obliged now to stay in Korea and fight, fight, fight. That's all. If we don't fight very well, we will lose. We will lose the face. It is terrible—we don't see exactly how we can finish the war.

LESUEUR: Why do you think we are here fighting?

JAMMET: We are fighting—we are fighting for liberté and for the liberté of all the people—the people who want to keep this liberté. The French like liberté.

LESUEUR: Merci beaucoup et Joyeux Noel.

JAMMET: Thank you very much.

PIERPOINT: Attached to the Seventh Infantry Division here in Korea is the famous Ethiopian batallion. The Ethiopians have for many hundreds of years been Coptic Christians. Their Christmas comes just about fifteen days later than ours, on the seventh of January. They have a particular Christmas game. It is something like what we know as field hockey. It's called in Ethiopian Gunna Cha-ota. I believe that's right—and I'd like to have you take a look at some of it. It is a pretty rough game—it's good training for combat. There's the opening whistle.

[ETHIOPIAN TROOPS PLAYING GAME.]

PIERPOINT: This Ethiopian brand of field hockey is being played with homemade sticks, made of branches and a ball, actually just a knot of wood—that's all they could find here in Korea. Here it comes in this direction. [PAUSE.] That is the goal line. [SHOUTS OVER WHISTLE.] They just made a goal, and now this is the victory chant.

[ETHIOPIANS DO VICTORY CHANT IN ETHIOPIAN AND VICTORY DANCE.]

MURROW: This is Love Company of the 14th Infantry. We are losing a little light now, and it will soon be Christmas Eve, and for the next few minutes we are going to chat with a few of the boys of "L" Company. They just came in from their holes that are just on the other side of that ridge. What is your name?

PVT. BAKER: Private Richard R. Baker.

MURROW: Where are you from?

BAKER: Walpole, Massachusetts.

MURROW: How is the food up here?

BAKER: Well, it's pretty good, sir.

MURROW: Good, considering?

BAKER: Considering.

MURROW: Anything you would like to say to the people in Massachusetts?

BAKER: Well, just say I wish them all a Merry Christmas and hope to be home soon.

MURROW: We've got over here a soldier from Louisiana. Is that right?

SOLDIER: That's right.

MURROW: How long have you been up here?

SOLDIER: Been on this hill here about a week.

MURROW: What is the longest time you ever spent on one hill in this war?

SOLDIER: About fifty-six days, I believe it was.

MURROW: What was that?

SOLDIER: Heartbreak.

MURROW: Now have you got anyone in Louisiana you'd like to say something to on Christmas Eve—right into the camera there?

SOLDIER: Well, I would like to tell my mother—wish her a Merry Christmas, Happy New Year.

MURROW: Did your presents arrive yet?

SOLDIER: Yes, I've got all my presents.

MURROW: Good! Now we'll move along over here and sit on the leg of this soldier. Where's your home?

CPL. ROBINSON: Oklahoma, sir.

MURROW: Oklahoma?

ROBINSON: Yes, sir.

MURROW: What part?

ROBINSON: McLoud.

MURROW: What is your name?

ROBINSON: Corporal Robinson, sir.

MURROW: You been very cold up on this hill?

ROBINSON: Well, it's pretty cold in the night, sir.
MURROW: Been getting much incoming fire?
ROBINSON: Not up here, sir.
MURROW: Good ridge, eh?
ROBINSON: Yes, sir.
MURROW: You like it?
ROBINSON: Well, if you've gotta be up here . . . [LAUGHTER.]
MURROW: If you have to be on one, this one's all right. Is that it?
ROBINSON: Yes, sir.

ANNOUNCER: "See It Now," originating in Korea, continues immediately after this pause for station identification.

MURROW: [FROM LIAISON PLANE]: This is Korea, a country that stands on edge. A boy down on the ground, who was just back from the front, said we might take some pictures up here and send them back home as a Christmas card, and that's what we've been trying to do. We are flying just behind our artillery positions. We are not permitted to photograph in advance of that line, but it really doesn't matter because most of these hills look alike, and they stretch all the way from Pusan up to the front. They are very much the same sort of hills, whether it happens to be Heartbreak Ridge, Triangle, Pork Chop, Papasan —they all are different in size and shape. From the top there stretches out ahead more hills. And each one of the hills, from Pusan, or rather from the Naktong River up here, has been paid for in blood. That's an Air Force relay station.

PIERPOINT: This is CBS correspondent Bob Pierpoint. We're up on top of a mountain, high in the mountains of Korea. I can't tell you exactly where, but we're with a radio relay team of the Air Force. These boys live up here on their lonesome spot and maintain communications for the Air Force around through Korea between the various ground units. Now let's go down into barracks down here, where it is a little warmer, and find out how they like this job. Say, how do you Air Force men feel about being stationed on a ground unit on top of a mountain in the middle of nowhere?
AIRMAN: Well, up here on this mountain, gosh darn it, all you can get up to see is mountains. [LAUGHTER.]
PIERPOINT: You guys get your mail up here pretty regularly?
AIRMEN [VOICES TOGETHER]: Yes.
PIERPOINT: How about Christmas mail? Did that get here in time?

AIRMEN [GENERAL TALK]: Packages still coming in.

PIERPOINT: Hey, you know, you guys have quite a collection of gals up there. Which one would you date if you had a chance? [MUCH TALK AND LAUGHTER.]

AIRMEN: The one in the right-hand corner.

Debra Paget.

What I won't do when I go home!

Behave yourself.

That is a girl!

PIERPOINT: Where are you from?

AIRMAN: California.

PIERPOINT: Where are you from?

SERGEANT SMITH: I am Staff Sergeant Smith from Denver, Colorado. Smile, pardner, when you say that. I'll be coming home mo sukoshi. When I come home I'm gonna really celebrate the leaving of Korea, I mean the mountains of Korea. So, I don't have very much to say, but I will say Merry Christmas, Happy New Year.

AIRMAN SCHWARTZ: I am Airman First Class Michael Schwartz. I am from West-by-God-you-better-smile-when-you-say-that-word-Virginia. Hello, Mom. Keep the farm up, because I'll be home mo sukoshi. Don't worry about me here, 'cause it's not bad—not as bad as you think.

AIRMAN MORIARTY: I'm Airman Third Class Brendon M. Moriarty. I was born and raised in County Kerry, Ireland. I been used to mountains all my life, but it's the mountains Killarney, not the mountains of Korea. I want to wish you all a Merry Christmas. Nora, I'll be home in two hundred and ninety-two days, then we will celebrate Christmas, New Year's and St. Patrick's Day—we'll celebrate everything together. Okay, darling. Good-by.

PIERPOINT: Well, that's it from a Korean mountaintop with the Air Forces communication unit. Now over to Joe Wershba.

WERSHBA: Okay. This will be reel five. Rossi, LeSueur, Peden, Wershba. On the 20th, December, we are at a headquarters outfit of a British Commonwealth Brigade Unit. This is a ridge line on the Korean front just about the closest anyone can get to the battle without actually being within the battle.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL SHAW: I'm Colonel Shaw of the headquarters of the British Commonwealth Division. I welcome this opportunity to show you something of the part of the Korean battle front which is occupied by the British—British forces in the Commonwealth Division.

As I am speaking, our rear artillery are firing harassing rounds into the Chinese lines. Our forces occupy the hilltops in the foreground, and the hills in the distance are in Chinese territory. We have just had a small fall of snow, and it's pretty cold up here. 'Way out to the left, down in the valley, you can probably pick out the frozen paddy fields in this deserted countryside.

It's a very queer sort of war we are fighting here. By day we occupy the hilltops and the Chinaman does the same thing. You won't see much movement. But the real war begins at night. At night the positions are manned, fully manned, and patrols go out and play a game of hide-and-seek amongst the scattered mine fields in the valleys of no-man's-land, and it's a grim game for these patrols. Every night they go out. By day, most of the soldiers get their sleep and only a few sentries are left on duty.

SCOTCHMAN: I'm Roland Adamson. Black Watch Royal Highland Regiment. Come from Fyfeshire, Scotland.

NEW ZEALANDER: I am Doug Dudfield of the 16th New Zealand Field Regiment. I come from Southland, New Zealand.

AUSTRALIAN: I am Pat Humphries of the Royal Australian Regiment and come from New South Wales, Australia.

SECOND AUSTRALIAN: Well, the kick-off, when you get up the line, you're a bit nervous—really get a bit frightened when you get your taste of shells. And then you get that way, you're just like a human ferret—you hit the dirt, then nighttime comes around, detail you for a patrol, you go it, you're nervous. You're really shaking.

MURROW: This is just a little nostalgic Christmas music for a few million ex-GIs who remember what perforated steel paving is like and what the sound is when you let in the clutch too quickly on a jeep.

[WHEELS SPINNING ON STEEL PAVING, THEN JEEP DRIVES OFF.]

MURROW: This is Combat Ops of the Fourth Fighter Interceptor Group—F86 Sabre Jets. Everyone on the base watches this sign. Early in the morning a sign goes up—"Hava no MIGs yet"—and then when the day's operations are completed, the sign is put up showing the kill for the day. Everyone on the base watches this sign. It's the way the enlisted men and everyone else can tell how the group has done in the day's fighting against the MIGs. This count would be about average, though, for the normal day. Two destroyed, one probable and one damaged.

PILOTS: They're coming out now.

Down we go. No sweat.

At about ten thousand feet below—ya can't miss him. They'll knock off some MIGs today, Bill. No sweat.

It will be a good day, nice and clear. Look at that visibility—about a hundred miles.

Man, I'd like to be up there today. Maybe I could hack down about two more.

There goes the Jolly Roger out there.

Yeah. That'll be six to go.

[JET TAKES OFF.]

MURROW: These are the boys who go up where no cameraman and no reporter can go with them. Here next is Ed Scott.

SCOTT: The scene, Seoul City, right opposite the PX, where Koreans have set up their stalls to take advantage of the GIs shopping for Christmas.

[SEOUL STREET SCENES . . . GI'S AT STALLS . . . KOREAN KIDS . . . OLD MAN . . . YOUNG KOREAN BOY PLAYING "SILENT NIGHT" ON HARMONICA.]

SCOTT: Our CBS correspondent Lou Cioffi and I have moved up here to Charlie Company, a heavy-mortar outfit about one thousand yards from the front. Somewhere over the hill is Old Baldy.

[MORTAR FIRE.]

LOU CIOFFI: Tell me, what do you think about the Korean war? What do you think about your job here?

SOLDIER: Well, I don't know. I am just over here firing, that's all. [LAUGHTER.] When they holler "Fire mission," I fire a lot.

SCOTT: Tell me, how do you guys feel about this war situation?

SOLDIER: Well, I don't know. It is pretty hard for me to figure out. I tried to think of it in different ways, but I come up with the same answer—that I think it's a bunch of nonsense.

SCOTT: Harry, what do you think of this Korean war situation?

SOLDIER: Well, sir, I think we are fighting for a good cause. We either must stop Communism here or it is going to come closer to the United States, and this is the place to stop the progressiveness of the Communists.

SCOTT: You think it can be done here?

SCOTT: Well, how is it going? I mean, it seems to me that in the last eight or ten months it has been sort of solid, one spot. What are we really trying to accomplish here? Do you have any idea?

SOLDIER: Well, I believe at the present we are trying to accomplish peace without sacrificing American lives, but as we all know the Communists do not seem to want peace. They just keep stalling off.

CIOFFI: What do you think of the war?

SOLDIER: I think we should end it. If we fight strong and like we are doing now, we know that they can't—they can't conquer us. At least all we can do is fight, and hope for the best.

DOWNS: This is the 8055 Mobile Army Surgical Hospital. We are going in to talk to some of the nurses. They are American girls closest to the fighting of any woman in Korea.

CAPTAIN LORENA GOODELL: Did you hear on the radio last night that the Communists are threatening to capture Seoul by Christmas?

LIEUTENANT ALICE EMERY: Boy, there has been a lot of artillery the last few days, but I don't think that we have anything to worry about. We've got a good division up there.

GOODELL: Well, we certainly do—that's second to none.

EMERY: Second to None, the Mighty Second.

GOODELL: And then the Commonwealth Division, not too far away, also.

EMERY: The first ROKs—number one.

LIEUTENANT KATHLEEN EVANS: Lou, is this your first Christmas in Korea?

LIEUTENANT MARY LOU VONDEL: My first Christmas over here, yes.

EVANS: Where were you last Christmas?

VONDEL: Last Christmas I was in Madigan, Tacoma, Washington, never dreaming I'd be here this year. Where were you?

EVANS: I was at Valley Forge.

VONDEL: What did you do? Anything exciting?

EVANS: Oh, yes, it was quite exciting, but not like here.

VONDEL: I never thought that this year I would be taking care of casualties this close to the line.

EVANS: No, and especially about this time of the year and the type of patients we're getting in—the casualties we got in last night, today . . .

VONDEL: What happened?

EVANS: I don't know. There was an awful lot of artillery last night.

VONDEL: Sure woke me up.

EVANS: A bunch of Australians coming in—out on patrol, and they got clobbered this morning.

VONDEL: I thought I could sleep through anything, but last night did it.

EVANS: Well, if you're here long enough, like we should be, we're used to it.

GOODELL: This is Captain Lorena M. Goodell from Syracuse, New York, and now talking from the 8055 Mobile Army Surgical Hospital on the 38th Parallel in Korea. I'd just like to wish everyone back home a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

EMERY: This is Lieutenant Alice Emery, 38th Parallel, Korea. Just want to give a little message to my husband. Hi, honey. Mighty lonely this Christmas, but I will be home next Christmas —in fact, a lot sooner than that. Just keep waiting.

EVANS: Lieutenant Kathleen Evans, 8055 MASH, 38th Parallel, Korea. Mom, thanks a lot for the packages and Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. If you see Kay, tell her I said thanks a lot for the cookies.

VONDEL: Mary Lou Vondel, 8055 MASH, in Korea. I want to thank everyone for sending all the cards and packages to me. But I think the best news of all would be the word that my brother Eddie is doing okay.

MURROW: This is probably the only Christmas tree that we will shoot in Korea. How long have you fellows had it up?

Our Father, which art in heaven, we are grateful for the opportunity of gathering together this Christmas morning to worship Thee. We thank Thee for the birth and mission of Jesus Christ; the hope which it gives us in this life, and the world to come, and this morning we pray for Thy spirit to be with us. [REST OF [PRAYER DROWNED OUT BY PLANES.] In the name of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, we ask Thee for Thy blessing. Amen.

MURROW: A few minutes ago an American jeep pulled up here in Panmunjom. Two MPs got out of it carrying two orange-colored mail sacks and they walked into a small tent, the control point, and then they came out, and then there was a wait. The interpreter went over to the North Koreans and said, "We are ready for the mail exchange," and then there was more delay and still more delay. And finally a young North Korean second lieutenant stalked over, went into the tent, where he signed the papers, and two Korean troops carried those orange-colored mail bags back across the road to the little hut that the North Koreans occupied, and then in about twenty seconds they came back with the empty sacks. No one here knows what happens to the mail. There were about 3,600 pieces. One of the GIs said they probably just dump it out behind and burn it, but we don't in fact know what happens to it. But as those bags went across the road, one could not help thinking of the messages, the small packages that were probably intended to reach our prisoners of war somewhere up north behind those hard, cold hills.

these will be your jobs. Chambers, you will be number-one scout. Ball will be number two, second man in the file. I'll be the third scout. Wallace, you carry the AR, the basic load of ammunition. Van Fleet, you're the assistant AR. Waley, you be first rifleman. Archebeck, you follow Waley. Smith, you come after Archebeck and Kim, follow Smith. Smothers, behind Kim, and Lee carries the radio. Sisson, you pack the wire, and Sergeant Lammar, you are second in command. You will be in the rear. All right, let's move on up to the ridge line and we'll take a look at this route we are going to follow tonight. All right, Chambers.

MURROW: There is no conclusion to this report from Korea because there is no end to the war. [PAUSE.] That ends our report from Korea. And so it remains on behalf of the men with whom we have worked out here, the fighting men with whom we have shared a little experience, to say, perhaps, make a prayer, and don't forget to write. Good night, and good luck.

Many thanks for your very nice note. It was a pleasure to do the program with your son, Gene. Dear Mr. Belderok;

Mr. Murrow has asked me to reply to your letter of March 20th. We did indeed present a television program titled "Christmas in Korea" on SEE IT NOW on December 29, 1953, and part of it showed GI's in Korea entertaining children from an orphanage. I regret to have to tell you that there is very little likelihood of our being able to repeat the program since it was definitely a Christmas theme, and all of Mr. Murrow's programs must deal mainly with day-to-day news. I am sorry to have to disappoint you and certainly should the program be shown again for any reason I will certainly let you know in advance.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr.Murrow:

We understand from many people that around Christmas Time you sponsored a show showing our GI's in Korea entertaining children from an orphanage.

Many of the people who told us about this show, would like to see it again and we ourselves would love to see it too, as we missed it. We would like it so very much since our son was there too, serving with the Army out in Korea. He wrote us that they indeed did entertain those children and we therefore must assume that he too will be in the picture.

Would it, please, be possible, to show this film once more and if so, would you please be good enough to let us know so that this time we would not miss it?

No need to tell you that we would be so very grateful for your courtesy.

Many thanks in anticipation from yours very sincerely,

Dear General Clark:

Please accept our belated thanks for the courtesy and cooperation which your command extended to our camera crews when we filmed a report on Christmas in Korea, last December. The report was carried on the CBS Television Network and has been repeated from time to time, indicating that through your help, we were able to narrow the distance a bit between the young soldier in the forward areas, and the American family back home in their living room.

We are of course grateful to all the officers and men of your command who assisted us, and especially to Lieutenant Colonel Donald Nugent, HQ PIO FEC, and to two members of Colonel Nugent's office, Captain Thomas Claggett and Lieutenant Douglas Jenkins. They were most helpful in expediting our accreditation to Korea, and for arranging many of the details while our crews were in Korea.

Please accept our best personal regards.

Dear Colonel Nugent:

Please accept our belated thanks for the splendid cooperation which you and your men accorded our reporters and camera crews when we went to Korea for a one-hour film report on the CBS Television program, "See It Now."

We are particularly indebted to Captain Thomas Claggett and Lieutenant Douglas Jenkins. We still think fondly of Captain Claggett's incredible performance in rapid accreditation of the five "See It Now" camera crews. And we rest assured that the difficult job of filming a long war-front was considerably lightened by Lieutenant Jenkins' excellent ability to coordinate the work as special project officer assigned to us for the entire trip.

Would you be kind enough to inform them both of our appreciation?

Please accept our belated thanks for the friendly cooperation which you and your command extended to our camera crews during the filming of a report on Christmas in Korea. There were seventeen of us - reporters, cameramen, sound engineers - and equipment - and we are grateful to your command for the transportation.

In particular, we remember the splendid assistance of Major Charles Thompson, your press information officer, who provided us with transportation to Korea and back, and also ground transport to air bases in Japan.

Dear Ed:

Just returned to the office from watching your Xmas "See It Now" and wish to take a moment to compliment you on another job well done.

Didn't realize the impact that your Xmas show carried until I saw it here. Guess my 38 months there was another case of being too close to the forest to see the trees. Sorta really know now what the many parents, lovers and friends were feeling when they wrote the many letters to me regarding their lost loved ones, who appeared in my pictures. Now I realize the value to these individuals of the answers I sent them, tho I could add at the time little more than what my original captions said. Believe it was well worth while seeing how your material was accepted and will surely make a difference if I ever cover another story of this nature.

Kindness personal regards to you, Bob Pierpoint and Ed Scott. Also give my best to George Herman in his new job.

My dear Mr. Murrow:

I am enclosing a clipping from the front page of our paper here in Lancaster that I thought perhaps you might be interested in.

I personally am quite proud of this picture and I want to take this opportunity to thank you for relaying my wonderful Christmas message to the children and myself from Jack.

The mail hadn't been coming through too well just before Christmas and I had not received a letter from Jack for almost a week. Christmas day was not very bright for me as you can well imagine until I heard your program that evening. Believe me, it was the nicest gift I could have received.

Jack has also sent me two pictures taken of you both during your visit to Kimpo which he intends to have framed for his office when he comes home. He is very proud of these I might add and I certainly can't blame him.

I watched with great interest your television show taken in Korea and although I knew Jack wouldn't be in any of the scenes, it gave me a wonderful picture of what living conditions were like where he is stationed. I think you are to be commended for your fine work as it meant so much to wives and loved ones here at home.

Thank you once again Mr. Murrow for being so kind to us. Your thoughtfulness will long be remembered by both Jack and myself.

Most sincerely,

ecapture Four Of Nine Jail Break At Toledo

TOLEDO, O.—Four of nine prisoners who fled Lucas nty jail in the biggest break ever to occur there were ured here before dawn today.

None of the four offered any resistance.

Authorities in eight states were alerted to look out for the ining five of the group which squeezed through a foot square in a jail window Friday night.

Those recaptured are:

Adolph Syph, 32, serving a sentence for forgery. Syph, who boxes under the name "Ace Miller," was nabbed at a downtown intersection.

Kenneth Johnson, 27, attempted robbery, and Kenneth Roland, 22, forgery, were spotted near the home of one of Roland's relatives. Johnson stopped in flight down an alley when a warning shot was fired over his head. Roland got away then, but was taken shortly afterward.

Bishop Jackson, 21, cutting with intent to kill.

Student Questioned

Questioned about the break was Connie West, a University of Toledo student and friend of Wallace Wiley, a convicted car thief who is still at large.

The nine—all Negroes— were in jail waiting to appeal their conviction on crimes varying from car theft to armed robbery and cutting with intent to kill.

When they leaped 25 feet to the rain-softened ground Friday night, they left behind them 20 other prisoners who refused to make a break for it.

These others—who include two men convicted of second degree murder—told deputies of Sheriff George Timiney that the escapees started sawing Friday morn-

Dear General Van Fleet:

I hope that by this time you have had an opportunity to see the hour television show we shot at Christmas-time in Korea. The response to it by Korean veterans was altogether favorable and that was all we cared about. I retain fond memories of the generous co-operation we received from you and your entire Command.

I understand that you are to arrive in San Francisco on either the twenty-fourth or twenty-fifth. I would be honored if you would consent to answer a few questions on my radio program, 4:45-5:00 PM San Francisco time, for six or seven minutes.

It is my understanding that your retirement is effective April 1, and I would like also to suggest that we do a rather more extended interview on SEE IT NOW on Sunday, April 5. This could be done from Washington, New York, or almost any other metropolitan point where you might be. I would assume that this would be your first major public statement after your retirement.

re: E. R. Murrow

August 11, 1954

Senator Bricker was invited to discuss the Bricker Amendment on "See It Now" on January 12, 1954. At that time we did not know when the other Senator would be, and Bricker placed no restrictions upon us. However, two days later when we informed him it would be Robert Humphrey, Bricker rejected him as not being a constitutional lawyer and not knowing enough about the proposed amendment. After some soul-searching, we agreed to invite someone else. Usually, we don't like to think that debaters on "See It Now" can dictate their opponents, but we were bound in, because you just can't do the Bricker Amendment without Senator Bricker. We settled on Senator Estes Kefauver, and the two Senators discussed the amendment from their respective offices. (The script of the show is attached.)

Neither Senator was ever told that the entire half hour would be devoted to their participation, and at the middle mark we politely interrupted for the commercial and then went to other constitutional experts for their opinions....Former Supreme Court Justice Owen Roberts, Professor Finch of Georgetown and Dean Griswold of Harvard. After airtime it was obvious that Senator Bricker and my I add Senator Kefauver were not happy with the amount of time they had had, and Ed expressed his regrets...stating that the issue would be around for a considerable length of time, and that perhaps we could try it again in the future. Senator Bricker confidently told us that the issue would not be around for very long, and his implication was that it would be passed within a few weeks. Actually, a step-watch check afterwards showed that Bricker had 27 seconds more than did Kefauver. Murrow and Friendly were both convinced we had scheduled too many people for so short a period of time and for so complicated an issue.

On January 26th we tried again. We covered a meeting of the Women for the Bricker Amendment in Washington. Frank E. Hobman, often called the co-author of the bill, spoke for 6:06 seconds... and John W. Davis, one of the leaders of the anti-group, spoke for 4:25 seconds.

On neither program did Murrow or "See It Now" take an editorial stand either for or against the Bricker Amendment.

c.c. E. R. Murrow

August 11, 1954

Senator Bricker was invited to discuss the Bricker Amendment on "See It Now" on January 12, 1954. At that time we did not know who the other Senator would be, and Bricker placed no restrictions upon us. However, two days later when we informed him it would be Hubert Humphrey, Bricker rejected him as not being a constitutional lawyer and not knowing enough about the proposed amendment. After some soul-searching, we agreed to invite someone else. Normally, we don't like to think that debaters on "See It Now" can dictate their opponents, but we were bound in, because you just can't do the Bricker Amendment without Senator Bricker. We settled on Senator Burke Hickenlooper, and the two Senators discussed the amendment from their respective offices. (The script of the show is attached.)

Neither Senator was ever told that the entire half hour would be devoted to their participation, and at the middle mark we politely interrupted for the commercial and then went to other constitutional experts for their opinions....Former Supreme Court Justice Owen Roberts, Professor Finch of Georgetown and Dean Griswold of Harvard. After airtime it was obvious that Senator Bricker and may I add Senator Hickenlooper were not happy with the amount of time they had had, and Ed expressed his regrets...stating that the issue would be around for a considerable length of time, and that perhaps we could try it again in the future. Senator Bricker confidently told us that the issue would not be around for very long, and his implication was that it would be passed within a few weeks. Actually, a stop-watch check afterwards showed that Bricker had 27 seconds more than did Hickenlooper. Murrow and Friendly were both convinced we had scheduled too many people for so short a period of time and for so complicated an issue.

On January 26th we tried again. We covered a meeting of the Women for the Bricker Amendment in Washington. Frank E. Hobman, often called the co-author of the bill, spoke for 6:06 seconds... and John W. Davis, one of the leaders of the anti-group, spoke for 4:25 seconds.

On neither program did Murrow or "See It Now" take an editorial stand either for or against the Bricker Amendment.

BRICKER AMENDMENT

MURROW:

This is the Constitution of the United States. Since 1789, it has been the supreme law of the land. In those 165 years, it has been changed or amended only 22 times and 10 of those were the Bill of Rights in 1791. Now we are engaged in a vital controversy concerning a basic change in the President's power. Tonight SEE IT NOW devotes its entire half hour to the Bricker Amendment which could become the 23rd Amendment to the Constitution.

MURROW:

Good evening. This is a true copy ofour Constitution loaned to us by the National Archives. It spells out in details the President's treaty making power. In Article 2, Section 2, Clause 2, it says: "The President shall have the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties provided two-thirds of the Senators concur." From President Washington to President Eisenhower, Presidents have negotiated and arranged treaties with the advice and consent of the Senate under these provisions. Some 852 of them all together. But about 29 precent of the treaties proposed have been killed by the vote of the Senate, including the Treaty of Versailles. Here is S.J. Resolution 1, 83rd Congress, First Session. It bears the name of Senator Bricker of Ohio. It drastically changes and limits the treaty making powers of the President. When this Amendment comes to the Floor of the Senate, perhaps in the next two weeks, Senator Bricker will, of course, lead the fight for it. The principle spokesman for the opposition will be Senator Estes Kefauver. We are going down to Washington tonight to have these 2 Senators discuss this proposed Amendment from their two offices. Later on, we will ask the opinion of Former Justice Owen J. Roberts of the Supreme Court and...Senator John Bricker, Republican from Ohio., Republican candidate for V. Pst. in 1944. Good evening Senator Bricker. And Senator Estes Kefauver, Democrat of Tennessee, a candidate for the Democratic nomination in 1952, Good evening, Senator Kefauver....

KEFAUVER:

How do you do, Ed. Good to see you.
tb

MURROW:

Now, Senator Bricker, since you proposed this Amendment, perhaps you would briefly explain why you advocate an Amendment to the Constitution.

SENATOR BRICKER:

Yes Mr. Murrow. I am mighty happy to have this opportunity to clarify some of the issues in this discussion and debate, and to remove some of the objections because of their invalidity. First of all, this Amendment which has been submitted by myself with 63 other Senators does not radically nor drastically change the power of the President to make treaties. It does not change his power to make treaties at all as far as international affairs are concerned. It does somewhat restrict his personal option to enter into international arrangements by Executive agreements. The real purpose of S.J. Resolution number 1 is to preserve the sovereignty and the constitution of the U.S. from abuses of the treaty power that were not anticipated in 1787. The Amendment does not affect the traditional function of treaty making as it existed from 1787 down to the formation of the United Nations. For 150 years, treaties were concerned with the nation's external affairs. They were not used to regulate the rights of American people on purely domestic matters. United Nations officials and one world are in general now boast of revolutionizing the treaty making power. The issues in this Amendment may be best described in reading the language of the Amendment itself. Section 1 of the Amendment reads as follows: "A provision of a treaty which conflicts with this Constitution shall not be of any force or effect." That preserves the constitution.

tb (MORE)

SEN. BRICKER: (CTD)

The minority report of the Judiciary Committee signed by Senator Kefauver and 3 other Senators states on Page 41 that if the validity of all treaties made by the United States must await some final constitutional determination, other nations would be reluctant to make treaties with us. In practically every other nation of the world, that situation prevails. Now, Section 2 of the Amendment, and I will read the rest of it, if you don't mind, Estes. 2:37

KEFAUVER:

Yes. Go ahead.

BRICKER:

"A treaty shall become effective as internal law in the United States only through legislation which would be valid in the absence of ~~the~~ a Treaty." Opponents of the Amendment believe that the United Nations treaty should make domestic law for the American people. Supporters of the Amendment insist that the legislative powers be retained in the Congress and State Legislatures. Section 3 of the Amendment provides in part: "Congress shall have power to regulate all executive and other agreements with any foreign power or international organization." Opponents of the Amendment believe that the President should have full power to make executive agreements in lieu of treaties. Supporters of the Amendment have learned the lesson of Yalta. They do not want the President, without the consent of the Senate or of Congress, to commit the United States, perhaps in secret, to expensive, and far reaching international obligations. 1:00

MURROW:

Senator Kefauver?
tb

SENATOR KEFAUVER:

Ed, I am very happy to have this opportunity on your program of telling why I oppose this Amendment. I have here to start with, Ed, George Washington's farewell address, and in his address he said that "experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of existing constitution of a nation"and he warned against changes upon the credit of mere hypotheses and opinion exposes to perpetual changes from the endless variety of hypotheses and opinion. I think George Washington and the Founding Fathers were right about the constitution, and I prefer the constitution written by the Founding Fathers rather than one that might be written by Senator Bricker, with all due regards to my good friend. It should be borne in mind that this system that we have has always worked pretty well. First, a treaty is negotiated by the President of the United States who must necessarily represent the nation in foreign affairs, and by his Secretary of State, and then it's sent up to the United States Senate where it must be ratified by a two-thirds majority of the United States Senate. Well, that means that it has to have bi-partisan support. I don't know of any treaty or any agreement that anyone complains of. It's all a fear of the future. As a matter of fact, during all of -- and it might be pointed out, that these very same arguments that Senator Bricker is making against the constitution now were made in the Constitutional Convention and were rejected. It was fully considered by our Founding Fathers and they decided upon this very excellent method of deciding upon treaties.

KEFAUVER: (CTD)

During most of our national history, it has always been considered that treaties were too difficult to be made because it required two-thirds of the Senate. As a matter of fact, the League of Nations was turned down becausa it couldn't get two-thirds, and then.... Now, however, for the first time, it's considered that it's too easy to make treaties, and Senator Bricker and others would like to put shackles upon the President in the handling of the foreign affairs of this nation. So, from one extreme to the other, I think is convincing proof that we are just about right in what we want to do. Now, it's a strange thing to me, Mr. Murrow, that those who want to amend and change the constitution say they are trying to protect the sovereignty and the constitution of this nation. It seems to me that when you are trying to change something, that shows that you are not protecting the rights that are under that Constitution. Here is the Constitution. All of the Rights. It's protected the rights of our people for 165 years. I could tear this constitution. I would just be tearing a piece of paper, but the way Senator Bricker wants to tear it or emasculate it, is changing it all together. It's changing the executive power of the President so that he will, in the future, if his amendment is adopted, be a mere messenger boy of the Congress insofar as foreign affairs are concerned.... It would take us out with.....

KEFAUVER: (CONT'D.)

Here is a newspaper for instance. "ALLIES AGREE TO REOPEN KOREAN TALKS." That might not be possible if Senator Bricker's Amendment were adopted, because that is an executive agreement. So, at a very time when our nation must be able to deal in the foreign field - when if we are going to have peace in the world, a chance to avoid wars every 25 years, our nation must exert an effective leadership. We must be able to make treaties and agreements, try to bring about peaceful settlements and world stability - at a time when that's so necessary-- it would seem to be the very worse time imaginable to amend the constitution so as to make it almost impossible to operate the executive part of the Department of the Government in the field of international relations. 4:19

MURROW:

What do you say to that, Senator Bricker?

KEFAUVER:

Let me just say that I had a telegram just today from a great constitutional lawyer in which he says that the "which" clause that's in the first section that Senator Bricker read, is a shocking attempt to set us back into the very situation of national impotence which is one of the main causes for the downfall of the Articles of Confederation. This is from John W. Davis whom we all know to be a great constitutional lawyer. '28

mw

MURROW:

I think we ought to give Senator Bricker a chance, Estes.

BRICKER

In regards to John Davis. John Davis doesn't want to be guilty of infanticide. He was the one who created the theory through the treaty with Great Britain on migratory birds that led to all the confusion and danger that we are confronted with at this time that makes necessary this Amendment. First of all , I cannot over-emphasize the fact that this does not in any way interfere with the President's treaty power in foreign affairs. ~~I~~ The Pt. will execute treaties just as he always has, they will be ratified by the Senate - by two-thirds vote of those who are voting on it just as they always have. There will be no interference with that in any way, shape or form. What we do ... just a minute. What we do do is prevent the Pt. and two-thirds of the Senate of making domestic law contrary to the provisions of the constitution. Now, Estes said a moment ago -- Senator Kefauver said that George Washington had implored us not to change the constitution casually. Let me emphasize the fact that during his administration, the constitution was changed. The Bill of Rights was submitted by his First Congress and was ratified by three-fourths of the States. Now, what did that do? That wrote indelibly into the constitution ~~with~~ the inalienable rights of the American people, for 150 years. Nobody ever questioned but what those rights were secure.

(MORE)

BRICKER: (CONT'D.)

Then came MISSOURI vs. HOLLAND with the theory that by treaty you can break down the constitution of the U. S. and transfer powers from the states to the Congress. Secretary Dulles said you can transfer them to an international organization likewise. Well then, that was not particularly dangerous because the effects were salutary in that treaty until the sub organizations of the United Nations began to evolve treaties -- some 200 of them -- which would effect the inalienable rights of the American people under the constitution and under Article 6 interpreted as it is by the Supreme Court, they would become the supreme law of the land. They would wipe out state laws, state constitutions, laws of Congress, and cut across the protecting provisions of the Constitution of the U.S. 2:22 ✓

KEFAUVER:

May I have a word to say, Ed?

MURROW:

Go ahead.

KEFAUVER:

In the first place, Senator Bricker's amendment would very drastically alter the treaty making power. Section 2 would make it ... would require that not only it be signed by the President and passed by two-thirds of the Senate as a regular treaty, but it must be passed back through Congress by a majority of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and then be signed by the President again until it becomes domestic law. mw

BRICKER:

I didn't refer to anything of the kind, Estes. You appreciate that.

KEFAUVER:

Well, just a minute, let me explain where it does change drastically the treaty making power - then the second part would be -- which would be valid in the absence of treaty -- that manifestly would prevent the President and the Senate from making treaties that involved domestic state laws; and that's one of the very reasons that the Federal Government was founded, because the states were making separate treaties themselves, and it was necessary to have one Federal Government - one central person operating in the treaty field. That was not first discovered in HOLLAND vs. MISSOURI. As far back as eighteen hundred -- as far back as 1796, the Supreme Court said that in certain fields, the Pt. and the Senate did have a right to make treaties that affected all of the States. 1:20

MURROW:

Well gentlemen -- Senator Kefauver and Senator Bricker, I am sorry we have gone back to the point. We must interrupt this for the time being, Senator Kefauver and Senator Bricker have been discussing the Bricker Amendment, and we will continue with this discussion after this brief word from ALCOA.

mw

MURROW:

As we have discovered, learned lawyers can disagree as to the meaning and the effects of the Bricker Amendment to the Constitution. It has to do with how we conduct our contractual relations with foreign countries. We have asked three distinguished lawyers, one of them a former Justice of the Supreme Court, to give us their opinion. We went first to Cambridge, Massachusetts, to Irwin N. Griswald, the Dean of Harvard Law School.

IRWIN N. GRISWALD:

This is an attack upon the Union itself. Under the Bricker Amendment, we would cease to be one united nation and would revert to the chaos of a collection of a number of semi-independent states. Can you imagine the President negotiating a treaty with a staff made up not merely of representatives of the House and the Senate of the Congress of the U.S., but also of representatives of the House and Senate of each one of the legislatures of all of the 48 states? To adopt the Bricker Amendment would take away a piece of the Presidency. It would split up the treaty power so as to make it not only cumbersome but largely ineffective. Under such an arrangement, the President would no longer be the spearhead of our foreign policy but only a figurehead. The Bricker Amendment would have been rejected by the Constitution makers of 1787. They would have regarded it as wholy inconsistent with the nation they were establishing. Let us be as wise as they were.

1:17

MURROW

From Harvard Law School we went to Georgetown University, Washington, and Professor George A. Finch who teaches International Law. mw

FINCH:

The ordinary concept of a treaty is that it is a contract between nations but in this country we have a unique provision in our constitution that a treaty is also the supreme law of the land superseding all previous Feredal legislation and all State laws and constitutions that may be in conflict with the treaty. The Bricker Amendment has become necessary at this time because of the great enlargement of questions that have become the subject of treaty making, especially since the advent of the United Nations when attempts are being made through the human rights covenant, the Genocide Convention, and other like documents, to prescribe by treaty, the domestic situation of Citizens within their own country towards their own government. We are being presented with treaties governing almost every phase of our internal life; our human relations with each other and with the State; our labor relations; such questions as the protection of motherhood, and a vast array of other subjects that have already been made the subject of treaties under the auspices of the United Nations, or are in the making. Now, it must be realized that when the U.S. ratifies any of these treaties, they, under our constitution, become binding upon our people within the states and within territories with all Federal jurisdiction -- without any action at all by Congress or by the State Legislatures. Now, it is the purpose of the Bricker Amendment to restore the balance between what we regard as essentially our domestic and local affairs and what the administration may regard as proper subjects of international negotiation.

res (MORE)

FINCH:
(CTD)

The Bricker Amendment would declare first that any treaty in conflict with the Constitution would be of no force or effect. It would then declare that no treaty shall become internal law in the U.S. except by competent legislation, so that our people would not be bound by a law which the Congress or State Legislature hadn't properly enacted in accordance with the Constitution. 2:54

MURROW:

Next, Former Justice of the Supreme Court of the U.S. Owen J. Roberts, a Republican, appointed by Hoover in 1930; later, Dean of the Law School at the University of Pennsylvania.

OWEN J. ROBERTS:

At first glance, the Bricker Amendment appears to be perhaps advantageous - certainly not detrimental to the interests of the U.S. When studied in connection with the constitutional system of this country, it turns out to be one of the most dangerous proposals that has ever been made to the people of the U.S. Now, the proposal is - and a most dangerous proposal --- that no treaty shall be valid until both Houses of Congress ratify it, and that it shall not be valid unless it deals with a subject which Congress could implement by legislation.

res

OWEN J. ROBERTS:

Now, that means that in great areas where we may need to make treaties binding on all the people, the treaty may never become enforced, and until every State, by its legislature, passes it. Now this is contrary to the principle of the constitution which by its very words provides that no state may make a treaty with a foreign government, but apart from that, this violates the separation of powers so sedulously provided by the Constitution..
For in order to make a treaty now, the Pt. negotiates it on behalf of the U.S., the Senate confirms it, and it becomes the superior law of the land. The Bricker Amendment provides against a treaty going into force as the Constitution now provides - we are going to practically not get treaties from our friends and other nations because they will feel that after they have signed the treaty -- after they have negotiated with the greatest care, after the Senate has gone over it with a fine toothcomb, and the Senate has turned down treaty after treaty, and it didn't become effective, or made reservations before it became effective, it may not be a treaty for years and may never be a treaty because of all these other hobbles put in the way. Now, I go to one other provision of the Bricker Amendment that I think is even more dangerous than that I mentioned. It is provided that the Congress may regulate the making of Executive agreements by the Pt. Now, there are many things that have to be agreed between nations that don't rise to the dignity of the treaty and need not.
res

OWEN J. ROBERTS:

And from the days of Geo. Washington to this very day, every Pt. of the U.S. has made numerous executive agreements about tariffs, about immigration, about details of those things to implement the Acts of Congress. Indeed, in many cases what is going to happen? Under the decisions of the Supreme Court, the word "regulate" in the Constitution means,-if wanted to,-"to prohibit". So that if Congress wants to prohibit all executive agreements under this language, they can prohibit them. In other words, they can say to the Pt. of the U.S., "You mustn't make any" or "you mustn't make any unless you show them to us -- in advance." Well, the foreign affairs - the details-- the day-to-day give-and-take between nations, will practically be impossible of accomplishment under this provision. So I say that the people of the U.S. ought not to change a provision that has been in the Constitution and has worked. 3:48

MURROW:

We have been considering the Bricker Amendment which proposes to change somewhat the treaty making powers of the Pt. of the U.S. And, as you have heard, we have really only nibbled at the edges of it. Last July, Pt. Eisenhower said that he opposed any amendment that would change the traditional treaty making powers of the Pt. The fate of the Bricker Amendment may well hinge upon whether ~~of~~ or not the Pt. chooses to use his very considerable personal power and prestige either for or against this particular Amendment.
res

MURROW:
(CTD)

We have a tradition in this country - a long habit of thinking and arguing and exposing to the light of day in public opinion, a proposed constitutional amendment. If we pursue that habit, there will be no opportunity and no occasion for anyone to regret the outcome - whatever it may be. We are grateful to those people who have contributed to this discourse tonight.

Good night and good luck.

SHOW #19 SEE IT NOW JANUARY 26, 1954

BRICKER AMENDMENT

PAGE ONE

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Good evening. Tonight, on SEE IT NOW, some words from Benjamin Franklin; some words and pictures from Mr. Herbert Hoover; also from John W. Davis and Senator John Bricker, and a report on the coffee crisis. Someone once said that you can always get the truth from a man who is past 70 or who has given up all hope of being President. Mr. Hoover and Mr. Franklin both qualify in this area. The other day the International Benjamin Franklin Society awarded Mr. Hoover a gold medal, and in accepting it, he reminisced a little bit about the "great man" and added a few comments of his own.

HERBERT HOOVER:

This indeed is a Benjamin Franklin Week and it is an evidence that Benjamin Franklin still lives among the American people. Now, my first acquaintance with him began very early, when like most school boys of my day, I received much drilling in Franklin's precepts. They at times seriously limited my freedom of action and my projected enterprises. Especially objectionable was his remark about early to bed and its consequences in health and wealth provided you got up early in the morning.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Mr. Franklin on the subject of thrift.

ras

HERBERT HOOVER:

Now, aside from human liberty, Ben's great design of American life, or what we call his ideology these days, had its central idea in frugality and thrift and hard work. In fact, he conducted a propaganda campaign onthat subject for some sixty odd years, and his slogan sunk so deep in the american mind that we practiced it for a little while. However, that was before we discovered the theory of spending ourselves into prosperity.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Mr. Franklin, and Mr. Hoover, on the source of power and politics.

HERBERT HOOVER:

Franklin made one remark that is of powerful weight today. He said that "God helps those who help themselves". That has become the motto of every pressure group in the United States...but I won't pursue that pessimistic subject.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Mr. Franklin's philosophy on political jobs.

HERBERT HOOVER:

Franklin announced a formula for public office. He said, "Never ask for it; never refuse it; never resign from it". Now, the present administration in Washington has found that the "never resign" part is still in action. But again, I must not pursue that topic here.

ras

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Ben Franklin on controversy and the Republic.

HERBERT HOOVER:

On all controversial matters Franklin was a tolerant soul. He cautioned us that by collision of different sentiments, sparks of truth are struck, and the political light is obtained. I hope so...but I will not illuminate this any further.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Mr. Hoover on firebrands and dissenters.

HERBERT HOOVER:

Among his friends were Burke and Tom Payne. It is sometimes overlooked that it was Franklin who paid Tom Payne ship fare across the Atlantic, and set that firebrand of liberty on these shores. It was Tom Payne, then a soldier in the Continental Army, who as a ghost writer for George Washington, composed that blazing document which Washington proclaimed to his dejected troops, revitalizing them to the victorious crossing of the Delaware. Tom Payne was the crusading spirit and his rights of man truly stirred the emotions of the colonies for independence and personal liberty to their very depths, but Franklin was the architect of that independence and liberty.

-more-

HERBERT HOOVER: (CTD)

It was Joseph Choate who made that immortal remark that when the spirit of Franklin dies or decays, the sun of America will have begun to set.

Thank you.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Most of us probably read or listen to the news in the morning with a cup of coffee - but coffee itself has become news. There are predictions that it may go to fifteen cents a cup - perhaps a dollar and twenty cents a pound. So we thought we would take you down to the International Coffee Exchange here in New York where it all happens -- where the coffee is bought and sold. Our reporter, Palmer Williams; Cameraman Leo Rossi.

J.A. HIGGINS, JR:

My name is J.A. Higgins, Jr., a broker on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, and a member of the Public Relations Committee. We are happy to have you, the public, here today with us -- to see us in operation in the coffee futures market. We want to tell you a little about what a futures market is... a futures market where commodities are bought and sold for future delivery.

-more-

ras

J.A. HIGGINS JR. (CTD)

This is probably the least understood market place in the world. This is an open market where the forces of supply and demand come into clash and the price is worked out. These markets -- these future markets have been aptly called servants of producers and consumers because they do the almost magical thing of raising the price for the producer at the same time they lower the price for the consumer -- and I will tell you just why and how. You see the ring in operation here. This man over the other side of the ring is bidding. This man represents a large trade - both of the producers and the consumers. This young man over here to the right normally represents one of the large importing houses. One of the brokers offering to buy March and sell May at ten points which means if he can buy the March contract at ten points under the May, he will do both ends of that trade. That is known as a "switch". I want to emphasize this --- neither this Exchange nor any other futures Exchange makes price. This Exchange - this market no more makes price than a thermometer makes the weather, and this system has been called the finest system of marketing ever devised by the mind of man .

EDWARD R. MURROW

This, too, is part of the Coffee Exchange. Here in the tasting room the endless cupping of the coffee samples which will be on the grocery counters next year.

These experts sniff it and taste it, but no coffee is ever swallowed. It dulls the taste bud.

COFFEE SAMPLER:

We are looking for a mildness and a mellowness in the coffee that we call soft and strictly soft flavor. If that is not there, then we call it harsh, hard, rough, edgey ... other trade terms indicating the degree of lack of mellowness that we find.

ANOTHER COFFEE SAMPLER:

We have another term that's called earthy. That's just like the flavor of the soil in which the coffee in grown - and then we have another term which is called hidei or fomented. That's just what the term implies. It's sourish, strong in flavor, and the blenders particularly try to avoid that kind of coffee because it's detrimental to the overtone of the blends.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

One of the chief critics of the Coffee Exchange is Senator Guy Gillette of Iowa, who thinks coffee trading should be under the control of the Commodities Exchange Authority as on cotton, wheat, corn, and potatoes.

SENATOR GUY GILLETTE:

Coffee occupies a peculiar position. There is no commodity that comes to my mind immediately on which we are more dependent on foreign production than coffee, and relative to which the United States furnishes over 85 percent of the market. I am constrained to conclude because of what has been the result of our investigations that we made before and what is presented now, that there is no such condition of supply and demand as to warrant these increases.

(MORE)

SENATOR GUY GILLETTE: (CTD)

That they are in large measure at least due to the manipulation of the market through the Coffee Exchange ... not only by residents of America but by residents abroad. There is no doubt that there are speculative controls that are manipulating this market, and there's no question that it's up to the Justice Department -- the Legislative Department to take action to protect the American consumer The ... the question is rasied....the criticism is raised that we must maintain the good neighbor policy. I am agreeable to that. We should maintain the good neighbor policy but not at the expense of gouging the American consuming public at the sweet will of a group of gamblers, whether they be American gamblers or South American gamblers.

J.M. O'CONNOR:

Mr. Murrow, I am J.M. O'Connor, the President of the National Coffee Association. Now, people have been asking why the recent increases in the price of coffee. Green coffee prices have been going up because for the past seven years world coffee consumption has been outstripping coffee production. This deficit has been made up from surpluses which were carried over from previous good crops. However, those surpluses have now been depleted. On top of this, Brazil has had two successive crop failures.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

With the possible exception of the housewife, the men caught in the middle are the local grocers across the country, We visited Robert Citrin in his Bronx delicatessen.

ROBERT CITRIN:

Mr. Murrow, my name is Robert Citrin. I own a delicatessen store on Edward L. Grand Highway. A customer come in this morning. She asked me for a pound of coffee and I gave her a pound of coffee. She says, "How much is it?" I said, "A dollar, four cents." She says, "You are a robber. That's too much money for a pound of coffee." I says, "Why don't you buy something else? Buy tea; buy cocoa; buy anything else because coffee's due to the fact because you people come in for the coffee." If everybody will stop buying the coffee -- buy something else, then the coffee will drop. When I used to sell it for thirty-five cents a pound, I used to make as high as eight and nine cents a pound. Now when I sell a pound of coffee I don't make nothing on it. Besides this, we are losing money. They got to put it in a ten-pound bag which cost me almost a cent. We don't get to sell the coffee because maybe tomorrow the coffee will rise. We have to pay as high as maybe a dollar five cents or a dollar seven cents - which a customer come in. She says, "Give me 5 pounds of coffee." I says, Lady, you don't need 5 pounds of coffee." She says, "Why?" I says, "I can't sell 5 pounds of coffee because you are going to hoard it." She says, "I heard on the radio it's going to be a dollar twenty-five cents." I says, "Don't buy the 5 pounds. Give a chance to somebody else. Maybe somebody else will buy another pound of coffee." She says, "I don't care about nobody else."

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Robert Citrin and others have been discussing the coffee prices. It looks as if the prices are going to go up. They also sell a pretty fair cup of coffee at the Waldorf Astoria, and the Aluminum Company of America would like to take you there now . . not for coffee, but to see some automobiles and also to learn something more about aluminum.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

The Bricker Amendment limiting the President's treaty making power may reach the floor of the Senate tomorrow or the next day. The President has said he is unalterably opposed to it. Yesterday, the Women For the Bricker Amendment had a meeting in Washington and our camera was there.

MRS. MURRAY:

Will the National Convention of Vigilant Women for the Bricker Amendment please come to order. I am happy to welcome so many of you here today...Vigilant Women and friends and Americans. It gives me a great deal of pleasure now to give to you, Winnie Barker, our National Coordinator.

WINNIE BARKER:

Thank you, Mrs. Murray. When Mrs. Murray asked me to speak this afternoon I didn't know whether I could or not, because I had a lump in my throat and a lump in my heart ... a prayer in my heart. I think we have a great deal to be thankful for today. First of all, we are thankful for this great country of ours and that we still have the right to come here and petition our Congress for what we think is right for our country. Secondly, (APPLAUSE)... secondly, we are very thankful that we have Senator Bricker and his Joint Resolution Number 1. (APPLAUSE). Third, we are thankful because we have Mr. Frank Holman, one of the architects of the Bricker Amendment.

SENATOR BRICKER

Mr. Holman, my friends all, we will need all the help that we can get. There is an organized campaign of opposition with which I was threatened a month ago by those who had no business doing it, and further threats were made in a way on the floor of the Senate today, saying that they had resolutions of organizations representing twenty million people. This group represents America -- not a segment, not a minority group, but the heart and soul of patriotic America. (APPLAUSE) This will preserve the position of the states in our Federal Union and when you destroy the Federal Union, you have destroyed the very foundation of the Republic, and I was not elected to the Senate to let that happen in this country. (APPLAUSE) I will have a lot to say about this in the next few days; but let me say that I appreciate the petitions which you have brought to Washington. The Constitution preserves that right to you -- to petition your Government for the redress of grievances. There are many things in that basic law that we don't want violated. The Congress can't violate them. The States can't -- but now a loophole has been found by the intriguers and by those who will build the international government of one world to which we would be subject, to get through the provisions of the Constitution by treaty law -- knock them down. And that's what we want to prevent. Thank you one and all. I don't want to miss a record vote on the floor.

MRS. MURRAY

Mr. Holman. (APPLAUSE)

MR. FRANK E. HOLMAN

I felt this new concept was so serious that if allowed to flower out and develop, its roots and its trunk and everything would grow right up inside the Constitution and break the Constitution apart and destroy the Federal Republic. Now, Mr. Dulles in his testimony - and at Boston -- he said, "You can trust us. You have got a good administration now." But Jefferson said in substance, "Yes, but trust not in the goodness of man. Tie him down with the chains of the Constitution." (APPLAUSE) How are you going to stop this unless you do exactly what Jefferson did with the Bill of Rights? He said, All right, it may be understood you may have a good administration. You may have some other good administration, but I want it spelled out in language so clear that no Court and no officer of Government will ever misunderstand that freedom of speech and freedom of petition is not to be touched by the Federal Government. I say, with Jefferson, if it were not necessary, what harm can possibly result by writing out so that no officer of government or no court will ever misunderstand that a treaty shall not be superior to the Constitution as Mr. Dulles says it can be. The very fact he said that is the open road. Isn't it? When a man on horseback comes along he can say ... well, back in the Eisenhower administration with the distinguished Secretary of State ... he said a treaty could override the Constitution; that it could transfer power from the Congress to the President. Think of that. With your help and God giving us the time to live it out and to fight it through, and weather the storm of abuse that's been heaped on Senator Bricker and some of the rest of us, we will win this fight and we will save the Republic. (APPLAUSE) 6:06

EDWARD R. MURROW

Back in New York, we asked another constitutional lawyer for his opinion on the Bricker Amendment. This is John W. Davis. He ran against Coolidge for the Presidency in 1924. In his 80 years, he has argued more cases before the Supreme Court than any man who ever lived.

JOHN W. DAVIS

Mr. Murrow, my friends of the audience, I am glad to be here tonight to tell you why I am opposed to the Bricker Amendment. Now, what about the proponents of the Bricker Amendment? I do not doubt their sincerity. I do not think they have any purpose to injure their country. I have no doubt they believe they are engaged in a meritorious and worthy effort. Why should there be so much difference between their points of view and that of men like myself who believe that they are utterly mistaken? I think the trouble with those who put forward the Bricker Amendment is that they are seeing ghosts. They are taking council of their fears. They are imagining all sorts of future disasters which have no substance whatever in point of fact. What is there in the history of this country over a hundred and sixty-four years that leads them to believe that they must change our entire system to ward off impending dangers? Why should the Senate of the United States no longer trust itself to perform its constitutional duty in the ratification of treaty? Why should citizens fear that Senators who have taken an oath to obey the Constitution of the United States would deliberately break it when they come to the formation and the ratification of treaty? What are these dangers that these gentlemen fancy?

JOHN W. DAVIS (CTD)

It's true there may be proposals in the world which they do not approve, but the Constitution's provided that oath-bound officers shall pass on those proposals before they can become any part of the law or of the treaties of the United States. Somewhere, there must be trust in man. Power may be abused - that's true of all power from a Constable up to a President. Abuse is always possible. But overriding all possibility of abuse, there remains under our system, the power of Congress by statute to abolish or modify what we may have agreed to. The power of Congress by statute or resolution if it so pleases, to override any executive agreement which the President may offer. There is your Court of Appeal and if Congress itself did not choose to act, the Courts remain to strike down any provisional business which violates the Constitution of the United States. Is that not assurance enough? Is there not enough wisdom, integrity, patriotism in men who have been chosen for these great offices? Somewhere -- somewhere trust must be reposed - somewhere power must exist. It will not improve the situation by destroying power in order to prevent its abuse. I hope I have said enough to make it clear that I am against the Bricker Amendment on all counts. Good night.

EDWARD R. MURROW

For the past few minutes you have been listening to Senator John Bricker, Mr. Frank Holman, and John W. Davis, discussing the controversial Bricker Amendment.

Good night and good luck.

McCARTHY PROGRAMS

MURROW'S REPORT ON SENATOR JOSEPH R. McCARTHY - March 9, 1954

McCARTHY'S REPLY - April 6, 1954

MURROW'S COUNTER-REBUTTAL TO McCARTHY - April 6, 1954

MURROW ROOM FILE #7, DRAWERS "A" and "B" CONTAIN ALL MATERIALS PERTAINING TO SENATOR McCARTHY AND McCARTHYISM.

Mr. Friendly

SEE IT NOW with EDWARD R. MURROW - MARCH 9,1954

MURROW: Good evening. Tonight SEE IT NOW devotes its entire half hour to a report on Senator Joseph R. McCarthy told mainly in his own words and pictures. But first ALCOA would like you to meet a man who has been with them for 50 years.

(COMMERCIAL)

MURROW: Because a report on Senator McCarthy is by definition controversial we want to say exactly what we mean to say and I request your permission to read from the script whatever remarks Murrow and Friendly may make. If the Senator believes we have done violence to his words or pictures and desires to speak, to answer himself, an opportunity will be afforded him on this program. Our working thesis tonight is this question.

"If this fight against Communism is made a fight against America's two great political parties the American people know that one of these parties will be destroyed and the Republic cannot endure very long as a one party system."

We applaud that statement and we think Senator McCarthy ought to. He said it, 17 months ago in Milwaukee.

MC CARTHY: The American people realize this cannot be made a fight between America's two great political parties. If this fight against Communism is made a fight between America's two great political parties the American people know that one of those parties will be destroyed and the Republic cannot endure very long as a one party system.

MURROW: Thus on February 4th,1954, Senator Mc Carthy spoke of one party's treason. This was at Charleston, West Virginia where there were no cameras running. It was recorded on tape.

MC CARTHY: The issue between the Republicans and Democrats is clearly drawn. It has been deliberately drawn by those who have been in charge of 20 years of treason. The hard fact is - the hard fact is that those who wear the label, those who wear the label Democrat wear it with the stain of a historic betrayal.

MURROW: 17 months ago Candidate Eisenhower met Senator McCarthy in Green Bay, Wisconsin and he laid down the ground rules on how he would meet Communism if elected.

EISENHOWER: This is a pledge I make. If I am charged by you people to be the responsible head of the Executive Department it will be my initial responsibility to see that subversion, disloyalty, is kept out of the Executive Department. We will always appreciate and welcome Congressional investigation but the responsibility will rest squarely on the shoulders of the Executive and I hold that there are ample powers in the government to get rid of these people if the Executive Department is really concerned in doing it. We can do it with absolute assurance.

(APPLAUSE)

This is America's principle; Trial by jury, of the innocent until proved guilty, and I expect to stand to do it.

MURROW: That same night in Milwaukee, Senator McCarthy stated what he would do if the General was elected.

MC CARTHY: I spent about a half hour with the General last night. While I can't -- while I can't report that we agreed entirely on everything -- I can report that when I left that meeting with the General, I had the same feeling as when I went in, and that is that he is a great American, and will make a great President, an outstanding President. But I want to tell you tonight, tell the American people as long as I represent you and the rest of the American people in the Senate, I shall continue to call them as I see them regardless of who happens to be President.

MURROW: November 24th, 1953.

MC CARTHY: A few days ago I read that President Eisenhower expressed the hope that by election time in 1954 the subject of Communism would be a dead and forgotten issue. The raw, harsh unpleasant fact is that Communism is an issue and will be an issue in 1954.

MURROW: On one thing the Senator has been consistent... Often operating as a one-man committee, he has traveled far, interviewed many, terrorized some, accused civilian and military leaders of the past administration of a great conspiracy to turn the country over to Communism, investigated and substantially demoralized the present State Department, made varying charges, of espionage at Fort Monmouth. (The Army says it has been unable to find anything relating to espionage there.) He has interrogated a varied assortment of what he calls "Fifth Amendment Communists." Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont said of McCarthy today;

"He dons war paint; he goes into his war dance; he emits his war whoops; he goes forth to battle and proudly returns with the scalp of a pink Army dentist."

Other critics have accused the Senator of using the bull whip and smear. There was a time two years ago when the Senator and his friends said he had been smeared and bull whipped.

MR. KEEFE: You would sometimes think to hear the quartet that call themselves "Operation Truth" damning Joe McCarthy and resorting to the vilest smears I have ever heard. Well, this is the answer, and if I could express it in what is in my heart right now, I would do it in terms of the poet who once said:

Ah 'tis but a dainty flower I bring you,
Yes, 'tis but a violet, glistening with dew,
But still in its heart there lies beauties concealed
So in our heart our love for you lies unrevealed.

MC CARTHY: You know, I used to pride myself on the idea that I was a bit tough, especially over the past 18 or 19 months when we have been kicked around and bull whipped and damned. I didn't think that I could be touched very deeply. But tonight, frankly, my cup and my heart is so full I can't talk to you.

MURROW: But in Philadelphia, on Washington's Birthday, 1954, his heart was so full he could talk. He reviewed some of the General Zwicker testimony and proved he hadn't abused him.

MCCARTHY: Nothing is more serious than a traitor to this country in the Communist conspiracy. Question: Do you think stealing $50 is more serious than being a traitor to the country and a part of the Communist conspiracy?
Answer: That, sir, was not my decision.

Shall we go on to that for a while? I hate to impose on your time. I just got two pages. This is the abuse which is... the real meat of abuse, this is the Official reporter's record of the hearing. After he said he wouldn't remove that General from the Army who cleared Communists, I said: "Then General, you should be removed from any Command. Any man who has been given the honor of being promoted to General, and who says,'I will protect another general who protects Communists,' is not fit to wear that uniform, General."

(APPLAUSE)

"I think it is a tremendous disgrace to the Army to have to bring these facts before the public but I intend to give it to the public, General, I have a duty to do that. I intend to repeat to the press exactly what you said so that you can know that and be back here to hear it, General."

And wait 'til you hear the bleeding hearts scream and cry about our methods of trying to drag the truth from those who know, or should know, who covered up a Fifth Amendment Communist Major. But they say, 'Oh, it's all right to uncover them but don't get rough doing it, McCarthy.'

MURROW: But two days later, Secretary Stevens and the Senator had lunch, agreed on a memorandum of understanding, disagreed on what the small type said.

STEVENS: I shall never accede to the abuse of Army personnel under any circumstance including committee hearings. I shall not accede to them being brow beaten or humiliated. In the light of those assurances although I did not propose cancellation of the hearing, I acceded to it. If it had not been for these assurances, I would never have entered into any agreement whatsoever.

MURROW: Then President Eisenhower issued a statement that his advisers thought censored the Senator, but the Senator saw it as another victory, called the entire Zwicker case "a tempest in a teapot."

MC CARTHY: If a stupid, arrogant or witless man in a position of power appears before our Committee and is found aiding the Communist Party, he will be exposed. The fact that he might be a General places him in no special class as far as I am concerned. Apparently --apparently, the President and I now agree on the necessity of getting rid of Communists. We apparently disagree only on how we should handle those who protect Communists. When the shouting and the tumult dies the American people and the President will realize that this unprecedented mud slinging against the Committee by the extreme left wing elements of press and radio were caused solely because another Fifth Amendment Communist was finally dug out of the dark recesses and exposed to the public view.

MURROW: Senator McCarthy claims that only the left wing press criticized him on the Zwicker case. Of the 50 large circulation newspapers in the country, these are the left wing papers that criticized. These are the ones which supported him. The ratio is about three to one against the Senator. Now let us look at some of these left wing papers that criticized the Senator.

The Chicago Tribune; McCarthy will better serve his cause if he learns to distinguish the role of investigator from the role of avenging angel.

The New York Times; The unwarranted interference of a demagogue - a domestic Munich.

The Times Herald, Washington: Senator McCarthy's behavior towards Zwicker is not justified.

Then Herald Tribune of New York: McCarthyism involves assault on Republican assets.

Milwaukee Journal: The line must be drawn and defended or McCarthy will become the government.

The Evening Star of Washington: It was a bad day for everyone who resents and detests the bully boy tactics which Senator McCarthy often employs.

The New York World Telegram: Bamboozling, bludgeoning, distorting.

St. Louis Post Dispatch: Unscroupulous bullying. What tragic irony - the President's advisers keep him from doing what ever decent instinct must command him to do.

That is the ratio from three to one of the left wing press.

There was one other interesting quote on the Zwicker controversy, and it came from the Senator himself.

MCCARTHY: May I say that I was extremely shocked when I heard that Secretary Stevens told two Army officers they had to take part in the cover up of those who promoted and coddled Communists. As I read his statement, I thought of that quotation "On what meat doth this, our Caesar, feed?"

MURROW: And upon what meat does Sen. McCarthy feed? Two of the staples of his diet are the investigations (protected by immunity) and the half truth. We herewith sumbit samples of both. First, the half truth. This was an attack on Adlai Stevenson at the end of the '52 campaign. President Eisenhower, it must be said, had no prior knowledge of it.

MCCARTHY: I perform this unpleasant task because the American people are entitled to have the coldly documented history of this man who says he wants to be your President. But Strangely, Alger--I mean Adlai...but let's move on to another part of the jigsaw puzzle. While you may think that there can be no connection between the debonair Democrat candidate and a dilapidated Massachusetts barn, I want to show you a picture of this barn and explain the connection. Here is the outside of the barn. Give me the picture of the inside of the barn. Here is the outside of the barn at Lee, Mass. It looks as though it couldn't house a farmer's cow or goat. Here's the inside. (Showing picture) A beautiful, panelled conference room with maps of the Soviet Union. What way does Stevenson tie up with that?

My -my investigators went out and took pictures of the barn after we had been tipped off what was in it. Tipped off that there was in this barn all the missing documents from the Communist front-IPR. The IPR which was named by the McCarran Committee- named before the McCarran Committee as a coverup for Communist espionage. Let's take a look at the photostat of the document taken from the Massachusetts barn. One of those documents which was never supposed to see the light of day. Rather interesting it is. This is a document which shows that Alger Hiss and Frank Coe recommended Adlai Stevenson to the Mount Tremblant Conference which was called for the purpose of establishing foreign policy--post-war policy in Asia. As you know, Alger Hiss is a convicted traitor, Frank Coe is a man who has been named under oath before the Congressional Committee seven times as a member of the Communist Party. Why, why Hiss and Coe find that Adlai Stevenson is the man they want representing them at this conference? I don't know. Perhaps Adlai knows.

MURROW: But Sen. McCarthy didn't permit his audience to hear the entire paragraph. This is the official record of the McCarran hearings and anyone could have bought it for two dollars. Quote: "Another possibility for the Mount Tremblant Conferences on Asia is someone from Knox' office or Stimson's office." (Frank Knox was our wartime Secretary of the Navy; Henry Stimson our Secretary of the Army, both distinguished Republicans) Coe and Hiss mentioned Adlai Stevenson, one of Knox' special assistants and Harvey Bundy, former Assistant Secretary of State under Hoover, and now assistant to Stimson because of their jobs.

We read from this documented record not in defense of Mr. Stevenson, but in defense of truth. Specifically, Mr. Stevenson's identification with that red barn was no more, no less than that of Knox, Stimson, or Bundy. It should be stated that Mr. Stevenson was once a member of the Institute of Pacific Relations. But so were such other loyal Americans as Sen. Ferguson, John Foster Dulles, Paul Hoffman, Henry Luce, and Herbert F. Hoover. Their association carries with it no guilt, and that barn has nothing to do with any of them.

Now a sample investigation. The witness was Reed Harris, for many years a civil servant in the State Department directing the information service. Harris was accused of helping the Communistic cause by curtailing some broadcasts to Israel. Sen. McCarthy summoned him and questioned him about a book he had written in 1932.

MCCARTHY: Mr. Reed Harris, your name is Reed Harris? ANSWER: That's right.

MCCARTHY: You wrote a book in '32, is that correct? ANSWER: Yes, I wrote a book and as I testified in executive session --

MCCARTHY: At the time you wrote the book--pardon me, go ahead, I'm sorry, proceed.

ANSWER: --at the time I wrote the book the atmosphere in the universities of the United States was greatly affected by the great depression then in existence, the attitudes of students, the attitudes of the general public were considerably different than they are at this moment, and for one thing there certainly was no awareness to the degree that there is today of the way the Communist Party works.

MCCARTHY: You attended Columbia University in the early thirties, is that right.

ANSWER: I did, Mr. Chairman.

fad

MC CARTHY: Will you speak a little louder, sir?
Answer: I did, Mr. Chairman.

MC CARTHY: And you were expelled from Columbia?
Answer: I was suspended. from classes on April 1, 1932. I was later reinstated and I resigned from the University.

MC CARTHY: You resigned from the University. Did the Civil Liberties Union provide you with an attorney at that time?
Answer: I had many offers of attorneys and one of those was from the American Civil Liberties Union, yes.

MC CARTHY: The question is did the Civil Liberties Union supply you with an attorney?
Answer: They did supply an attorney.

MC CARTHY The answer is yes?
Answer: The answer is yes.

MC CARTHY: You know the Civil Liberties Union has been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist Party?
Answer: Mr. Chairman this was 1932.

MC CARTHY I know it was 1932, Do you know they since have been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist Party?
Answer: I do not know that they have been listed so, sir.

MC CARTHY You don't know they have been listed?
Answer: I have heard that mentioned or read that mentioned.

MC CARTHY You wrote a book in 1932. I'm going to ask you again at the time you wrote this book did you feel that professors should be given the right to teach sophomores that marriage "should be cast off of our civilization as antiquated and stupid religious phenomena?" Was that your feeling at that time?
Answer: My feeling was that professors should have the right to express their considered opinions on any subject whatever they were, sir.

MCCARTHY: I'm going to ask you this question again. ANSWER: That includes that quotation, they should have the right to teach anything that came to their mind as being a proper thing to teach.

MCCARTHY: I'm going to make you answer this. ANSWER: I'll answer yes, but you put an implication on it and you feature this particular point out of the book which of course is quite out of context, does not give a proper impression of the book as a whole. The American public doesn't get an honest impression of even that book bad as it is, from what you are quoting from it.

MCCARTHY: Then let's continue to read your own writings. ANSWER: 21 years ago again.

MCCARTHY: Yes, we shall try and bring you down to date if we can.

ANSWER: Mr. Chairman, two weeks ago Sen. Taft took the position that I taught 21 years ago, that Communists and Socialists should be allowed to teach in the schools. It so happens nowadays I don't agree with Sen. Taft as far as Communist teachers in the schools is concerned because I think Communists are in effect a plainclothes auxiliary of the Red Army, the Soviet Red Army, and I don't want to see them in any of our schools teaching.

MCCARTHY: I don't recall Sen. Taft ever having any of the background that you have got. ANSWER: I resent the tone of this inquiry very much, Mr. Chairman. I resent it not only because it is my neck, my public neck that you are I think very skillfully trying to wring, but I say it because there are thousands of able and loyal employees in the Federal government of the United States who have been properly cleared according to the laws and the security practices of their agencies as I was, unless the new regime says no. I was before.

QUESTION: Do you think this book you wrote then did considerable harm? Its publication might have had adverse influence on the public by an expression of views contained in it?

ANSWER: The sale of that book was so abysmally small, it was so unsuccessful that a question of its influence, really you can go back to the publisher, you'll see it was one of the most unsuccessful books he ever put out. He's still sorry about it just as I am.

QUESTION: Well I think that's a compliment to American intelligence I will say that.

MURROW: Sen. McCarthy succeeded only in proving that Reed Harris had once written a bad book which the American people had proved 22 years ago by not buying it, which is what they eventually do with all bad ideas. As for Reed Harris, his resignation was accepted a month later with a letter of commendation. McCarthy claimed it was a victory. The Reed Harris hearing demonstrates one of the Senator's techniques. Twice he said the American Civil Liberties Union was listed as a subversive front. The Attorney General's list does not and has never listed the ACLU as subversive nor does the FBI or any other government agency. And the American Civil Liberties Union holds in its files letters of commendation from President Eisenhower, President Truman, and Gen. MacArthur.

Now let us try to bring the McCarthy story a little more up to date. Two years ago Sen. Benton of Conn. accused McCarthy of apparent perjury, unethical practice and perpetrating a hoax on the Senate. McCarthy sued for two million dollars. Last week he dropped the case saying no one could be found who believed Benton's story. Several volunteers have come forward saying they believe it in its entirety.

Today Sen. McCarthy says he's going to get a lawyer and force the networks to give him time to reply to Adlai Stevenson's speech. Earlier, the Senator asked, "upon what meat does this our Caesar feed." Had he looked three lines earlier in Shakespeare's Caesar he would have found this line, which is not altogether inappropriate: "The fault, dear Brutus is not in our stars but in ourselves."

No one familiar with the history of this country can deny that Congressional committees are useful. It is necessary to investigate before legislating, but the line between investigation and persecuting is a very fine one and the junior senator from Wisconsin has stepped over it repeatedly. His primary achievement has been in confusing the public mind as between internal and the external threat of Communism. We must not confuse dissent with disloyalty. We must remember always that accusation is not proof and that conviction depends upon evidence and due process of law. We will not walk in fear, one of another. We will not be driven by fear into an age of unreason if we dig deep in our history and our doctrine, and remember that we are not descended from fearful men, not from men who feared to write, to speak, to associate and to defend causes which were for the moment unpopular.

MURROW: This is no time for men who oppose Sen.McCarthy's methods to keep silent, or for those who approve. We can deny our heritage and our history but we cannot escape responsibility for the result. There is no way for a citizen of a republic to abdicate his responsibilities. As a nation we have come into our full inheritance at a tender age. We proclaim ourselves, as indeed we are, the defenders of freedon, what's left of it, but we cannot defend freedom abroad by deserting it at home. The actions of the junior senator from Wisconsin have caused alarm and dismay amongst our allies abroad and given considerable comfort to our enemies, and whose fault is that? Not really his, he didn't create this situation of fear, he merely exploited it and rather successfully. Cassius was right, "The fault, dear Brutus is not in our stars, but in ourselves."

Good night, and good luck.

SEE IT NOW

APRIL 6th, 1954

MR. MURROW

Good Evening! This is See It Now, presented each week at this time by Alcoa, the Aluminum Company of America.

Tonight's report consists entirely of certain remarks by Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, and in order to present those remarks without interruption, we ask you now to look with us at this report from Alcoa.

(COMMERCIAL)

MR. MURROW

One month ago tonight, we presented a report on Senator Joseph R. McCarthy. We labeled it as controversial. Most of that report consisted of words and pictures of the Senator. At that time we said, if the Senator believes we have done violence to his words or pictures, if he desires to speak, to answer himself, an opportunity will be afforded him on this program.

The Senator sought the opportunity, asked for a delay of three weeks because he said he was very busy and he wished adequate time to prepare his reply.

MR. MURROW (CTD)

We agreed. We supplied the Senator with a kinescope of that program of March 9 and with such scripts and recordings as he requested. We placed no restrictions upon the manner or method of the presentation of his reply and we suggested that we would not take time to comment on this particular program.

The Senator chose to make his reply on film. Here now is Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, junior Senator from Wisconsin!

SENATOR MC CARTHY

Good evening.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow, educational director of the Columbia Broadcasting System, devoted his program to an attack on the work of the United States Senate Investigating Committee and on me personally as its chairman, and over the past four years he had made repeated attacks upon me and those fighting Communists.

Of course, neither Joe McCarthy nor Edward R. Murrow is of any great importance as individuals. We are only important in our relation to the great struggle to preserve our American liberties.

The Senate Investigating Committee has forced out of government and out of important defense plants Communists engaged in the Soviet conspiracy.

fad

You know it's interesting to note that the viciousness of Murrow's attacks is in direct ratio to our success in digging out Communists.

Now, ordinarily, I would not take time out from the important work at hand to answer Murrow. However, in this case I feel justified in doing so because Murrow is a symbol, the leader and the cleverest of the jackal pack which is always found at the throat of anyone who dares to expose individual Communists and traitors.

I am compelled by the facts to say to you that Mr. Edward R. Murrow, as far back as twenty years ago, was engaged in propaganda for Communist causes. For example, the Institute of International Education, of which he was the acting director, was chosen to act as a representative by a Soviet agency to do a job which would normally be done by the Russian Secret Police.

Mr. Murrow sponsored a Communist school in Moscow. In the selection of American students and teachers who were to attend, Mr. Murrow's organization acted for the Russian espionage and propaganda organization known as Voks. V-O-K-S. Many of those selected were later exposed as Communists. Murrow's organization selected such notorious Communists as Isadore Bugin, David Zablodowsky (sp). Incidentally, Zablodowsky was forced out of the United Nations, when my chief counsel presented his case to the grand jury and gave a picture of his Communist activities.

SENATOR MC CARTHY (CTD)

Now, Mr. Murrow, by his own admission, was a member of the IWW - that's the Industrial Workers of the World - a terrorist organization cited as subversive by an attorney general of the United States, who stated that it was an organization which seeks (and I quote) "to alter the Government of the United States by unconstitutional means." Now, other government committees have had before them actors, screen writers, motion picture producers, and others who admitted Communist affiliations but pleaded youth or ignorance. Now, Mr. Murrow can hardly make the same plea. On March 9 of this year, Mr. Murrow, a trained reporter, who had traveled all over the world, who was the educational director of CBS, followed implicitly the Communist line as laid down in the last six months, laid down not only by the Communist Daily Worker, but by the Communist magazine Political Affairs and by the National Conference of the Communist Party of the United States of America. Now, the question: why is it important to you, the people of America, to know why the Educational Director and the Vice President of CBS so closely follows the Communist Party line? To answer that question we must turn back the pages of history. A little over a hundred years ago a little group of men in Europe conspired to deliver the world to a new system, to Communism.

SENATOR MC CARTHY (CTD)

Under their system, the individual is nothing, the family was nothing. God did not even exist. Their theory was that an all-powerful state should have the power of life or death over its citizens without even a trial, that everything and everybody belonged to the rulers of the state. They openly wrote - nothing secret about it - that in their efforts to gain power, they would be justified in doing anything. They would be justified in following the trail of deceit, lies, terror, murder, treason, blackmail. All these things were elevated to virtues in the Communist rule book.

If a convert to communism could be persuaded that he was a citizen of the world, it, of course would be much easier to make him a traitor to his own country.

Now, for 70 years the communist made little progress. Let me show you a map of the world as it stood in the middle of the First World War, 1917, before the Russian Revolution. You will see that there was not a single foot of ground on the face of the globe under the domination or control of the Communists, and bear in mind that this was only 36 years ago. In 1917, we were engaged in a great world war in defense of our way of life and in defense of American liberty.

SENATOR MC CARTHY (CTD)

The Kaiser was obliged to divide his armies and fight on both the eastern and western fronts. In the midst of the war, the Russian people overthrew their Czarist master and they set up a democratic form of government under the leadership of Alexander Kerensky. Now, Kerensky's government instantly pledged all-out support to the Allies. At this instant the Imperial German Government secretly financed the return to Russia of seven Communist exiles, led by Nicolai Lenin, exiles that had been forced to flee the country, a rather important event in the history of the world.

Now, once in Russia, by the same methods which the Communists are employing in the United States today, they undermined the army, they undermined the navy, the civilian heads of the government, and in 100 days, those seven communists were literally the masters of Russia.

Now, with all of the wealth of the nation at their command, they proceeded to finance Communist parties in every country of the world.

fad

They sent to those countries trained propagandists and spies. In every country they, of course, had to find glib, clever men like Edward R. Murrow who would sponsor invitations to students and teachers to attend indoctrination schools in Moscow, exactly as Murrow has done.

They trained Communists in every country in the world. Their sole purpose was to infiltrate the government, and once Communists were in government, they in turn brought others in.

Now, let us look at the map of the world as it was twenty years ago. At that time there was one country with 180 million people in Communist chains. Now, let us look at a map of the world as of tonight, this 6th day of April 1954: Over one-third of the earth's area under Communist control and 800 million people in Communist chains, in addition to the 800 million Communist chains in Europe and Asia.

Finally, the Communists have gained a foothold and a potential military base here in our half of the world, in Guatemala, with the Communists seeping down in to Honduras. My good friends, how much of this was achieved by military force and how much was achieved by traitors and Communist-line propagandists in our own government and in other free governments? Let us start in Europe, if we may?

fad

They took by military force a little piece of Finland; in the same way they took three small Baltic states, Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia.

They took half of Poland in the same way. They acquired the rest of Poland through Polish traitors and Communists in our own government, who gave American dollars and American support to the Communists in Poland. They took over Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary, without firing a single shot. They did this by the infiltration of Communists in the key spots in the governments. The Communists took over Czechoslovakia without firing a shot. This they did by the infiltration of Communists into the Czechoslovakian Government also.

And listen to what a high official in the anti-Communist government of Czechoslovakia had to say about the Communist enslavement of Czechoslovakia. Here is what he says: He said, "In my country, the pattern was identical to what it is in the United States. If anyone, before the Communists took over, dared to attack those Communists who were preparing and shaping the policy of my government, shaping the policy to betray my people, he was promptly attacked and destroyed by a combination of Communists, fellow travellers and those unthinking people who thought they were serving the cause of liberalism and progress, but who were actually serving the cause of the most reactionary credo of all times, Communism." Still quoting: "Because of those people, night has fallen upon my nation and slavery upon my people."

SENATOR MC CARTHY (CTD)

Now, shifting to another area of the world, to the East, how about this vast land area and the teaming masses of China? Let's just take a look at that map, if you please. Keep in mind that a few short years ago China was a free nation, friendly to the United States.

Now, let's take a look at that map. Were those 400 million Chinese captured by force of arms? Certainly not. They were delivered, delivered to Communist slave masters by the jackal pack of Communist-line propagandists, including the friends of Mr. Edward R. Murrow, who day after day shouted to the world that the Chinese Communists were agrarian reformers and that our ally, the Republic of China, represented everything that was evil and wicked.

Now, my good friends, if there were no Communists in our government, would we have consented to and connived to turn over all of our Chinese friends to the Russians? Now, my good friends, if there had been no Communists in our government, would we have rewarded them with all of Manchuria, half of the Kurile Islands and one-half of Korea?

Now, how many Americans, how many Americans have died and will die because of this sellout to Communist Russia, God only knows.

SEN. MC CARTHY:

If there were no Communists in our government, why did we delay for 18 months, delay our research on the hydrogen bomb, even though our intelligence agencies were reporting day after day that the Russians were feverishly pushing their development of the H Bomb? And may I say to America tonight that our nation may well die, our nation may well die because of that 18 months' deliberate delay. And I ask you, who caused it? Was it loyal Americans or was it traitors in our government?

It is often said by the Left Wing that it is sufficient to fight Communism in Europe and Asia, but that Communism is not a domestic American issue. But the record, my good friends, is that the damage has been done by cleverly calculated subversion at home, and not from abroad. It is this problem of subversion that our Committee faces.

Let us very quickly glance at some of the work of our committee, some of the work that has been done in slightly over a year's time: for example, 238 witnesses were examined in public session: 367 witnesses examined in executive session: 84 witnesses refused to testify as to Communist activities on the ground that if they told the truth they might go to jail: 24 wintesses of Communist backgrounds have been discharged from jobs in which they were handling secret, top-secret confidential material--individuals who were exposed before our committee.

SEN. MC CARTHY:

Of course, you can't measure the success of a committee by a box score, based on the number of Communist heads that have rolled from secret jobs. It is completely impossible to even estimate the effect on our government of the day-to-day plodding exposure of communists--and that is, of course, why the Murrow's bleed.

For example, the exposure of only one Fifth Amendment Communist in the government Printing Office, an office having access to secret material from almost every government agency, resulted in an undisclosed number of suspensions. It resulted in the removal of the loyalty board and the revamping of all the loyalty rules so that we do have apparently a good, tight loyalty setup in the Printing Office at this time.

Also, a disclosure of Communists in the military and the radar laboratories resulted in the abolition of the Pentagon Board, which had cleared and ordered reinstated Communists who had for years been handling government secrets.

Also, as a result of those hearings, Army orders have been issued to prevent the recurrence of the Major Peress scandal which was exposed by the committee.

Now, to attempt to evaluate the effect of the work on an investigating committee would be about as impossible as to attempt to evaluate the effect of well-trained watch dogs upon the activities of potential burglars.

mr

SEN. MC CARTHY:

We Americans live in a free world, a world where we can stand as individuals, where we can go to the church of our own choice and worship God as we please, each in his own fashion, where we can freely speak our opinions on any subject or on any man.

Now, whether we shall continue to so live has come to issue now. We will soon know whether we are going to go on living that kind of life or whether we are going to live the kind of life that 800-million slaves live under Communist domination.

The issue is simple: it is the issue of life or death for our civilization.

Now, Mr. Murrow said on this program--(and I quote)- He said: "The actions of the junior Senator from Wisconsin have given considerable comfort to the enemy." That's the language of our statute of treason, rather strong language.

If I am giving comfort to our enemies, I ought not to be in the Senate.

SEN. MC CARTHY

If on the other hand, Mr. Murrow is giving comfort to our enemies, he ought not to be brought into the homes of millions of Americans by the Columbia Broadcasting System. This is a question which can be resolved with very little difficulty. What do the Communists think of me and what do the Communists think of Mr. Murrow? One of us is on the side of the Communists; the other is against the Communists, against Communist slavery.

The Communists have 3 official publications in America. These are not ordinary publications. They have been officially determined to be the transmission belts through which Communists in America are instructed as to the party line, or the position which Communists writers and playwrights must take. Also, of course, telecasters, broadcasters. The first of these is a booklet which I would like to show you, if I may. It's entitled "The Main Report Delivered at the National Conference of the Communist Party of the USA," published in New York in October 1953. The report states: (QUOTE) "the struggle against McCarthyism is developing currently along the following main lines." Keep in mind this is the Communist publication giving instructions to the members of the Party on the following main lines: Struggle against witch-hunting, struggle against investigations of the McCarthy-McCarran type, and defense of the victims of McCarthyism, such as Owen Lattimore, etc. In addition there is the direct attack on McCarthy."

mr

SEN. MC CARTHY:

May I ask you, does that sound somewhat like the program of Edward R. Murrow on March 9, over this same station?

In this report the Communists do not hesitate to instruct, to instruct the comrades that their fight on McCarthy is only a means to a larger end. Again let me quote from the insturctions from the Communist Party to its membership, from page 33. (I quote:) "Our main task is to mobilize the masses for the defeat of the foreign and domestic policies of the Eisenhower Administration and for the defeat of the Eisenhower regime itself. The struggle against McCarthyism contributes to this general objective."

There's one more quotation, if I may, from page 31 of these instructions from the Communist Party to its members (I quote:) "Since the elections, McCarthyism has emerged as a menace of major proportions." I think maybe we know what the Communist Party means by a menace of major proportions. They mean a menace of major proportions. They mean a menace of major proportions to the Communist party.

Now let's take 30 seconds or so, if we may, to look a little further to see who is giving comfort to our enemies. Here is a Communist Daily Worker of March 9, containing 7 articles and a principal editorial, all attacking McCarthy, and the same issue lists Mr. Murrow's program as -- listen to this -- "one of tonight's best bets on TV."

mr

SEN. MC CARTHY

And then just one more. Here's the issue of March 17. Its principal front-page article is an attack on McCarthy. It has 3 other articles attacking McCarthy. It is a special article by William Z. Foster, the head of the Communist Party in America, and now under indictment on charges of attempting to overthrow this government by force and violence. This article by Foster, praising Edward R. Murrow.

Just one more, if I may impose on your time, the issue of March 26. This issue has 2 articles attacking witch-hunting. 3 articles attacking McCarthy, a cartoon of McCarthy, and an article in praise of Mr. Edward R. Murrow.

And now I would like to also show you the Communist political organ, entitled Political Affairs. The lead article is a report dated November 21, 1953 of the National Committee of the Communist Party of the United States, attacking McCarthy and telling how the loyal members of the Communist Party can serve their cause by getting rid of this awful McCarthy.

Now, as you know, Owen Lattimore has been named as a conscious, articulate instrument of the Communist conspiracy. He has been so named by the Senate Internal Security Committee. He is now under criminal indictment for perjury. With respect to testimony in regard to his Communist activities, in his book "Ordeal by Slander", he says -- and I think I can quote him verbatim -- he says: "I owe a very special debt to men I have never met. I must mention at least Edward R. Murrow."

mr

SENATOR MC CARTHY

Then there is the book by Harold Laski, admittedly the greatest Communist propagandist of our time in England. In his book, "Reflections on the Revolution of Our Times," he dedicates the book "To my friends, E. R. Murrow and Lanham Tichener, with affection."

I am perfectly willing to let the American people decide who is giving comfort to our enemies. Much of the documentation which we have here on the table tonight will not be available to the American people by way of television. However, this will all be made available to you within the next two weeks.

In conclusion, may I say that under the shadow of the most horrible and destructive weapons that man has ever devised, we fight to save our country, our homes, our churches, our children. To this cause, ladies and gentlemen, I have dedicated and will continue to dedicate all that I have and all that I am, and I want to assure you that I will not be deterred by the attacks of the Murrows, the Lattimores, the Fosters, the Daily Worker, or the Communist Party itself.

Now, I make no claim to leadership. In complete humility, I do ask you and every American who loves this country to join with me.

MR. MURROW:

That was a film of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, presented at our invitation. It was in response to a program we presented on March 9th. This reporter undertook to make no comment at this time, but naturally reserved his right to do so subsequently. Good night, and Good Luck!

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

STATEMENT BY EDWARD R. MURROW ON
SENATOR McCARTHY'S BROADCAST ON "SEE IT NOW," APRIL 6, 1954

Senator McCarthy's reckless and unfounded attempt to impugn my loyalty is just one more example of his typical tactic of attempting to tie up to Communism anyone who disagrees with him. I now join the distinguished list upon which already appear the Washington Post, the Milwaukee Journal, Time Magazine, Commonweal, the Christian Science Monitor and General Marshall, among others. The Washington Post is characterized by Senator McCarthy as "the Washington edition of the Daily Worker"; the Milwaukee Journal as "the Milwaukee edition of the Daily Worker"; Time Magazine as having a purpose to "obstruct the fight against Communists"; Commonweal, a leading Catholic weekly, as having done "a great service to the Communist party"; the Christian Science Monitor as paralleling the Daily Worker in "venomous, distorted" stories; and General Marshall as "always and invariably serving the world policy of the Kremlin."

Senator McCarthy plays upon this nation's determination to protect itself against Communism as a means of creating distrust of anyone who criticizes him no matter how devoted to our American institutions the critic may be. I take no back seat to Senator McCarthy or anybody else in my dedication to this country and to its aims and ideals, nor are my views about the danger of Communism or Communist infiltration into the affairs of this country less uncompromising than those presumably held by the Junior Senator from Wisconsin. It is my devotion to the principles upon which this nation rests -- justice, freedom and fairness -- which sets me apart from Senator McCarthy. I would like to repeat the thought I expressed in answer to an earlier attack on me by Senator McCarthy: When the record is finally written, as it will be one day, it will answer the question who has helped the Communist cause and who has served his country better, Senator McCarthy or I. I would like to be remembered by the answer to that question.

Here are comments on the specific points raised by Senator McCarthy tonight:

1. One charge is that by my own admission I was a member of the IWW. That is false. I was never a member of the IWW. I never applied for membership. I assume that this false charge was manufactured by Senator McCarthy from the fact that in summers during college and during one year before college in the mid-twenties, I worked in lumber camps in the Pacific Northwest, where remnants of the old World War I IWW movement were still found among the lumber workers. But never was I a member or supporter of the IWW, nor did I ever work with that organization.

2. Another charge is that Professor Harold Laski dedicated a book to me. That is true. The book was published in this country in 1943. Professor Laski was a British scholar and Socialist politician. He was a friend of mine.

(More)

He is dead. He was a Socialist. I am not. There are many contentions in his book with which I do not agree. LASKI ~~He~~ was one of those civilized individuals who did not insist upon agreement with his political ideas as a pre-condition for friendship or conversation. Senator McCarthy's implication that Laski's book was dedicated to me as a supporter of his views is refuted by Laski's introduction to his book, written in the third year of Britain's war against the Nazis, in which he said:

> ". . .our country owes an immense debt to Mr. E. R. Murrow. Day and night since before the war began he has done everything that courage and integrity can do to make events in this country a living reality to his fellow citizens of the United States. I am only one of the many Englishmen who have found in his faith and trust in our people a new power to endure and hope."

This was a reference to broadcasts to the United States which I made from London in my capacity as European Director of CBS News throughout the war years.

3. Another accusation against me is that Owen Lattimore mentions me in his book, Ordeal by Slander, published in 1950. At page 211 occurs the reference to me. After paying tribute to a number of newspaper and radio reporters who knew him personally and whose reporting and editorial work were, to quote Lattimore, "clearly based upon the ancient principle that I was innocent unless proved guilty," Lattimore goes on to express appreciation to reporters whom he had never met before the hearings and to reporters whom, like me, he has never met. There were no complaints about my treatment of the Lattimore case by those who were interrogating him. Everything that I said on that case is a matter of record and can be examined by anyone interested. Within the limits of human fallibility I have attempted when reporting controversies of substance involving an individual to present both sides of the case and not to presume guilt until it has been proven. I shall continue to do that in subsequent controversies and that specifically includes the case of Senator McCarthy.

4. Senator McCarthy's principal attack on me is an attack on the Institute of International Education, of which I was assistant director and am now a trustee. He says that it was chosen by the Soviet agency, VOKS, to act as its representative, to do a job which would normally be done by the Russian Secret Police in connection with the selection of American students and teachers to attend a Communist school in Moscow in 1934. That is false.

The facts are these: The Institute of International Education is an institution which was founded in 1919 largely through the efforts of Nicholas Murray Butler, then President of Columbia University. Its purpose was to improve American relations with foreign countries through exchanges of students and educational facilities. I served as Assistant Director from 1932 to 1935 and have been one of its trustees since 1931. It is an association I am proud of and one in which I have had many distinguished associates -- John Foster Dulles, Milton Eisenhower, Ralph J. Bunche, Virginia Gildersleeve, Philip Reed, to name just a few.

In 1934, the Moscow University had organized an Anglo-American Institute which proposed holding summer sessions in Moscow for English and American students. The Institute of International Education acted as American sponsor for the summer session in 1934, as it did for summer schools in other countries, including England, France and Germany. I, as a representative of the Institute of International Education was one of the 24-member National Advisory Council which was set up to advise the director of the American group. All of the members of the Advisory Council were selected by the Institute. None was selected by VOKS, or any other Soviet agency. The American group was open to all academically qualified students who applied for registration and included students from 60 American universities and colloges. The only contact which VOKS had with the American group was in connection with procuring living and travel facilities for the group while it was in Russia. Inasmuch as VOKS was the Soviet bureau in charge of such matters for foreign visitors, contact with it was necessary if the students were to sleep and eat.

As for the Senator's charges that I or the Institute was engaged in propaganda for Communist causes, the measure of the truth of this is that the Soviets refused, after the 1934 summer session, to have anything more to do with the Institute of International Education. It refused to permit students to attend the 1935 session under the Institute's auspices. When the Institute tried -- at the request of the United States Government -- to arrange for American students to go to Russia after World War II, it was met with a Soviet blast, appearing in several Communist publications in Europe, calling it and its program "the centre of international propaganda for American reaction," and charging, among its trustees, John Foster Dulles as ". . .one of the most violent of the war mongers, publicly branded by

A. Y. Vyshinski." I was favored in that same attack with the tag "reactionary radio commentator."

The Institute of International Education is today the contracting agency for the government of this country in administering various student programs abroad. It also administers student programs under the Fulbright Act and the Smith-Mundt Act. Over the course of the years, it has arranged, in all, some 30,000 exchanges of students and professors between the United States and over 50 foreign countries.

In 1948, President Eisenhower said of its work:

> "In these troubled days, the far-sighted policy of international education has become a firm foundation on which will ultimately rest the peace for which all the world is so earnestly yearning. I can assure you of my very best wishes and my full cooperation in the great achievements that lie ahead for the Institute of International Education."

I believed twenty years ago, and I believe today that mature American students and professors can engage in conversation and controversy, in the clash of ideas with Communists anywhere, without becoming contaminated or converted. To deny this would be to admit that in the realm of ideas, faith and conviction the Communist cause, dogma and doctrine are stronger than our own.

5. Senator McCarthy attacked me because the Daily Worker on March 9th listed my television program as a "good bet" -- also, that in two subsequent issues this paper praised me. I cannot take responsibility for what the Daily Worker or any other publication has to say about my program or about me personally. I can say that I had no knowledge that I was to be the subject of notice by the Daily Worker or any other Communist publication. This is more than Senator McCarthy can say about the Communist support he accepted in aid of his 1946 campaign for the United States Senate.

Here is an example of what Senator McCarthy calls "praise" by William Z. Foster in the March 17th issue of the Daily Worker: "During the past 10 days Senator McCarthy has received a number of resounding belts in the jaw. These came from Adlai Stevenson, E. R. Murrow, Senator Flanders, the Army leadership, broadcasting companies. Even Eisenhower himself had to give McCarthy a slap on the wrist." This is the sole reference to me in the Foster article.

6. With his massive research on me the Senator could not even get my present relationship with CBS straight. He repeatedly referred to me as the Educational Director of the Columbia Broadcasting System, a position I have not held for seventeen years.

SENATOR McCARTHY'S REPLY

Petticrew, C. R.

April 29, 1959

Dear Mr. Petticrew:

I have your letter of April 2nd concerning the matter of Annie Lee Moss.

I am enclosing a script of the program to which you refer, and if you will read it, you will note that I never attempted to judge Annie Lee Moss. In the program, it was simply stated, "You will notice that neither Senator McClellan, nor Senator Symington, nor this reporter knew or claim that Mrs. Moss was or is a Communist. Their claim was simply that she had the right to meet her accusers face to face. Senator McCarthy claimed that Mrs. Moss had access to the code room. The Army denies it. That ought to be easy enough to prove".

In 1954, we did not consider it important that we decide whether or not Mrs. Marhoard, the witness, was correct in stating that Mrs. Moss was a Communist. This we left to the due process of law - we still do. It was merely our purpose, as reporters, to hold up a mirror to something that happened during the week of March 16, 1954 in Washington.

Sincerely yours,

New York 26, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your "Person-to-Person" is of course one of the outstanding programs on T-V and I have enjoyed it on numerous occasions. Furthermore, I consider that I have a second point of contact with you, since I was a member of your audience a few years ago when you addressed our American Life Convention at the Edgewater Beach Hotel (Chicago) in October.

My purpose in writing today is that it is my recollection that you made either a radio broadcast or a telecast, or both, back in 1954 or 1955, stating that Senator McCarthy erred when he named Annie Lee Moss as a former member of the Communist Party. As I recall you were extremely critical of Senator McCarthy and you used his accusation of this woman as an example of his "loose charges" and "persecuting methods."

Now it is my understanding that a report issued by the Subversive Activities Control Board, dated September 19, 1958, shows that Annie Lee Moss, according to the Communist Party's own records introduced into evidence, actually was a member of the Party in the 1940s.

In the interests of accurate reporting, do you think any correcting statement should be made, or have they already been made?

Sincerely yours,

C R Petticrew

January 21, 1959

Dear Mr. Hibbs:

Having spent part of my boyhood selling The Saturday Evening Post and my middle age as a partner of Edward R. Murrow, I feel my loyalty to both requires this letter.

An editorial in the December 27 issue of The Saturday Evening Post refers to Annie Lee Moss and a Murrow television program of 1954. In spite of my reverence for the Post's accuracy, I doubt if the person who wrote the editorial checked the broadcast. A copy of a SEE IT NOW book, which includes the script of the program, is attached and, if you will read it you will note that Murrow never attempted to judge Annie Lee Moss. We simply stated, "You will notice that neither Senator McClellan, nor Senator Symington, nor this reporter know or claim that Mrs. Moss was or is a Communist. Their claim was simply that she had the right to meet her accusers face to face. Senator McCarthy claimed that Mrs. Moss had access to the code room. The Army denies it. That ought to be easy enough to prove".

In 1954, we did not consider it important that we decide whether or not Mrs. Markward, the witness, was correct in stating that Mrs. Moss was a Communist. This we left to the due process of law - we still do. It was merely our purpose, as reporters, to hold up a mirror to something that happened during the week of March 16, 1954 in Washington.

Alice Widener, column writer for a magazine syndicate and president of U.S.A. Magazine, has telephoned twice to ask what your position is, now that Annie Lee Moss has been proved by the Government to be a card-carrying Communist. She said that this was in all the papers. Neither the Times nor the Tribune, nor A.P. nor U.P. carried anything about it, but I found a piece in yesterday's Daily News (attached). When she first called, I said I could not answer for you, and she asked to be transferred to John Day. I have since discovered that John Day was out, and she was transferred to Sig Mickelson. She asked him for a CBS statement, implying that CBS had been duped into portraying Mrs. Moss as a martyr. I understand that he did not give one, feeling that with so little news coverage, it was not sufficiently important and that, in any case, we had not been duped. She then called Michael Horton, who does public relations for News. He said that she was going to quote to her the summing up which you gave at the end of that program.

She has a 4 p.m. deadline, and wants a statement from you as she says she is getting calls from all over the country asking specifically for your views.

She never called back.

If she wants a script of the show O.K. but that's all. no new statement.

DAILY NEWS, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1958 • 6

U.S. Admits Ex-Red Stays in Army Job

By JERRY GREENE

Washington, Oct. 29 (NEWS Bureau).—A Pentagon spokesman said today that despite new and unchallenged evidence that Mrs. Anna Lee Moss was a card-carrying Communist in the 1940s, she remains on duty as a statistical expert in the Army Finance Office and there are no plans to remove her.

Mrs. Moss, a Negro who moved swiftly from a cafeteria clerk to a sensitive spot in the Pentagon's code room, was a key figure in one of the most explosive probes of the old McCarthy investigating committee in 1954.

She denied all charges of an FBI undercover agent, Mrs. Mary Stalcup Markward, that she had been an active Communist. It was, Mrs. Moss testified, clearly a case of mistaken identity. Eventually she was restored to her civil service job but was transferred to a "nonsensitive" post.

Mrs. Anna Lee Moss
Her record is not disputed.

Case Wide Open Again

Her case went to the Subversive Activities Control Board, which ruled against her, and she won a rehearing through the Circuit Court of Appeals. Now the case has broken wide open again through an 18-page recommendation by Francis A. Cherry, board examiner member, reaffirming the earlier decision.

The Cherry recommendations are up before the whole board of five and it may be weeks before there is a final decision. One member of the board, unidentified, disqualified himself.

Cherry, labeled a moderate, is a former Governor of Arkansas. He was harsh in his comments about Mrs. Markward, accusing her of some false testimony about the amount of money she was paid by the FBI as an informant —a total of $24,026.45 over a period of 10 years.

Cites Party Records

But he was rougher regarding Mrs. Moss, and revealed that authentic party records substantiate the case against her.

"The party's own records, copies of which are now in evidence, and the authenticity of which it does not dispute, show an Annie Lee Moss, 72 R St. SW, Washington, D. C., was a party member in the mid 1940s," the report read.

"Yet, respondent on several occasions charged before the Court of Appeals and the board that witness Markward committed perjury in testifying before the Defense Department to what the party's own records showed . . . the party declined to cross-examine witness Markward on the Moss question after copies of the party's own records were produced to it."

Cherry made clear that his board had all available documents on hand and he has had closest cooperation with the courts and the FBI.

The Pentagon's stand today on Mrs. Moss was based on the controversial Supreme Court rulings that a civil servant is no security risk if not in a classified job.

"See It Now" devoted several programs to the activities of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, Republican, Wisconsin. The March 9, 1954, "Examination" and his "Rebuttal" on April 6 were the most publicized. It is, however, possible that the Annie Lee Moss report of March 16, 1954, was the most unpremeditatedly analytical report that the program attempted. It required no editorial comment at the time, nor does it now. It happened in a single afternoon in a Senate hearing room. That which follows is the complete transcript of the "See It Now" telecast. The actual hearing lasted some two hours and is contained in the Subcommittee record, 83rd Congress, 2nd session, pursuant to S. Res. 189.

ANNIE LEE MOSS BEFORE THE McCARTHY COMMITTEE

MARCH 16, 1954

EDWARD R. MURROW: Good evening. Permit me to read what has been said in substance on this program before. This program is a weekly document for television, both live and on film, and is not designed to present hard, fast-breaking news. I and my co-editor, Fred Friendly, have been delegated the responsibility for its content. "See It Now" operates under the broadcasting policies set by CBS. Last week we made a report on Senator Joseph R. McCarthy. We labeled it as by definition, controversial. In accordance with CBS policy of fairness and equality, we offered the Senator time to reply tonight, or a week from tonight. He suggested the date of April 6, and we accepted; and he now says he will appear on that date. On "See It Now" we occasionally use the phrase "the little picture." Tonight we bring you a little picture of a little woman, Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, and the due process of law. Until three weeks ago, Mrs. Moss probably knew very little about Senator McCarthy, General Zwicker, Mr. Cohn, or the other principals engaged in the argument in Washington.

Let me attempt to get the chronology of the events straight.

On Washington's birthday, February 22, Monday, Senator McCarthy and Secretary of the Army Stevens were in total controversy over the General Zwicker case. Both men spoke in or near Philadelphia that Monday, and both returned to Washington for their big showdown scheduled for Thursday.

But when Senator McCarthy arrived back in Washington later that afternoon he had some added news for the country and the Army and Secretary Stevens. It was the lead story right across the country. The New York Times, for example, said: "McCarthy Asserts He Has a New Red Link to Army." The New York Daily News said: "McCarthy Calls Extra Hearing—New Army Red Case on Today." Cincinnati Enquirer: "McCarthy to Air New Case of Known Red in Army." The Houston Chronicle: "Call Army Code Clerk Ex-Red." Chicago Daily Tribune: "Probe New Army Red Case." My own nightly radio program covered it by saying: "Senator McCarthy charged today that the Army now employs a woman in its code room who was and still may be an active Communist."

Now, on Tuesday, February 23, Mrs. Mary Stalcup Markward, who had been an undercover agent in the Communist Party for the FBI, testified about Mrs. Moss. I quote from the official record which is just here:

The Chairman (Senator McCarthy): "The principal reason you are testifying this morning is because we understand that a woman who is currently employed by the Department of the Army—and her job description places her in the Army's code room in the Signal Corps—handling the encoding and decoding of confidential and top-secret messages may have been a member of the cell that you have full information about, that you may have collected her dues. This woman's name is Annie Lee Moss. I wonder if you would tell us now whether or not, early in 1944, you gave reports to the FBI on Annie Lee Moss." Mrs. Mary Stalcup Markward: "I did." Chairman: "Would you tell us what you told the FBI in those reports?" Mrs. Markward: "I recall, sir, that I had a woman by the name of Annie Lee Moss on the list of card-carrying, dues-paying members of the North East Club; and at that period in the history of the Communist Party, detailed lists were kept." Chairman: "Was Annie Lee Moss a member of the Communist Party?" Mrs. Markward: "She was." Chairman: "You collected dues from Annie Lee Moss?" Mrs. Markward: "I was not specifically the dues collector at that point. I was the chairman of the club. I had overall responsibility for the dues collection, but I was not actually handling the funds."

Three pages later (again quoting from the official record):

Senator McClellan: "May I inquire of the witness, did you know her personally, so you could identify her as a person, or was it only as a name to you—as a member of the Communist Party?" Mrs. Markward: "I don't specifically recall that I do know her as a person. I don't recall that I don't know her as a person, either. I just have no specific recollection on that point."

Wednesday, February 24, Mrs. Annie Lee Moss appeared as a witness from her sickbed at home. She had denied ever being inside a code room. Senator McCarthy said he had sworn testimony she had been a Communist. He warned her not to perjure herself by denying it; suggested she was too ill to testify. Mrs. Moss and her lawyer agreed she was too ill. She promised to return at a later date.

Mrs. Moss was very much in the news later that same Wednesday afternoon when Senator McCarthy and Secretary Stevens had their now famous luncheon, and the McCarthy-Stevens showdown scheduled for the next day, Thursday, was called off; and on that Thursday the Army suspended Mrs. Moss. Finally, last Thursday, March 11, Mrs. Annie Lee Moss was called before the Committee again, and this is what our cameraman, Charles Mack, saw through his camera.

SENATOR JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY: The Committee will come to order. Have the records show that all of the members of the Sub-Committee were notified of the time and place of the hearing; that the hearing was scheduled for this morning originally, but because some Senators felt they could not attend it was shifted to this afternoon. Who is your first witness, Mr. Cohn?

COHN: Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, Mr. Chairman.

MCCARTHY: Mrs. Morse? [TO COHN] Is that Moss or Morse?

COHN: Moss.

MCCARTHY: Mrs. Moss, will you raise your right hand and be sworn? In this matter now in hearing before the Committee, do you solemnly swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

MRS. MOSS: I do.

COHN: May we get your full name for the record, please?

MRS. MOSS: Annie Lee Moss.

COHN: M-o-s-s?

MRS. MOSS: That's right.

COHN: And where do you reside, ma'am?

MRS. MOSS: 1244 Evarts Street, Northeast.

MCCARTHY: Mrs. Moss, let me say for the record, for your information, and for the information of your counsel, that you are not here because you are considered important in the Communist apparatus. We have the testimony that you are or have been a Communist. We are rather curious, however, to know how you suddenly were shifted from—ah—a worker in a cafeteria to the code room. In other words—ah—I am today much more interested in the handling of your case by your superiors than in your own personal activities. However, the counsel will question you about your own activities also.

MRS. MOSS'S COUNSEL: Mr. Chairman—

MCCARTHY: We will not hear from counsel. You've been told what the rule is. If you have anything to say, say it through your client.

COHN: Did you begin work with the General Accounting Office in 1945?

MRS. MOSS: Yes, sir.

COHN: And prior to that time, had you been a cafeteria worker?

MRS. MOSS: Yes, I have.

COHN: I see. Now, while in the Pentagon—since 1950, have you had any connection with coded messages? Have you ever handled coded messages?

MRS. MOSS: No more than to transmit them.

COHN: Pardon me?

MRS. MOSS: No more than to transmit the message.

COHN: No more than to transmit them. Did you transmit coded . . .

MRS. MOSS: Receive and transmit the messages. That's all I had to do. And then, the code room—I have never been into the code room in my life.

MCCARTHY: Do you know the—the type of classification? Do you know if they were Secret, Top Secret, Confidential?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

MCCARTHY: In other words, you wouldn't know the degree of classification?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

MCCARTHY: I see.

COHN: Now, the Committee has had testimony, of which I know you and counsel are familiar, to the effect that you were at that time a member of the Northeast Club of the Communist Party. Now, is that testimony true?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir. It is not.

COHN: It is not?

MRS. MOSS: Not at any time have I been a member of a Communist Party, and I have never seen a Communist card.

COHN: You have never seen a Communist card?

MRS. MOSS: That's right.

COHN: Have you ever attended any Communist meetings?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir. I never attended any Communist meetings.

COHN: Have you ever subscribed to the Daily Worker?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir. I didn't sus—subscribe to the Daily Worker, and I wouldn't pay for it.

MCCARTHY: You say that you never have been a member of the Communist Party?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir. I have not.

MCCARTHY: Ah—now, Mrs. Markward, who is working for the FBI—who joined the Communist Party under orders from the FBI—has testified that while she never met you personally at a Communist meeting, that your name was on the list of Communists who were paying dues. Can you shed any light upon that?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir. I don't even know what the dues are or where they were paid.

MCCARTHY: Do I understand you have never paid any money to the Communist Party? Is that correct?

MRS. MOSS: That's right.

MCCARTHY: You have never paid any dues to anyone whom you thought was collecting them for the Communist Party?

MRS. MOSS: That's right.

MCCARTHY: And you've never attended any Communist meetings?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir. I have not.

MCCARTHY: Uh—Mr. Cohn?

COHN: Now, with reference to your testimony about the Daily Worker, isn't it a fact that you regularly received the Daily Worker, and that you arranged to receive it through Rob Hall, who is one of the leading Communists in the District of Columbia?

MRS. MOSS: Robert Hall brought that paper to my house once where I was rooming—one Sunday morning, and—uh—my son tells me that my husband told him not to bring that paper back there any more. And he said he paid him for whatever he had, and he didn't bring it any more, and we didn't get this Communist paper any more until after we had moved to Southwest, at 72 R Street.

MCCARTHY: Did you know Robert Hall?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir—not personally.

MCCARTHY: He came to your house, you say, one Sunday morning?

MRS. MOSS: That's right. Where I was rooming—one Sunday morning.

MCCARTHY: Did your husband give your Robert Hall any money that Sunday morning?

MRS. MOSS: I wasn't there that morning.

MCCARTHY: Well, now, you say your son told you something about it?

MRS. MOSS: Yes.

MCCARTHY: Did your son tell you whether or not Robert Hall collected money?

MRS. MOSS: He told me his daddy gave him some money and told him to not come back with those papers any more. In fact, he asked that my son sell those papers, and his daddy said he couldn't sell the paper, and he paid him for whatever he had—I don't know how many it was.

MCCARTHY: I think maybe if you wouldn't lean quite as close to the microphone, I could hear you better. I have some difficulty hearing you. Is your husband living?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir. He is dead.

MCCARTHY: He is dead?

MRS. MOSS: Yes.

MCCARTHY: And you say you personally did not know Robert Hall —that you were not there when he came to the house?

MRS. MOSS: That's right.

MCCARTHY: Do you know what business Robert Hall had with your husband besides merely delivering the copy of the Daily Worker?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir, I do not.

MCCARTHY: M'm—I am afraid I am going to have to excuse myself. I've got rather an important appointment tonight which I have got to work on right now, and I wonder, Senator Mundt, if you would take over as chairman. [SENATOR MCCARTHY LEAVES THE HEARING.]

SENATOR SYMINGTON: Might I suggest that she be asked how many times she ever saw Mr. Hall?

COHN: About how many times did you see Mr. Hall?

MRS. MOSS: Well, each time I went to the union.

COHN: Mrs. Moss testified in executive session that Rob Hall . . .

MURROW: Mr. Cohn wanted to know about Mrs. Moss's connection with Rob Hall, an alleged Communist leader in Washington; but this Rob Hall was known to be a white man.

COHN: We assume that that is the same Rob Hall.

VOICE: Well, maybe we can check it.

COHN: If there is another one, or anything like that, we will certainly . . .

SYMINGTON: Now, let's get this information, counsel. Is the Robert Hall that you know a colored man?

MRS. MOSS: Yes, sir.

SYMINGTON: You are sure of that?

MRS. MOSS: Yes. I am pretty sure that he is colored.

SYMINGTON: Does he look like a colored man, or does he look more like a white man?

MRS. MOSS: The man that I—I—have in mind as Robert Hall was a man about my complexion.

SYMINGTON: About your complexion. Well, it's fair to say that you didn't think he was a white man?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir. I didn't.

SYMINGTON: I would like to put in the record: One of the reporters said he is certain that Robert Hall of the Daily Worker is a white man.

MCCLELLAN: If one's black and the other's white, they're different.

COHN: Can you tell us why—assuming there are two Robert Halls here—can you tell us why this Robert Hall, who was in the union, would come around and ask your family to subscribe to the Daily Worker? Did you know him to be a Communist?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir, I did not know . . .

SYMINGTON: Mrs. Moss, what are you doing now? Are you working?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

SYMINGTON: Why not?

MRS. MOSS: I was suspended.

SYMINGTON: You were suspended?

MRS. MOSS: Yes, sir, until this is over.

SYMINGTON: By the . . .

MRS. MOSS: By the Department of Army.

SYMINGTON: By the Department of Army?

MRS. MOSS: Yes, sir.

SYMINGTON: How long ago was that?

MRS. MOSS: I believe it was the twenty-fifth of February.

SYMINGTON: What reason did they give for suspending you?

MURROW [OVER ANNIE LEE MOSS READING]: This woman, under suspicion because of charges made by Senator McCarthy and Roy Cohn, alleged to have examined and corrected secret and encoded overseas messages, attempted to read the uncoded words of her suspense notice.

MRS. MOSS: [HALTINGLY AND STUMBLING]: "The immediate suspension is deemed necessary and advisable in the interest of national security under the authority of Public Law 733, Eighty-first Congress, and executive order 10-450, pending ad-adjud- [LAWYER HELPS HER] adjudication of your case, under AR 620-220-1."

SYMINGTON: Did you read that the very best you could?

MRS. MOSS: Yes, I did. [GIGGLES.]

SYMINGTON: Did you—did you ever—to the best of your knowledge, have you ever talked to a Communist in your life?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir—not to my knowledge.

SYMINGTON: Did you ever hear of Karl Marx?

MRS. MOSS: Who's that? [GENERAL LAUGHTER.]

SYMINGTON: I will pass the question. You were born in South Carolina, moved to North Carolina, then moved to Washington?

MRS. MOSS: That's right.

SYMINGTON: Do you think you are a good American?

MRS. MOSS: Yes.

SYMINGTON: Would you ever do anything to hurt your country?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

SYMINGTON: Have you ever talked to anybody about espionage? About —— [TO LAWYER] Do you want to—?

[MRS. MOSS'S COUNSEL EXPLAINS ABOVE QUESTION TO HER INAUDIBLY AND ENDS WITH THE WORD "SPIES."]

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

SYMINGTON: Have you ever had any information that you received in your job that you passed on to anybody about these codes?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

SYMINGTON [QUESTION PROMPTED BY MCCLELLAN]: Did anybody ever ask you for any of that information?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir. If they had I would have reported it.

SYMINGTON: You would have reported it?

MRS. MOSS: I certainly would have.

SYMINGTON: Has anybody ever asked you to join the Communist Party?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

SYMINGTON: Has anybody ever asked you to join any organization of any kind that you thought might be against the best interests of the United States?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

SYMINGTON: What are you living on now? Have you got any savings?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

SYMINGTON: You haven't?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

SYMINGTON: If you—if you don't get work pretty soon, what are you going to do?

MRS. MOSS: I am going down to the Welfare.

SYMINGTON: Going down to the Welfare?

MRS. MOSS: Yes.

MUNDT: Mr. Cohn?

COHN: We have—uh—part of the testimony of Mrs. Markward was to the effect that another member of this club, and an active member of the Communist Party at that time, at whose home Communist meetings were held, was a woman named Hattie Griffin. Did you know Hattie Griffin?

MRS. MOSS: I lived with Hattie Griffins two weeks.

COHN: And at what address did you live with Hattie Griffin?

MRS. MOSS: It was in the six-hundred block of Second Street. I don't remember the number.

COHN: That was the same—in accordance with Mrs. Markward's testimony. Now, when you were living with Hattie Griffin during that two-week period, did you know that she was a member of the Communist Party?

MRS. MOSS: No sir, I did not.

COHN: Did you know she was holding Communist meetings in her home?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir, I did not.

COHN: You did not know that?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

COHN: She never told you that?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

SYMINGTON: Did you ever discuss with this woman you say you lived with two weeks—did you ever discuss communism with her?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

SYMINGTON: In any way?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir.

SYMINGTON: At any time?

MRS. MOSS: Because I didn't know anything about it—I never heard it until 1948.

SYMINGTON: Was there ever anybody that she ever brought to the house for meetings?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir. Not while we were there.

SYMINGTON: Never once?

MRS. MOSS: Not while we were there.

COHN: Mr. Chairman.

MUNDT: Mr. Cohn?

COHN: I have no further questions of this witness at this time. I will say this: We have the testimony of Mrs. Markward, the undercover agent of the FBI, stating that Annie Lee Moss was a member—a dues-paying member of the Communist Party—ah—the Northeast Club of the Communist Party. We have corroboration of that testimony by another witness who was called before the Committee and gave a sworn statement to the effect that she also knew Mrs. Moss as a member of the Northeast Club of the Communist Party.

MCCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make this point: We are making statements against a witness who has come and submitted to cross-examination. Now, if we— She has already lost her job; she's been suspended because of this action. I am not defending her. If she is a Communist, I want her exposed; but to make these statements that we have got corroborating evidence that she is a Communist, under these circumstances I think she is entitled to have it produced here in her presence and let the public know about it—and let her know about it. [APPLAUSE.] I don't like to try people by hearsay evidence. [APPLAUSE.] I like to get the witnesses here and try 'em by testimony under oath.

MUNDT: The Chair will rule that the comments of Mr. Cohn be stricken from the record.

MCCLELLAN: I didn't ask that. I didn't ask that, Mr. Chairman.

MUNDT: [INAUDIBLE]—Try to produce a witness in public because the FBI may have her under cover. We don't want to . . .

MCCLELLAN: You can't strike these statements made by counsel here as to evidence that we are having and withholding—you cannot strike that from the press nor from the public mind, once it's planted there. That is—that is the—evil of it. Well, I don't think it's fair to a witness—to a citizen of this country to bring them up here and cross-examine them, and then, when they get through, say, "We have got something—the FBI's got something on you that condemns you."

MUNDT: The Chair agrees . . .

MCCLELLAN: It's not sworn testimony. It's convicting people by rumor, and hearsay, and innuendo . . . [APPLAUSE.]

SYMINGTON: Do you know anybody named Mrs. Mary Markward?

MRS. MOSS: No, sir, I do not.

SYMINGTON: I think the record ought to show that Mrs. Markward says that she has never seen Mrs. Annie Lee Moss at any Communist meeting, but it is her recollection that Mrs. Moss paid her dues and was a member in good standing.

Do you know anybody else in this town named Moss? Have you ever looked up a telephone number? Are there any Mosses in Washington besides you?

MRS. MOSS: Yes, sir. There's three Annie Lee Mosses.

JACKSON: What was that? Will you state that again?

MRS. MOSS: There were three Annie Lee Mosses. And when I went to get a real-estate license I had an awful lot of trouble then . . .

SYMINGTON: I want—I want to say something to you—and I may be sticking my neck out, and I may be wrong—but I have been listening to you testify this afternoon, and I think you are telling the truth.

MRS. MOSS: I certainly am.

SYMINGTON: If you are not taken back in the Army, you come around and see me, and I am going to see that you get a job.

MRS. MOSS: Well, thanks a lot. [APPLAUSE.]

MURROW: You will notice that neither Senator McClellan, nor Senator Symington, nor this reporter know or claim that Mrs. Moss was or is a Communist. Their claim was simply that she had the right to meet her accusers face to face. Senator McCarthy claimed that Mrs. Moss had access to the code room. The Army denies it. That ought to be easy enough to prove.

Here is another document from the record. President Eisenhower, in November of 1953, talking about the right of every man to look his accuser in the eye:

PRESIDENT DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER [WASHINGTON, D.C.]: Why are we proud? We are proud, first of all, because from the beginning of this nation, a man can walk upright, no matter who he is—or she is. He can walk upright and meet his friend or his enemy; and he does not fear that because that enemy may be in a position of great power that he can be suddenly thrown in jail to rot there, without charges and with no recourse to justice. We have the Habeas Corpus Act, and we respect it. I was born—raised in a little town of which most of you have never heard, but in the West it's a famous place. It's called Abilene, Kansas. We had as our marshal for a long time a name named Wild Bill Hickok. If you don't know about him, read your Westerns more. Now, that town had a code, and I was raised as a boy to prize that code. It was: "Meet anyone face to face with whom you disagree." You could not sneak up on him from behind, do any damage to him, without suffering the penalty of an outraged citizenry.

If you met him face to face and took the same risk he did, you could get away with almost anything, as long as the bullet was in the front. [LAUGHTER.] And today, although none of you have the great fortune, I think, of being from Abilene, Kansas, you live, after all, by that same code, in your ideals and in the respect you give to certain qualities. In this country, if someone dislikes you or accuses you, he must come up in front. He cannot hide behind the shadow. He cannot assassinate you or your character from behind without suffering the penalties which an outraged citizenry will inflict. If we are going to continue to be proud that we are Americans, there must be no weakening of the codes by which we have lived. By the right to meet your accuser face to face—if you have one. By your right to go to the church or the synagogue, or even the mosque, of your own choosing. By your right to speak your mind and be protected in it. Ladies and gentlemen, the things that make us proud to be Americans are of the soul and of the spirit. [APPLAUSE.]

MURROW: November 1953, the thirty-fourth President of the United States, speaking rather eloquently about due process of law. Good night, and good luck!

Mrs. Moss was restored to her job on March 29th, 1954, pending further investigation. On August 4th she was again suspended and her case was reopened on the basis of new information. The charges were aired by the Security Hearing Board from September 20th to the 23rd, and on January 18th, 1955, she was ordered restored to duty in a "nonsensitive position" by Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson, who found she was not "actually subversive or disloyal to the United States." Mrs. Moss is now assigned to the office of the Army Chief of Finance.

Cohn: Have you ever attended any Communist meetings?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir. I never attended any Communist meetings.

Cohn: Have you ever subscribed to the Daily Worker?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir. I didn't sus-subscribe to the Daily Worker, and I wouldn't pay for it.

McCarthy: You say that you never have been a member of the Communist Party?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir. I have not.

McCarthy: Ah - now, Mrs. Markward, who is working for the FBI - who joined the Communist Party under orders from the FBI - has testified that while she never met you personally at a Communist meeting, that your name was on the list of Communists who were paying dues. Can you shed any light upon that?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir. I don't even know what the dues are or where they were paid.

McCarthy: Do I understand you have never paid any money to the Communist Party? Is that correct?

Mrs. Moss: That's right.

McCarthy: You have never paid any dues to anyone whom you thought was collecting them for the Communist Party?

Mrs. Moss: That's right.

McCarthy: And you've never attended any Communist meetings?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir. I have not.

McCarthy: Uh - Mr. Cohn?

Cohn: Now, with reference to your testimony about the Daily Worker, isn't it a fact that you regularly received the Daily Worker, and that you arranged to receive it through Rob Hall, who is one of the leading Communists in the District of Columbia?

Mrs. Moss: Robert Hall brought that paper to my house once where I was rooming - one Sunday morning, and - uh - my son tells me that my husband told him not to bring that paper back there any more. And he said he paid him for whatever he had, and he didn't bring it any more, and we didn't get this Communist paper any more until after we had moved to Southwest, at 72 R Street.

McCarthy: Did you know Robert Hall?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir - not personally.

McCarthy: He came to your house, you say, one Sunday morning?

Mrs. Moss: That's right. Where I was rooming - one Sunday morning.

McCarthy: Did your husband give your Robert Hall any money that Sunday morning?

Mrs. Moss: I wasn't there that morning.

McCarthy: Well, now, you say your son told you something about it?

Mrs. Moss: Yes.

McCarthy: Did your son tell you whether or not Robert Hall collected money?

Mrs. Moss: He told me his daddy gave him some money and told him to not come back with those papers any more. In fact, he asked that my son sell those papers, and his daddy said he couldn't sell the paper, and he paid him for whatever he had - I don't know how many it was.

McCarthy: I think maybe if you wouldn't lean quite as close to the microphone, I could hear you better. I have some difficulty hearing you. If your husband living?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir. He is dead.

McCarthy: He is dead?

Mrs. Moss: Yes.

McCarthy: And you say you personally did not know Robert Hall - that you were not there when he came to the house?

Mrs. Moss: That's right.

McCarthy: Do you know what business Robert Hall had with your husband besides merely delivering the copy of the Daily Worker?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir, I do not.

McCarthy: M'm - I am afraid I am going to have to excuse myself. I've got rather an important appointment tonight which I have got to work on right now, and I wonder, Senator Mundt, if you would take over as chairman. (SENATOR MCCARTHY LEAVES THE HEARING.)

Senator Symington: Might I suggest that she be asked how many times she ever saw Mr. Hall?

Cohn: About how many times did you see Mr. Hall?

Mrs. Moss: Well, each time I went to the union.

Cohn: Mrs. Moss testified in executive session that Rob Hall...

Murrow: Mr. Cohn wanted to know about Mrs. Moss's connection with Rob Hall, an alleged Communist leader in Washington; but this Rob Hall was known to be a white man.

Cohn: We assume that that is the same Rob Hall.

Voice: Well, maybe we can check it.

Cohn: If there is another one, or anything like that, we will certainly...

Symington: Now, let's get this information, counsel. Is the Robert Hall that you know a colored man?

Mrs. Moss: Yes, sir.

Symington: You are sure of that?

Mrs. Moss: Yes. I am pretty sure that he is colored.

Symington: Does he look like a colored man, or does he look more like a white man?

Mrs. Moss: The man I have in mind as Robert Hall was a man about my complexion.

Symington: About your complexion. Well, it's fair to say that you didn't think he was a white man?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir. I didn't.

Symington: I would like to put in the record: One of the reporters said he is certain that Robert Hall of the Daily Worker is a white man.

McClellan: If one's black and the other's white, they're different!

Cohn: Can you tell us why - assuming there are two Robert Halls here - can you tell us why this Robert Hall, who was in the union, would come around and ask your family to subscribe to the Daily Worker? Did you know him to be a Communist?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir, I did not know...

Symington: Mrs. Moss, what are you doing now? Are you working?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Symington: Why not?

Mrs. Moss: I was suspended.

Symington: You were suspended?

Mrs. Moss: Yes, sir, until this is over.

Symington: By the ...

Mrs. Moss: By the Department of Army.

Symington: By the Department of Army?

Mrs. Moss: Yes, sir.

Symington: How long ago was that?

Mrs. Moss: I believe it was the twenty-fifth of February.

Symington: What reason did they give for suspending you?

Murrow (OVER ANNIE LEE MOSS READING): This woman, under suspicion because of charges made by Senator McCarthy and Roy Cohn, alleged to have examined and corrected secret and encoded overseas messages, attempted to read the uncoded words of her suspense notice.

Mrs. Moss (HALTINGLY AND STUMBLING): The immediate suspension is deemed necessary and advisable in the interest of national security under the authority of Public Law 733, Eighty-first Congress, and executive order 10-450, pending ad-adjud- (LAWYER HELPS HER) adjudication of your case, under AR 620-220-1."

Symington: Did you read that the very best you could?

Mrs. Moss: Yes, I did. (GIGGLES.)

Symington: Did you - did you ever - to the best of your knowledge, have you ever talked to a Communist in your life?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir - not to my knowledge.

Symington: Did you ever hear of Karl Marx?

Mrs. Moss: Who's that? (GENERAL LAUGHTER.)

Symington: I will pass the question. You were born in South Carolina, moved to North Carolina, then moved to Washington?

Mrs. Moss: That's right.

Symington: Do you think you are a good American?

Mrs. Moss: Yes.

Symington: Would you ever do anything to hurt your country?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Symington: Have you ever talked to anybody about espionage? About -- (TO LAWYER) Do you want to - ?

MRS. MOSS'S COUNSEL EXPLAINS ABOVE QUESTION TO HER INAUDIBLY AND ENDS WITH THE WORD "SPIES.")

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Symington: Have you ever had any information that you received in your job that you passed on to anybody about these codes?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Symington (QUESTION PROMPTED BY MCCLELLAN): Did anybody ever ask you for any of that information?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir. If they had I would have reported it.

Symington: You would have reported it?

Mrs. Moss: I certainly would have.

Symington: Has anybody ever asked you to join the Communist Party?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Symington: Has anybody ever asked you to join any organization of any kind that you thought might be against the best interests of the United States?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Symington: What are you living on now? Have you got any savings?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Symington: You haven't?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Symington: If you - if you don't get work pretty soon, what are you going to do?

Mrs. Moss: I am going down to the Welfare.

Symington: Going down to the Welfare?

Mrs. Moss: Yes.

Mundt: Mr. Cohn?

Cohn: We have - uh - part of the testimony of Mrs. Markward was to the effect that another member of this club, and an active member of the Communist Part at that time, at whose home Communist meetings were held, was a woman named Hattie Griffin. Did you know Hattie Griffin?

Mrs. Moss: I lived with Hattie Griffins two weeks.

Cohn: And at what address did you live with Hattie Griffin?

Mrs. Moss: It was in the six-hundred block of Second Street. I don't remember the number.

Cohn: That was the same - in accordance with Mrs. Markward's testimony. Now, when you were living with Hattie Griffin during that two-week period, did you know that she was a member of the Communist Party?

Mrs. Moss: No sir, I did not.

Cohn: Did you know she was holding Communist meetings in her home?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir, I did not.

Cohn: You did not know that?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Cohn: She never told you that?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Symington: Did you ever discuss with this woman you say you lived with two weeks - did you ever discuss communism with her?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Symington: In any way?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir.

Symington: At any time?

Mrs. Moss: Because I didn't know anything about it - I never heard it until 1948.

Symington: Was there ever anybody that she ever brought to the house for meetings?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir. Not while we were there.

Symington: Never once?

Mrs. Moss: Not while we were there.

Cohn: Mr. Chairman.

Mundt: Mr. Cohn?

Cohn: I have no further questions of this witness at this time. I will say this: We have the testimony of Mrs. Markward, the undercover agent of the FBI, stating that Annie Lee Moss was a member - a dues-paying member of the Communist Party - ah - the Northeast Club of the Communist Party. We have corroboration of that testimony by another witness who was called before the Committee and gave a sworn statement to the effect that she also knew Mrs. Moss as a member of the Northeast Club of the Communist Party.

McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make this point: We are making statements against a witness who has come and submitted to cross-examination. Now, if we - She has already lost her job; she's been suspended because of this action. I am not defending her. If she is a Communist, I want her exposed; but to make these statements that we have got corroborating evidence that she is a Communist, under these circumstances I think she is entitled to have it produced here in her presence and let the public know about it - and let her know about it. (APPLAUSE) I don't like to try people by hearsay evidence. (APPLAUSE) I like to get the witnesses here and try 'em by testimony under oath.

Disregard underlining

Mundt: The Chair will rule that the comments of Mr. Cohn be stricken from the record.

McClellan: I didn't ask that. I didn't ask that, Mr. Chairman.

Mundt (INAUDIBLE) - try to produce a witness in public because the FBI may have her under cover. We don't want to ...

McClellan: You can't strike these statements made by counsel here as to evidence that we are having and withholding - you cannot strike that from the press nor from the public mind, once it's planted there. That is - that is the - evil of it. Well, I don't think it's fair to a witness - to a citizen of this country to bring them up here and cross-examine them, and then, when they get through, say, "We have got something - the FBI's got something on you that condemns you."

Mundt: The Chair agrees...

McClellan: It's not sworn testimony. It's convicting people by rumor, and hearsay, and innuendo... (APPLAUSE.)

Symington: Do you know anybody named Mrs. Mary Markward?

Mrs. Moss: No, sir, I do not.

Symington: I think the record ought to show that Mrs. Markward says that she has never seen Mrs. Annie Lee Moss at any Communist meeting, but it is her recollection that Mrs. Moss paid her dues and was a member in good standing. Do you know anybody else in this town named Moss? Have you ever looked up a telephone number? Are there any Mosses in Washington besides you?

Mrs. Moss: Yes, sir. There's three Annie Lee Mosses.

Jackson: What was that? Will you state that again?

Mrs. Moss: There were three Annie Lee Mosses. And when I went to get a real-estate license I had an awful lot of trouble then...

Symington: I want - I want to say something to you - and I may be sticking my neck out, and I may be wrong - but I have been listening to you testify this afternoon, and I think you are telling the truth.

Mrs. Moss: I certainly am.

Symington: If you are not taken back in the Army, you come around and see me, and I am going to see that you get a job.

Mrs. Moss: Well, thanks a lot. (APPLAUSE.)

Murrow: You will notice that neither Senator McClellan, nor Senator Symington, nor this reporter know or claim that Mrs. Moss is or was a Communist. Their claim was simply that she had the right to meet her accusers face to face. Senator McCarthy claimed that Mrs. Moss had access to the code room. The Army denies it. That ought to be easy enough to prove. Here is another document from the record. President Eisenhower, in November of 1953, talking about the right of every man to look his accuser in the eye:

Eisenhower: Why are we proud? We are proud, first of all, because from the beginning of this nation, a man can walk upright, no matter who he is - or she is. He can walk upright and meet his friend or his enemy; and he does not fear that because that enemy may be in a position of great power that he can be suddenly thrown in jail to rot there, without charges and with no recourse to justice. We have the Habeas Corpus Act, and we respect it. I was born - raised in a little town of which most of you have never heard, but in the West it's a famous place. It's called Abilene, Kansas. We had as our marshal for a long time a man named Wild Bill Hickok. If you don't know about him, read your Westerns more. Now, that town had a code, and I was raised as a boy to prize that code. It was" Meet anyone face to face with whom you disagree." You could not sneak up on him from behind, do any damage to him, without suffering the penalty of an outraged citizenry.

If you met him face to face and took the same risk he did, you could get away with almost anything, as long as the bullet was in the front. (LAUGHTER.) And today, although none of you have the great fortune, I think, of being from Abilene, Kansas, you live, after all, by that same code, in your ideals and in the respect you give to certain qualities. In this country, if someone dislikes you or accuses you, he must come up in front. He cannot hide behind the shadow. He cannot assassinate you or your character from behind without suffering the penalties which an outraged citizenry will inflict. If we are going to continue to be proud that we are Americans, there must be no weakening of the codes by which we have lived. By the right to meet your accuser face to face - if you have one. By your right to go to the church or the synagogue, or even the mosque, of your own choosing. By your right to speak your mind and be protected in it. Ladies and gentlemen, the things that make us proud to be Americans are of the soul and of the spirit. (APPLAUSE.)

Murrow: November 1953, the thirty-fourth President of the United States, speaking rather eloquently about due process of law. Good night, and good luck!

MRS. MOSS WAS RESTORED TO HER JOB, PENDING FURTHER INVESTIGATION. ON AUGUST 4TH SHE WAS AGAIN SUSPENDED, AND HER CASE WAS REOPENED ON THE BASIS OF NEW INFORMATION. THE CHARGES WERE AIRED BY THE SECURITY HEARING BOARD, AND ON JANUARY 18TH, 1955, SHE WAS ORDERED RESTORED

TO DUTY IN A "NONSENSITIVE POSITION" BY DEFENSE SECRETARY CHARLES E. WILSON, WHO FOUND SHE WAS NOT "ACTUALLY SUBVERSIVE OR DISLOYAL TO THE UNITED STATES."

Dear Ed:

Gossip has it that you were considering interviewing Annie Lee Moss. If so, I suggest that you have one of your Washington representatives see Col. Kenneth E. Belieu, who is a good friend of mine. He is in the office of the Secretary of the Army.

Likewise, if you are contemplating doing anything on the proposals for Universal Military Training, I can give you some non-public angles.

More important -- if you can make the distinction between the use of reason and logic on the one hand, and imagination and intuition on the other, I suggest that you, in the near future, relax with me for a few minutes.

You can draw any dirty implications you want from the last sentence!

Yours,

Dear Mr. Milt:

Under separate cover, we are returning the film of Edward R. Murrow's SEE IT NOW program on mental health, which we used on Saturday, May 15th.

It is unfortunate that any difficulty should arise over the use of such a valuable medium in the field of mental health. We were not aware that your policies with regard to your own materials and their use by other mental health societies would include this CBS film. When we called to ask for the use of the film, we were surprised to discover that its use was restricted to those mental health societies which were associated with you in the fund drive. Our only interest in the whole matter, from the beginning, has been in getting this film for a showing to one of our groups. We were in a hurry for the film because the showing was scheduled for Saturday, May 15th. Therefore, when we were told by your office that it was a matter of policy not to loan this film to groups which are not associated with you in fund raising, we immediately wrote to CBS to ask if they would make available another copy of the film on the same basis that they had made copies available to your organization.

After this letter was written and mailed, we received a call from your office which indicated either that you had changed your policy, or that the information which your office gave us in the beginning was incorrect. We were glad that you felt able to provide us with this film in time for its scheduled showing. It arrived on time and was shown to a large and appreciative audience, and we consider it an excellent film for mental health education.

There is far too much work to be done in the field of preventing mental illness to lose or waste any of our energies in matters of this kind. We appreciate your help in making one of our programs a success.

Cordially,

Dear Dr. Silberstein:

Mr. Murrow has asked me to thank you for your nice letter and kind comments of April 28th and to take care of the question you raise.

We have had a large number of requests from Mental Health Centers which also would like to purchase a kinescope of the SEE IT NOW program of April 27th. It has, therefore, been decided that the best way in handling these requests is to make available to the National Association for Mental Health, Inc. ten copies of the program. I am sure that if you direct your request to Mr. Saunders Thomas of that Association at 1790 Broadway, New York City, he will be able to assist you.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Our entire staff was impressed with your Mental Health program last evening. This is exactly the type of program we are endeavoring to establish and present to the public on Staten Island.

It would be of tremendous value to us in our educational and forum programs if we were able to purchase a kinescope. Please let us know if this is possible. If not, do you have any suggestions for us along this line?

Thank you very much for the excellent program and careful thinking devoted to this matter.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

At Dr. Ackerly's suggestion I am enclosing a copy of a letter which we received from Brockport, New York and our answer to it. We were pleased to see this letter because we feel this is the really important part of mental health and appreciate your including the work with the very young child in your program.

We have gotten good reports of the program from our friends and relatives all over the country. We feel we should call to your attention the fact that it was not always clear in the minds of the public exactly what the relation of one service to another was. I discussed this point with Mr. Scott and I think he will be able to explain our point of view.

It was personally very enjoyable to me to work with your men during their visit here.

Yours very truly,

Dear Sir:

Last night I watched on Ed Murrow's program a very interesting half hour on Mental Health. It brought to mind a problem I have with my young son age seven months. He is a perfectly happy normal youngster in the day time, but at night he gets up several times. He cries and cries till I put him in our bed then he goes to sleep and when I return him to his bed again he starts again. My husband argues about this as I believe he should be left to cry it out and get used to the fact that he must remain in his bed.

My husband who insists on giving him a bottle and playing with him and doing a good job in waking him fully, when he cries turns around and goes to sleep leaving me to cope with a widely awakened child. The child has to sleep in our room as we only have three rooms. I have consulted my Dr. and he just says let him cry it out. I try to but get such a bad time from my husband as he is a college senior who just studies Mental Health and insists he should be left to play in the middle of the night. I wished you could help us with this problem as we are going to have another child in a few months and I don't think I could take two children up at night.

Would appreciate any help you could give.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Pamela Mathieson

Dear Mrs. Mathieson:

We appreciate your writing to us about your problem and I think we can understand the very real dilemma that you are in. Unfortunately it is extremely difficult to advise you at long range what to do on the spot but I think that there are in your vicinity physicians who could help you with this problem.

Knowing that you are close to Rochester may I suggest Dr. Myrtle Logan at the Strong Memorial Hospital. She, I am sure, would be most understanding of your difficulty. If it is not too far, Dr. Sherman Little at the Buffalo Children's Hospital would also be helpful.

I feel that you have a problem which, if it can be solved now, may prevent future difficulties.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I wish to commend your very excellent program, "See It Now," which in my opinion is one of the Country's best and most objective presentations of news reporting. I find myself looking forward with anticipation to your program each week. May I say in all sincerity that "See It Now" combines both entertainment and news value unexcelled by any other news analyst.

I was particularly interested in your program of April 27, 1954 regarding the Louisville, Kentucky project on mental health. Since this is in my own area of work, your program of that date seemed to offer great possibilities for the interpretation of mental health to the public. I am wondering if your program of April 27th, 1954 is on film, and if so, could it be obtained on a loan basis or purchased? I am sure there are many agencies and organization within the State of Kansas that would be interested in this presentation.

Thank you for your consideration in this matter.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I wish to commend your very excellent program, "See It Now," which in my opinion is one of the Country's best and most objective presentations of news reporting. I find myself looking forward with anticipation to your program each week. May I say in all sincerity that "See It Now" combines both entertainment and news value unexcelled by any other news analyst.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

This is to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 6, 1954 and also to express my appreciation for the effective manner your representatives of SEE IT NOW filmed portions of LANTAGLEX-54.

Your program reflected creditably on the exercising of elements of the 2d Marine Air-Ground Task Force, Fleet Marine Force in the primary amphibious role of the United States Marine Corps.

Dear General Smith:

It was gracious of you to allow representatives of SEE IT NOW to film portions of the Lantaglax - 54 maneuver in which Marines of your command recently participated. I realize the difficulties involved in making men and equipment available for our purposes at such a time.

My representatives have informed me of the cordial receptions accorded them at both Cherry Point and Camp LeJeune, North Carolina, and of the vigorous and effective manner in which your officers and men assisted them. Lieutenant Colonel Patrick Laughlin, your liaison officer, was particularly courteous, helpful and efficient in the continuing coordination required.

Sincerely yours,

May 13, 1954

Dear Mr. Sullivan:

Mr. Paley has handed me your letter of May 7 regarding my SEE IT NOW broadcast of May 4. Permit me to give you the following information. Every foot of film used was screened and scrutinized by security officers assinged by the Navy and the Marine Corps. Every word of the copy used by me was likewise checked by the security officers. This is our unfailing practice in connection with programs depicting maneuvers or actual operations of any branch of the armed forces.

I attach copies of letters received from Rear Admiral H. P. Smith, Commander of LANTAGLEX-54, and Rear Admiral Lewis S. Parks, Chief of Information.

I have no alternative but to regard the clearance by Naval and Marine Corps security officers, plus the commendations of Admiral Smith and Admiral Parks, as being of rather more considerable weight than the hysterical, if not libelous, comments of "a former Naval Reserve PIO officer".

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It occurred to me that perhaps you would like to see the enclosed despatch which the Chief of Naval Operations sent out last week concerning the "See It Now" Amphibious program.

Your comprehensive report on the Amphibious exercises is indeed a notable contribution to a fuller public understanding of the Navy's role in the security of the free world.

I am to be detached shortly as Chief of Information and I desire to express my sincere appreciation to you and your staff for the splendid cooperation and support you have given the Navy during my tenure in this billet. Your assistance has helped me in carrying out this difficult assignment.

Whenever you are ready to do another Navy story I am certain we can deliver a good show.

Hon. Charles E. Wilson,
Secretary of Defense
Defense Department

Dear Sir:

As one interested in sustaining the security of this country, as a loyal American, I wish to file formal protest at the showing of a Navy-Marine maneuver film by Edward R. Murrow, Tuesday evening, May 4th, 1954, on his CBS program, SEE IT NOW.

One can only consider this presentation to be further evidence of this man's continuing leftist tendencies, if not egregious treasonous action.

Whoever released this film is as blameworthy as Murrow. As a former Naval Reserve PIO officer I can safely state that no loyal Naval officer in his right mind would have cleared a film with such information as:

1. Tactics of demolition teams, equipment they used described, including fuses and how they are set.
2. Specific capacities of various landing craft.
3. Length of time to unload, or land, certain numbers.
4. Close-ups of new rockets, methods of loading and firing same.
5. Length of causeway from LSDs to beaches.
6. New helicopter tactics and capacities.
7. Discussion of beachmaster's role.

These are only a few of the items that were depicted and described — and, undoubtedly monitored and recorded by Soviet agents. What perfect training films the Red Army will now have! Every true-blooded American should demand an investigation of this flagrant travesty on security regulations.

Trusting you will attend to the matter.

Sincerely,

Walter Sullivan Jr.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

As Naval Commander of LANTAGLEX-54, I naturally had intense interest in your program, "SEE IT NOW", of Tuesday past. Your presentation was most effective and technically accurate, and was enthusiastically received by naval personnel here in Norfolk.

I wish to thank you for presenting to the public this important aspect of naval warfare. It was of great value and benefit to the Amphibious Force and the Naval Service as a whole.

It was a most pleasant experience for me to meet and work with the members of your competent staff. If my command can be of assistance to you in the future, do not hesitate to call on us.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The attached copy of my letter to Commander Cutter (and his to me) are quite self-explanatory. Since writing that letter to Sec. Wilson I have come upon some good word about you that makes me feel quite embarassed.(1)

It hurts the pride to back down and this letter is expressly for that purpose. I hereby retract my imputation of egregious treasonous action. However, I still think the release of that film was not the most intelligent thing to do. I would appreciate your serious consideration of the question I put to Commander Cutter. Would you send a copy of that film to the Russian Army or Navy. I'm sure you wouldn't. Before there are any more releases of this kind don't you think a lot of thought should be given to the possibility that the telecast can be filmed and recorded?

"No excellent soul is exempt from a mixture of madness," quoth Aristotle. Since I can't claim excellence I must have more than my share of that mixture. Without getting soppy....please don't run down "hysteria" too much. It is a very natural and necessary defense mechanism of the human body without which your progenitors through the centuries could not have survived. And I dare any man to deny it of himself.

I hope you realize that my letter to Mr. Wilson was properly motivated though not fortuitously well worded. No doubt we will never be friends but leave us not part enemies.

Sincerely yours,

Walter Sullivan Jr.

Dear Sir:

I am in receipt of your communication of May 14th concerning my protest of the release of the Navy-Marine manuever film shown by Edward R. Murrow on SEE IT NOW, May 4th, 1954. I realize now that imputing treason to anyone is a very serious matter and that a letter written in a moment of pique shouldn't be mailed for at least a week. I have expressed my regret to Mr. Murrow separately but wish to do so here for the benefit of the people receiving copies of that letter.

I still am beside myself for an answer to a most poignant question: Would the United States Navy deliberately send a print of the film used on SEE IT NOW to the Soviet Army/or Navy? I don't think it would. Yet this end was easily achieved, or could have been achieved if a Soviet agent had monitored with film and recording equipment, the production telecast by CBS. Dont you think the Navy should take such a consideration into serious thought?

I have thought it over in my mind several days now but can come up with no other answer than that a little more thinking could go on in the Naval Office of Information. Besides serving in PIO I was also an Amphibs officer during WORLD WAR II for a short time and I appreciate the need for positive publicity for this forgotten branch of the Navy, but not at the expense of security.

I must maintain my opinion against such telecasts but with the qualification that such are not treasonous manifestations of infiltration, but merely ill-advized... Once again my regrets for going off half-cooked at the United States Navy and Mr. Murrow.

Sincerely,

Walter Sullivan, Jr.

Mr. Walter Sullivan, Jr.

Dear Sir:

Your letter of May 7th to the Secretary of Defense has been referred to this office. Thank you for drawing our attention to a possible breach of security involved in the showing of an amphibious warfare film on the Edward R. Murrow Columbia Broadcasting System-Television show, "See It Now", of May 4th. Letters from alert and loyal citizens are always welcome.

This motion picture was made with the complete knowledge and full cooperation of the U. S. Navy. It was months in planning and took several weeks to complete the shooting and editing. Competent naval personnel scrutinized the entire project from its conception to its conclusion. Working in close coordination with the Navy, Columbia Broadcasting System Camera crews shot scenes at the Naval Amphibious Base, Little Creek, Virginia; the Marine Base at Camp Lejeune, North Carolina and the Onslow Beach vicinity, where the landing was made. Mr. Murrow was invited down to attend the landing but, due to previous commitments, he was unable to attend.

The Amphibious Force is the work horse of the Navy. Although their task is vitally important, they are somewhat less glamorous than other segments of the Fleet and consequently are usually pressed for adequate personnel. This film helped to give the Amphibious Force some of the public recognition they so richly deserve.

Let us take this opportunity to ease your conscience in regard to any flagrant travestry of government security regulations. Not only was the finished product carefully reviewed by a board of censors before being aired, but censorship was applied to the movie throughout its entire filming. As a former Naval Reserve Public Information Officer, you are undoubtedly aware that besides clearing the motion picture security-wise, all personnel involved -- cameramen, soundmen, directors, announcers, etc. -- were screened. Some material used in the production of this movie was classified during World War II but since then has been declassified.

14 MAY 1954

The Amphibious Force keeps in trim by making several of these rehearsal landings each year. To many of these assault landings both the general public and foreign military personages are cordially invited. This was one of these landings. There were hundreds of civilians and several foreign military personnel present, in nearby grandstands, to witness this landing.

We hope this letter has helped to reassure you that no violation of security regulations was either made or intended. Your interest in this matter is appreciated.

I wish to take this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation to you for the excellent cooperation and assistance extended to my representatives in the recent filming of an Amphibious Landing for presentation on our CBS program, SEE IT NOW.

My field directors, Mr. Edmund Scott and Mr. Joseph Wershba, inform me that the hospitality and liaison work performed by your Public Information Officer, Lt. Paul K. "A STUDY OF TWO CITIES"

Gastonia, North Carolina

Natchitoches, Louisiana

May 25, 1954

A STUDY OF TWO CITIES

MAY 25, 1954

JOSEPH WERSHBA: This is Joe Wershba in Gastonia, North Carolina, eighteen miles west of Charlotte, eight miles north of the South Carolina border; population 30,000—eighty-five per cent white, fifteen per cent Negro. A big textile center, Gastonia calls itself "The Spindle City," and "The City of Growing Beauty." It has a good record of race relations.

EDWARD R. MURROW: We move 881 miles south, to reporter Ed Scott.

ED SCOTT: This is the Cane River on whose banks the city of Natchitoches, Louisiana, was built, Ed. It's the oldest town in the Louisiana Purchase, having had its roots in 1714. It's traditionally and culturally Southern in mood. It has a population today of twelve thousand persons—almost half of whom are Negroes.

MURROW: The Negroes of Natchitoches are distinguished by a controversial statue in the town's square. "Erected in grateful recognition of the arduous and faithful services of the good darkies of Louisiana." Otherwise, the almost 6,000 citizens of Natchitoches observe the normal relationship of white to Negro. Like Gastonia it has a good record in race relations.

This is the Supreme Court of the United States. For 165 years its sacred trust has been to rule and interpret the law of the land as embodied in the Constitution—equal justice under the law. On May 17, this Court ruled unanimously that segregation in public schools was not legal. Tonight, "See It Now" devotes its entire half hour to an effort to reflect the opinions and attitudes of certain persons who live in Gastonia, North Carolina, and in Natchitoches, Louisiana. There is no such thing as a "typical" Southern town. We selected Natchitoches and Gastonia because they reflect communities in two distinct parts of The South. We start with Dave Gillespie of the Gaston Citizen.

DAVE GILLESPIE: Our greatest need at the moment is level-headedness. Whites of the South should not panic. Negroes should not whet their impatience. It is impossible for the South to turn back the clock and undo the injustice that was done to the Negro when he was brought into slavery. We cannot wish him away, we cannot close our eyes to his presence. The matter of educating the Negro is only one facet of the question; but the manner in which we handle it, under the principles of the Constitution, will set the pace for the solution of other phases of the so-called Negro problem. In a day when many nations and races are looking to us for leadership to peace and to freedom, we need to reflect in our own country the traditional American virtues of justice and fair play. All parts of this country, not only the South, should do some real soul-searching in this respect.

MURROW: Next, Kay Dickson, who runs the Gastonia Bank of Commerce.

KAY DICKSON: Frankly, I am troubled. I had hoped for a decision of the Supreme Court to be something in the nature of a straddle. I was opposed to Earl Warren being put on the Supreme Court for several reasons. I thought that he did not have sufficient judicial experience, and I was satisfied that he would not be sympathetic with the Southern viewpoint. Now, while this decision was unanimous, yet Chief Justice masterminded it and rendered the decision. North Carolina, in my opinion, has the very best of social—of race relations of any Southern state, and I would hate to see that disturbed. The thought in my mind is that a proper solution—the correct solution—would be arrived at, not by revolution, but by evolution.

MURROW: Gastonia has a white high school and one for Negroes. This one is for whites.

MISS UNDERWOOD [TEACHER]: We have been seeing in our newspapers, "An era comes to an end." Our Court has said that the doctrine of equal but separate public-school education has no place. What do you think about this decision? Jane?

JANE: Well, our parents are more against nonsegregation than we are, but the young people are actually the ones that have to live with them, and we may as well adapt ourselves to it now.

BOY: Well, I don't feel exactly that way about it. I think people in Gastonia during the past years have gotten away from this purely segregation business, because right now in our city council we have a colored man—on our city council here in Gastonia. And—but I don't think that—I think maybe I'm like most people around here, we don't react to things being forced down our throats like this. It's an entirely different thing, see, other than working it out yourself.

ANOTHER BOY: Well, I feel as a majority of the Southerners do, that this decision is like a cloud coming over our Southland. But I think, in time, our colored citizens and white citizens can work out this problem, and I think it will strengthen America in the end.

GIRL: Well, when I learned of the Supreme Court decision I was disappointed, because I am a Southerner. I was taught to be respectful of the Negroes and they were in my home and I had a maid to bring me up, but I was not taught to socialize with them. I think since the Supreme Court has given this decision, they will gradually go into our homes, our circles, and our church; and if this has to be done since the Supreme Court has given this, we are going to have to do it slowly, because it's such a different way of living. It's going to affect everything that we do.

GIRL: Well, Miss Underwood, being a native Georgian, I am very much against nonsegregation. I feel that the Negroes certainly deserve equal rights as far as education in schools are concerned, but I am against the Negroes and the whites going to school together. I think that we, as white people, have developed an air of superiority over their race, and I think it would cause for a split in both races if they mixed and mingled, because some of them couldn't come up to meet our standards.

GIRL: Well, my opinion on this issue would probably be different from the others here because I have had experience in going to school with the colored in New Jersey. And I have lived up North—well, a lot of my life. And I think that if the people down here could see just how well the colored and white get along in the school in the North, and if they could adapt themselves down here like they are there, I don't think there would be any trouble; but it would take a while for the people down here to adapt themselves, because we aren't used to anything like that.

BOY: We still have many people in the South who have the opinion of separate but equal rights—separate but equal privileges. I think that probably that opinion is out of date. By that I mean that during the earlier history of our nation we had aristocracy. We had a definite line of demarcation as far as the races were concerned. I think the Southerners have progressed to the extent, now, that we can approach this decision and this question as open-minded individuals. And I think we must do it that way or else we will never solve the problem. That old opinion, that old school of thought, is out of date.

MURROW: This is Highland High School, on North York Road.

VINCENT MALLORY [TEACHER]: History tells us that we have much to remember if we were to study American history. There are a number of events that the American people can never forget. To mention a few: the discovery of America, 1492; the Dred Scott decision as handed down by the Supreme Court; and the Proclamation of Emancipation; and perhaps during your time the development of the atomic bomb. On Monday, May the 17th, Chief Justice Warren read the decision of the Supreme Court justices which ruled out segregation. I am pleased, personally, at the vote that was handed down—a nine-to-nothing vote. It proved that the American people are thinking; that our statesmen are truly living up to expectations; that they are basing their opinion on religious belief; basing their opinion on democratic living. Suppose, now, we hear what ideas you have on the Supreme Court decision.

GIRL: I like the Supreme Court ruling on segregation because I think that we, as Negroes, can get a broader education and can advance farther than we have in the past. And one other important reason is, the Communists cannot use this as propaganda against a democratic form of government.

ANOTHER GIRL: The segregation laws were created at a time right after the Civil War, when there was intense feeling against the Negro; when the whites had only thought of the Negroes as working in their house, and so forth. And you must realize that it must have been sort of hard for them to get used to someone being accepted as their equal, after working for them—something like a cat, or household animal, or something that you expect to see but there is no great love for. And these laws are old, and they were created by people who had nothing to do with this modern civilization of ours—and they are altogether outdated.

GIRL: I am pleased that the issue of segregation has ended. But for myself, I would not like to attend the schools with the white children, because of the fact that we aren't too welcome; and I think that the consequences will be a mixture of Negroes and whites, but the consequences would also be an embarrasing situation to the Negroes.

MURROW: Three days after the Supreme Court decision, the Parent-Teachers Association met at a white elementary school.

REVEREND HARDEE: And I'd like to know what some of the rest of you think, and I'd like to hear some opinions from some of the rest of you.

MISS PETTIT: I am a classroom teacher here at the school. Personally, as a teacher, I wouldn't mind teaching both colored and white children, because I don't think there would really be any problem. I think the real problem would be in the home. That's where you learn prejudice, is at home. And you've got to educate these parents.

PAT MCSWAIN: This problem is not something new. We have seen it work itself out in the armed services here in the South. We have seen it work itself out in the postal services. We have seen it work itself out in the police forces of our communities all through the South. We go into the stores with colored people. We try on the clothes that they try on, and we buy them that they have already tried on, and they seem to fit us, and we seem to like it. I believe with all of my heart that this problem will be worked out. I hope that it will not—that it will be worked out gradually. I hope that they can enter the first grade and work from there on up, and then it will work itself out so gradually that we will not be conscious of the fact that we have had a problem. And I believe the South will come forward with a progressive move, and that this section of the South will not be radical enough to do foolish, like maybe some other sections of the South will do.

MURROW: The Negro P. T. A.

CHAIRMAN JOHN F. GLYNN: As for me, it was something that I had looked forward to with anticipation because, had the Supreme Court ruled otherwise, it would have, to my mind, been somewhat of a let-down, where the United States would have lost face in the world because of the problem of segregation. As of now, we will have some views from Mrs. Hope.

MRS. HOPE: Mr. Chairman, in my opinion we don't want—we don't want to be in the homes and sleeping and doing with the white people. We want a free—we want to live free, and feel free. We want schools like they have. We want streets like they have. We want homes like they have. We—we just want the same wages—and we work like they do, we want wages like they do. We don't want to be in their homes and in their schools. We want schools of our own. We are people, just people, and we have children—and we want our children brought up just like the white people brought up. But we want them to be just there. We want to be ourselves. We don't want like a heap of them think we want. We want freedom in every way, and everywhere. We want to feel free. I just burns within me sometimes when I see the conditions of our children and our homes, and that cause so much crime. That's why the crimes come—in back alleys and back streets, over the fence. When they clean up that, and put us on the map like the white, we will feel free, and that's as far as we want to go. We just want our equal rights that's due us.

GLYNN: Thank you, Mrs. Hope.

MURROW: Natchitoches, Louisiana, is seventy-three miles from Shreveport, fifty-eight miles to Alexandria. As with Gastonia, no Supreme Court action since the Dred Scott decision hit it with such impact. This is Cunningham of the Natchitoches Times.

CHARLES CUNNINGHAM: We believe that the Supreme Court decision ignores the fact that, for good or ill, the white South pays almost all the taxes that go to the school system, and that he who controls the purse had better be considered in making plans. It is this factor that makes us decide that Monday's decision may well turn out to be a disaster for the Negro.

MURROW: Natchitoches has one college, for whites only. There is a high school for each race.

LEONARD NICHOLS [TEACHER]: The Negro has made tremendous advances in this state and in the South in the past fifteen years, and that leads me to say that segregation for both races is best. Segregation has and is working in the South, which contains two-thirds of the Negro population. The population of the Negro people in the United States is fifteen million. The population of the Negro people in the South is ten million. In Minnesota, with 14,022 Negroes, or one out of every 200, it certainly wouldn't be the same situation as compared with Mississippi with a population of ninety out of every 200. I am now going to throw this discussion open to you and receive your questions and comments.

GIRL: Even though the Supreme Court has passed the ruling that segregation should be abandoned, that's no sign it will be. I believe that the Negroes will still go to their school and we will go to our school, unless they have some system of zoning; and that wouldn't work in Natchitoches, because the whites and the colored live too close to one another. You just couldn't zone it off. Anyway, there'd be whites going to colored school and colored going to white school—just a few, and those few would be very unhappy.

BOY: I personally do not believe that the Negro of the South wants to go to school with the white people. Therefore, if the law is passed and segregation is done away with, and we do go to school with them, I believe that such things as race riots and other things will come about because I do not believe the South is ready for segregation—nonsegregation. Excuse me.

GIRL: And you have to consider the fact that there are an awful lot of colored teachers in the state, in our State of Louisiana, and if we did away with segregation right now and had, say, the two races intermingling in school next year—well, there would be an awful lot of colored teachers out of jobs, because—well, it would just be that way. I mean, mostly if a colored teacher and a white teacher would both apply at the same place, most likely the white teacher would get the job.

MISS MARTIN [TEACHER]: A decision of the Supreme Court has been made that segregation has no place in public schools. We were asking you today to come prepared to discuss some of the problems that might face you as a result of this decision. What difference might this make in your lives? As craftsmen, as workers, how do you feel that this Supreme Court decision will work out in education?

BOY: In my opinion, Miss Martin, I think that the decision handed down by the Supreme Court is one of the most wonderfulest things that happened in America and especially in the South in the last fifty years, and it will affect me greatly. Speaking of myself only, not being financially able to go to a distant college and spending money, I figure if this law is put into action that I'll be able to attend one college right here in my hometown of Natchitoches—and that college is Northwestern State College—to obtain an education.

ANOTHER BOY: I think that if the white and the colored students mingle, I don't think there would be any conflicts between them, and because I have lived with white people before—I am a veteran—and I slept with them, I ate with them, and we got along fine. We were just friends, and I became friends with some of them before I became friends with my own race. And I think it's the wonderfulest thing that ever happened to America.

THIRD BOY: Miss Martin, I'd like to add to what Cy said about in the classroom. I don't know exactly how I would feel in the classroom with the white boys there, because we have been segregated all the time. But I would like to experience this, because all men are created equal, and I think that if we were going to school with the white boy and have equal facilities with them we'd be better students, because we don't know if I am better than they are or they are better than I am. I'd like the experience—see what would happen.

MURROW: On Saturday evening there was a meeting of citizens at the court house. By custom, the whites and Negroes sat on different sides of the aisle.

REVEREND: The Court could not very well have handed down any other decision, for had it done so, it would have said to the world that we are afraid to really risk democracy.

JOHN MAKAR [ATTORNEY]: I went to at least eight different schools in Pennsylvania and in Detroit, Michigan, and in all of my years in the elementary schools and in the high schools, I did not meet one Negro teacher during all of those years under a nonsegregated system. Professor Williams?

PROFESSOR HANK WILLIAMS: Mr. Chairman—Mr. Makar, are there as many Negroes in the North as in the South?

MAKAR: In certain areas—in certain areas there are, and I believe in proportion to population you don't have as many colored teachers in the nonsegregated areas of the North that you have in the South.

WILLIAMS: If I am going to a state-approved school, coming out with a certificate approved by the State of Louisiana and recognized by the nation, and I am only qualified to teach my childre —or colored children, I have no business in a classroom at all. my education or my training doesn't enable me to fix as good pipe as a plumber as there can be found anywhere—if my train ing as a shoemaker does not train me to fix as good a shoe a could be found any place—if my training to use the surgeon' knife, if you will, does not train me to cut on one human bein who has the same anatomy as another, I dare say my trainin has been at fault. I have no business in a classroom at all.

MRS. LEARY: I don't think the decision of the Supreme Court i right. I think it's taking away state rights, and I believe our country was founded on the principle, democracy for the people and by the people. And I believe that you people, our colored people, will agree that Louisiana has done all they could to give equal opportunities to all people, regardless of color, race, or creed. And we should give everybody equal opportunity, but I have been living around the colored people all my life and I don't believe that they want to go to our white schools. They want to have their own schools and their own things so they feel like they belong to them, and not mix in with the white.

MURROW: On the seventh day after the Supreme Court decision, the people of Natchitoches went to church.

REVEREND J. D. WYNN: As citizens of the United States, let us not be too hasty, but let us remember to think and plan with the spirit of Christ. Some of the good people of both races who live under the protection of the United States may not be satisfied with the decision of the Supreme Court, but all of us know that the Supreme Court of the United States is the highest governing power that we have in the world. Paul tells us: "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers, for there is no power but of God. MURROW: And in Gastonia, North Carolina, on the seventh day, the people went to church.

DR. WILSON O. WELDON: My own heritage is rooted in the South. My father born in 1847 in South Carolina owned slaves for a few years. He lived through the hard days of reconstruction and under the carpetbagger. Yet he came to adjust himself to these new economic conditions and to change the race relations. And I suppose the last area of my own life to come under the influence and dominance of Jesus Christ was in my own attitude towards the Negro. And so now for several years I have held the conviction, and still hold it, that the practice of segregation cannot be defended on the basis of the Christian religion. And now that the highest judicial body in this republic of ours, consisting of nine men appointed by three different Presidents of the United States, has given this unanimous decision, I feel it to be my conscientious duty to do my best to implement this action helpfully, patiently, lovingly, and realistically.

IN THE EYE OF A HURRICANE

by EDWARD R. MURROW

Excerpt from EDWARD R. MURROW AND THE NEWS
CBS Radio Network, Aug. 10, 1955.

So that other people may be warned, a few men in the U. S. air forces make it their business to track approaching hurricanes by riding them out in airplanes. Last year, Edward R. Murrow went along on such a mission with the crew of an Air Force B-29 that flew into the calm dead-center, the "eye," of a hurricane called Edna. His account of the experience was rebroadcast last month on a night when the East Coast, from the Carolinas to Cape Cod, was braced for the approach of a similar storm called Connie.

This is Murrow's description of the flight through Edna, beginning as the plane approached the hurricane:

We went down to 7,500; surface winds now estimated at about 60 miles an hour. Flew right along the top of a flat cloud with the feeling that if the pilot let his wheels down he'd leave a track in it. The next time we saw water, the wind was cutting the top off the white-caps, and there was a thin gauze of spray as far as we could see. Then into the cloud again and that ghostly gray light that seemed to rub off on the faces of the crew members and cause them all to look as though they were ill and hadn't slept for a long time.

The radar kept reaching out, looking for Edna's eye. It showed a high bank of clouds to the right and to the left. We were flying blind in that gray stuff in a sort of valley between. Suddenly there was a hole in the clouds, maybe a quarter of a mile across, and at the bottom there was foam. It was like looking down a deep well with a huge egg-beater churning up milk at the bottom.

We flew on, and then began the real search for the eye of the hurricane. There were sudden changes in temperature, more rain. Radar reported. The engineer reported. The navigator wanted to know if anybody could see surface winds. The radarscope didn't show anything, and we were bounced around a little.

The skipper said, "There's a storm around here somewhere. Let's go find it." The navigator asked for a turn to the left, and in a couple of minutes the B-29 began to shudder. It was a twisting, tortured, ringing sort of motion. The co-pilot said, "I think we're in it." The pilot said, "We're going up," although every control was set to take us down. Something lifted us about 300 feet and the pilot said, "We're going down," although he was doing everything humanly possible to take her up. Edna was in control of the aircraft. We were on an even keel but being staggered by short, sharp blows. Then we hit something with a bang that was audible above the roar of the motors, and more than one man flinched. It was a solid sheet of water. Seconds later, brilliant sunshine hit us like a hammer, and a little rainbow spun off the starboard outboard prop, and someone shouted: "There she is," and we were in the eye.

Calm air, flat calm sea below. A great amphitheater, round as a dollar with white clouds sloping up to 25 or 30 thousand feet. The water down below looked like a blue alpine lake with snow-clad mountains coming right down to the water's edge. It was a great bowl of sunshine. Someone, I think it was the right scanner, shouted: "So help me, there's a ship down there!" And there was, right in the center of the eye. We guessed her to be a 10,000-ton merchant ship, moving very slowly in that calm water with only a thin feather of wake behind her. She appeareed to be in no trouble, but trouble was inevitable sometime because she was surrounded by those cloud mountains and raging water.

The eye was 20 miles in diameter. We went down to 1,500 feet and flew back and forth across it, making shallow penetration to the storm area. The temperature went up 14 degrees. The altimeter said 4,000 feet, but we were actually at 1,500. The civilian weather officer aboard looked at Edna with a clinical eye and said: "She's a copy-book hurricane, beautifully formed." We took her temperature, measured her speed, threw overboard scientific gear which might help to chart her future movement, while we continued to fly around in the calm at the bottom of that funnel of white clouds.

The eye of a hurricane is an excellent place to reflect on the puniness of man and his works. If an adequate definition of humility is ever written, it's likely to be done in the eye of a hurricane.

A Case Against Divorce

By Howard Whitman

WE'RE DIVORCING couples in the United States at the rate of about 400,000 per year. This means that every day, on the average, more than 1,000 couples are seeing their marriages come to an end. Young couples who rush into divorce during the early years of marriage account for the bulk of the increase.

George Barnard Shaw once pointed out: "When two people are under the influence of the most violent, most insane, most illusive and most transient of passions, we cannot expect them to remain in that excited, abnormal and exhausting condition continuously until death do them part. Quite the contrary. We expect them to grow to a mature, deep and meaningful relationship which no longer must feed upon infatuation but rather will thrive upon something called love."

This does not occur by magic. It takes some working; it also takes a whale of a lot of patience, and this is what the modern couple too often lacks.

When we look at divorce statistically we see a graph which is formidably top-heavy in the early years of marriage. Twenty-four percent of all divorces occur in the first five years of marriage, 60 percent in the first seven years. These are the years of adjustment, and the figures show how many couples are walking out on marriage without even waiting to get adjusted.

From a report on NBC Radio's WEEKEND. Mr. Whitman is a nationally prominent authority on social problems, medical broadcaster on NBC Television's HOME SHOW, author of numerous books, magazine articles and syndicated newspaper series. WEEKEND, the Sunday Magazine of the Air, now superseded on NBC Radio by MONITOR, was produced for NBC News by Arthur Wakelee.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Enclosed are advance first-issue copies of RADIO-TV SCRIPTS, our effort to perpetuate in print some of the fine informative material produced by radio and television. This issue contains the "See It Now" report on "Cigarettes and Lung Cancer" and your Aug. 10 rebroadcast on the flight through Hurricane Edna. We are very much indebted for the privilege of using these scripts and hope you will approve of the treatment given them.

The magazine is getting into circulation a little later than first intended so this issue will be re-dated for distribution in October, and monthly publication will take effect in November. I would be very much interested in any criticism or suggestions you might make toward improving the magazine on the basis of this issue.

September 10, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

Yesterday this reporter had the privilege of looking into the eye of Hurricane Edna. We took off from Bermuda at 11:30 AM in a specially equipped B-29. The Air Force boys were working for the taxpayers, going out to chart, measure, map and study the hurricane. We climbed to ten thousand, blue sky overhead, blue water without a single whitecap below, and headed West. For about an hour-and-a-half there was nothing to do except remember that flying is made up of many hours of boredom, interspersed with a few minutes of stark terror. Then there were a few whitecaps, but no cloud. Then the whitecaps grew in size - surface wind about thirty miles an hour; a few scattered cumulus clouds ahead. A big cloud seemed to summon its neighbors, and they built castles and lakes and cities on hillsides, all white against the blue of the sky. We bored through a few and skirted others. Then there was a big mountain of clouds ahead, and we went in. A few rain squalls, but little turbulence. The texture of the cloud changed, became a ghostly grey; we couldn't see the wing-tips of the aircraft. Twenty minutes later there was a little blue-grey light, but it seemed to come from all around us. Suddenly blue water again, no whitecaps, but the ocean was heaving about below as though a giant were shaking a rug. Into another cloud, out on the other side, and the ocean had changed its face.

Long irregular furrows, like a drunken ploughman had been ploughing a field of blue velvet and turning up snow. We went down to seventy-five hundred - surface winds now estimated at sixty miles an hour; flew right along the top of a flat cloud, with the feeling that if the pilot let his wheels down he'd leave a track in it. The next time we saw water, the wind was cutting the top off the whitecaps, and there was a thin gauze of spray as far as we could see. Then into the cloud again, and that ghostly grey

The engeneer reported some trouble with the Number three engine; we climbed to ten thousand feet, and bored in to the wall of white cloud that surrounded the eye. It was not as rough going out as coming in because the navigator had picked his exit well.

Going back to Bermuda we talked of hurricanes. One of the pilots said: @We were certainly disappointed in Carol; we just didn't think she would do what she did." He had flown through Carol so often that he regarded her as a friend who had committed a major misdemeanour.

These young men who fly the Air Weather Service are doing all that can be humanly done to provide information upon which adequate warning can be based. After all, the only thing you can do about a hurricane is to watch it and get ready for it.

After flying only nine hours with those young men of the Air Force yesterday, on a routine mission, I think they deserve combat pay.

Dear Ed:

The sustained excellence of "See It Now" brings about a sort of casual acceptance of the splendid things that you and Fred Friendly are constantly giving us. We come to take things like this for granted.

Perhaps because I know Carl Sandburg better than I know any of those you have ever before handled in this program, I want to give you my warmest praise for a superlative job. Not only did you put Carl at his peak but you went right along with him.

I am going to Chicago tonight to be present at the luncheon given to Carl tomorrow by his friends. I shall take great pleasure in telling him personally that hereafter on all such occasions he should team up with Murrow.

I have agreed with Carl Sandburg that Fred Friendly and I will go to Flat Rock, North Carolina, the fourth week in July. We will do a record album for CBS--Jim Golding has agreed to this--and we will prepare at least one television program for SEE IT NOW.

I have undertaken to provide Sandburg, as soon as possible and in the simplest language, the terms and conditions of payment for the album and the SEE IT NOW program, and for any subsequent use that may be made of the film we shoot.

A VISIT TO FLAT ROCK—CARL SANDBURG

OCTOBER 5, 1954

EDWARD R. MURROW: Good evening. There are men who can point to a skyscraper, to a railroad, to a billion-dollar corporation, and say: "That's mine. I did that. That's my life work." These twenty-eight volumes represent the life work of Carl Sandburg, who is seventy-six. It starts back in 1916 with "Chicago Poems," and extends through to the single volume of "Lincoln," to be published the day after tomorrow. Mr. Sandburg spends much of his life writing. Six volumes on Lincoln—a million-and-a-half words. He has spent much of the last three years condensing, compressing that into one volume. Recently, we had an opportunity to spend three days with Carl Sandburg at his goat farm in Flat Rock, North Carolina. Charlie Mack was the cameraman.

Carl, I know that you do a lot of your work here in the house but you also do some of it up on this rock, don't you?

CARL SANDBURG: Once in a while. There's some five months out of the year here that you can sit outside, if it isn't raining, and I have a chair up there and a bench down here, and I have written thousands of words with a lead pencil. I have not bothered to drag a typewriter up.

MURROW: Carl, why did you come to Flat Rock to settle, anyway?

SANDBURG: Well, we had no pasture for the goats, in Michigan. The Missus says if we could go where the winters are not so long and not so cold, we will live longer, and then we came up here. And out of several places, we thought we liked this one for scenery and for some air and some good pasture; and you can raise most anything on some of the ground there.

MURROW: Carl, it's up here on this rock where you wrote part of "Always the Young Strangers"?

SANDBURG: Yes. I wrote thousands of words with a lead pencil, and my daughter Helga transcribed them. But on Lincoln, I couldn't bring the materials that I need to consult from time to time. I couldn't bring them up here. So—

MURROW: You wrote most of that in the house?

SANDBURG: Yes.

MURROW: Well, perhaps you will show us your workroom in the house a little later.

SANDBURG: It's a dizzy corner, kind of a crazy corner—because I don't pretend it's organized.

MURROW: How old were you when you scored your first literary success?

SANDBURG: I was thirty-eight when "Chicago Poems" was published. That was my first book by a regular publishing house.

MURROW: And when did you really begin to be seriously interested in Mr. Lincoln?

SANDBURG: Well, I have been nearly all of my life. Heard men talk about him when I was a boy—politicians and preachers—and I knew sometime I would do at least a small book on Lincoln, to be titled, "The Life of Abraham Lincoln for Young People." And as I went through the basic Lincoln research books, why, it came over me there was something else I was started on—and I ended up with six volumes and a million-and-a-half words on Lincoln—and I don't know yet what to make of it.

MURROW: A million-and-a-half words and then "Always the Young Strangers." You sat in that chair with a pencil, a pad, and that fabulous memory of yours, and wrote it here on this rock under the trees. Is that right?

SANDBURG: Trying to recollect with a memory that I think is imperfect, very—no one knows better how imperfect it is than I. But people say I have got total recall. I deny it.

MURROW: Well, let's sit in this chair where you wrote "Always the Young Strangers" and talk about Mr. Lincoln. I have got an advance copy here of this one-volume Lincoln, and in the preface you have got some of, I think, the noblest language I ever read. Will you read a little bit of it for us?

SANDBURG: Well, there are some good lines at the end of that preface. I did not write them. I chose them from thousands of commentaries on Lincoln that I have met in my life. These are among the most significant, about why Lincoln lasts: "There is no new thing to be said about Lincoln. There is no new thing to be said of the mountains or of the sea or of the stars. The years go their way but the same old mountains lift their granite shoulders above the drifting clouds. The same mysterious sea beats upon the shore. The same silent stars keep holy vigil above a tired world. But to the mountains and sea and stars, men turn forever in unwearied homage. And thus with Lincoln, for he was a mountain in grandeur of soul. He was a sea in deep undervoice of mystic loneliness. He was a star in steadfast purity of purpose and service. And he abides."

MURROW: Carl, why did you spend so much time with Mr. Lincoln?

SANDBURG: Oh, the straight-off simplest answer to that is: because he was such good company. I have been through all the basic research material about him, and I have sort of lived with him off and on for forty years and more, and he still is good to brood about. He still has laughter and tears that are good for a fellow. Well, he was also the first humorist to occupy the White House—the first man of humor. He was pre-eminently a laughing man, and he used to say that a good story was medicine.

MURROW: What was Mr. Lincoln's favorite story?

SANDBURG: It was about a druggist in the state of Maine, where they had a prohibition law. No alcoholic liquor could be sold, and an Irishman came in—the word among them for liquor was "the crather"—the creature. And the Irishman asked for a glass of lemonade, and as the druggist was fixing it, he said, "And could you put in a wee bit of the crathur, unbeknownst to me?" And once in a public speech, Lincoln had a sentence: "I am like the Irishman—I have to do some things unbeknownst to myself."

MURROW: In the course of this three-day visit, Carl Sandburg talked of Lincoln's humor and his tears; of Ty Cobb, and adjectives, and bad poetry; of goat's milk, and goober peas. One night as we lost our light up on the rock, we moved down to the Sandburgs' front porch, and as the sun settled behind the Blue Ridge Mountains and the Smokies, and the crickets and the stars came out, Carl sang what he considers to be the favorite of all Confederate war songs.

SANDBURG: [SINGING]:

"Sitting by the roadside on a summer's day,
Chatting with my messmates, passing time away,
Lying in the shadows underneath the trees—
Goodness, how delicious!—eating goober peas;
Peas, peas, peas, peas—eating goober peas—
Goodness, how delicious!—eating goober peas.

When a horseman passes, the soldiers have a rule
To cry out at their loudest, 'Mister, here's your mule!'
And another pleasure, enchantinger than these,
Is the wearing of your grinders, eating goober peas:

Now, the goober pea's the peanut. That's the nickname in the South for the peanut. And so maybe it would be just as well to dedicate this song to George Washington Carver of Tuskegee University, who discovered—who discovered eight hundred new uses for the peanut, alias the goober pea.

MURROW: Carl, tell me, why do you dislike adjectives?

SANDBURG: I am not sure it didn't come out of an experience I had at West Point.

MURROW: What was that?

SANDBURG: At West Point, for two—for a while there, I was a classmate of Douglas MacArthur and Ulysses S. Grant the Third. I was a classmate of theirs for two weeks. I was notified by the superintendent that I had failed in arithmetic. I might have expected that; but grammar—grammar—I probably—I probably failed to remember the definition I had read of a verb—and, I don't know, I might have gotten a hate of adjectives then.

MURROW: What do you think is the worst word in the English language?

SANDBURG: The one word more detestable than any other in the English language is the word "exclusive." Exclusive—when you're exclusive, you shut out a more or less large range of humanity from your mind and heart—from your understanding them.

MURROW: What do you answer when people ask you how you write? How you go about the business of writing?

SANDBURG: Much depends on who is asking the question. Sweet young things that will ask that question, "How do you write?"—and I say, "Simple. It's easy. You just sit up to the typewriter and put down one word after another. If you try to put down two or three words, you are sunk." And they take that as very valuable advice. And then there are some nice, earnest, serious college boys, and I try to reduce it to the formula of, say, Ty Cobb. There were some baseball writers got around him at the end of one season and they asked him, they told him: "You have eleven different ways of sliding to second. Now, we would like to know at what point between first and second base do you decide on which one of those eleven ways you are going to use?" And Ty said, "I don't think about it. I just slide, that's all."

MURROW: Carl, I think you said once that an author must write what he thinks, and a poet must write what he must. Is that right?

SANDBURG: That will go for different kinds of writers. It will go for, oh, a good many of the best poets. There is being written today a lot of cerebral poetry—poetry right out of the brain, with nothing of the blood in it, and it's rather pathetic. You need footnotes, and you need diagrams. Oh there are readers of it that say, "Well, I understand it. I understand it." And then there are those who are honest enough to say they don't understand such poems. And then there are still others that have had it explained to them, and they say—they say to those who told them, those who explained it: "I understood it, until you explained it to me."

MURROW: Carl, would you rather be known as a poet, a biographer, a historian—or what?

SANDBURG: I'd rather be known as a man who says, "What I need mainly is three things in life, possibly four: To be out of jail, to eat regular, to get what I write printed, and then a little love at home and a little outside." Those four things, and I don't need to be called either poet, historian, biographer, guitar player, folk singer, minnesinger, and what—there was one more—novelist.

MURROW: Now, Carl, you have got all four of those things. Right?

SANDBURG: In a way of speaking. What was it you told me one time about your return to North Carolina after many years?

MURROW: Oh, that was when I went to see an uncle and he gave me an almost Elizabethan greeting. I hadn't seen him for a long time, and I met him out near the barn and he said, "Ed, if you had come as often as I thought of you, you wouldn't be such a stranger as you are."

SANDBURG: That's nice. That's nice. The Elizabethan things that stick along—I don't know—it isn't Elizabethan, but they tell it to you in North Carolina, about a witness on the stand. He was asked to—his name and age and the rest of it—and the first question put to him: "Can you read and write?" And he said, "Well, I can't write but I can read some." "What do you mean you can read some?" "Well, I'm going along the road and I come to one of these crossroads where the sign—where there is a sign, and I can—I can always read how fur, but not where to."

MURROW: Maybe that's part of the trouble with the world now. They can read how fur but it's very difficult to tell where to, isn't it?

SANDBURG: That's right. That will go for this time of ours. Most inscrutable world scene that there ever was.

MURROW: Do you think the people still have it? You know more of our past than, I think, anyone I know—and do you feel that we are in danger of tearing ourselves apart?

SANDBURG: There never has been a time—there never has been a time that there were not clouds upon the horizon in this country and there was one crisis after another that could be named: in the Colonial times, in the American Revolution, and that Civil War—the like of which almost no other country has ever had. And then the two world wars. Over and over again it has looked as though we were sunk as a nation. And always—it's the point I try to make in that novel, "Remembrance Rock"—always there has been a saving remnant. Always there has been enough of a small, faithful minority—faithful to the death. Every generation in American history has had its demagogues. Sometimes they rose to high influence, came near to having very high power. George Washington—he had his calumniators. Over and over again, in the speeches and letters of George Washington, you will find that word "calumny." They were lying about him—liars, creating this calumny that fell on him.

And there was Major General Benjamin F. Butler, a Massachusetts lawyer and politician: over and over again he was Lincoln's problem, and again he was Grant's problem. He commanded an army and got no results with it. He lied and lied about political affairs. And the time came, though, when his blunders had reached the point where Grant and Lincoln threw him out of the Army and sent him home to Massachusetts. A very curious entry in John Hay's diary: One time in 1861 he was saying to Lincoln that Butler was the one man in the Army that he feared could become dangerous if he had power. And Lincoln answered —as Hay wrote it in his diary, "Yes. Yes. Butler is like Jim Jett's brother. Jim used to say that his brother was the damndest scoundrel that ever lived, but in the infinite mercy of Providence he was also the damndest fool." And that will go for the demagogues of nearly every generation in American history. And that's that.

MURROW: Carl Sandburg calls Paula Sandburg "the wife." They have been married forty-six years. She runs the goat farm and helps Carl with his work. She has been the wife of a reporter, a poet, a Pulitzer prize winner. . . . We found Mrs. Sandburg down near the barn.

MRS. SANDBURG [WITH GOATS]: Have some more salt—goats must have some salt every day. Have some more. This is good for you.

MURROW: Good morning, Mrs. Sandburg.

MRS. SANDBURG: Yes. Good morning.

MURROW: This [POINTING TO CHILD] is your granddaughter, Paula. Isn't it?

MRS. SANDBURG: Paula—that's right.

MURROW: Well, I know so little about goats. These are kids, aren't they?

MRS. SANDBURG: That's right. They are about two months old.

MURROW [TO CHILD]: What are their names, Paula?

PAULA: Well, this one is Valima, and that one is Valeretta.

MURROW: I was wondering—I was just going to ask you, didn't you get a little tired of having Mr. Lincoln around the house for so many years?

MRS. SANDBURG: No, because Mr. Lincoln is a very lovable character, and I think Carl has grown more like Lincoln through the years—and more understanding. He wasn't so understanding when a young man as he is now.

MURROW: Carl wrote for a long time before he really achieved proper recognition, didn't he?

MRS. SANDBURG: Oh, yes. He wrote for twenty years at least, and he wrote—he worked, worked through the nights, with no prospect really of having his poetry ever published. At that time it was poetry he was writing, and we always looked forward to saving enough money to get a book printed. I used to send his poems away to magazines. They always came back. We had a regular circle of them to which we would send them, and they'd come back. And finally, the time came when he got recognition in "Poetry," that magazine about poetry, in Chicago. And then the publisher saw that; and then he became recognized. But he worked just as hard before. Somehow he worked for himself, for his own ideal; and he never considers anything else but what he personally would consider a good book. He wrote the Lincoln book because he wished there had been a book of that kind for him to read. And so about everything. He has his own ideals, and he would write if there were no one to read. . . .

SANDBURG [READING]: "When we say a patriot is one who loves his country—what kind of love do we mean? A love we can throw on a scale and see how much it weighs? A love we can take apart to see how it ticks—a love where with a yardstick we record how long, how high, how wide it is? Or is a patriot's love of country a thing invisible, a quality, a human shade and breath, beyond all reckoning and measurement? These are questions old as the time of man, and the answers we know in part. For we know when a nation goes down and never comes back, when a society or a civilization perishes, one condition may always be found. They forgot where they came from. They lost sight of what brought them along. The hard beginnings were forgotten and the struggles farther along. They became satisfied with themselves. Unity and common understanding, there had been enough to overcome wrath and dissolution, enough to break through their obstacles. But the mockers came, and the deniers were heard. And vision and hope faded. And the custom of greeting became, 'What's the use?' And men whose forefathers would go anywhere, holding nothing impossible in the genius of man, joined the mockers and deniers. They forgot where they came from. They lost sight of what had brought them along.

When we say a patriot is one who loves his country, what kind of love is it we mean? I could write a book trying to answer those questions. You have heard that the shroud has no pockets and the dead to whatever place they go carry nothing with them—you have heard that and you know its meaning is plain. You have also heard the dead hold in their clenched hands only that which they have given away. In this we begin to approach the meaning of a patriot, though we do not unlock the secret that hides in the bosom of a patriot. The dead hold in their clenched hands only that which they have given away. When men forget what is at the heart of that sentiment—and it is terribly sentimental—they are in danger of power being taken over by swine, or beasts of prey or men hollow with echoes and vanities. It has happened and the records and annals cry and moan with specific instances. There have been others in the making of this nation. The call to hardship, toil, and combat runs like a blood-scarlet thread over and through the story of the American people. It has cost to build this nation. Living men in struggle and risk, in self-denial and pain—in familiarity with sacrifice, wounds, and death—those living men of the past paid the cost. They ought not to be forgotten—the dead who held in their clenched hands that which became the heritage of us, the living."

MURROW: Mr. Sandburg does not like adjectives, so we shall merely say that we are beholden to him for having written and read those words from Remembrance Rock by Carl Sandburg. Good night and good luck.

October 5, 1954

MURROW CARED ABOUT MANY PEOPLE; HE HELD BACK HIS AFFECTION FOR A FEW. CARL SANDBURG WAS ONE OF THE LOVED ONES, AND MURROW INTERVIEWED HIM FOR "SEE IT NOW". THE BROADCAST WAS CALLED "A VISIT TO FLAT ROCK - CARL SANDBURG".

MURROW: Good evening. There are men who can point to a skyscraper, to a railroad, to a billion-dollar corporation, and say, "That's mine. I did that. That's my life work." These twenty-eight volumes represent the life work of Carl Sandburg, who is seventy-six. It starts back in 1916 with "Chicago Poems," and extends through to the single volume of "Lincoln," to be published the day after tomorrow. Mr. Sandburg spends much of his life writing. Six volumes on Lincoln—a million-and-a-half words. He has spent much of the last three years condensing, compressing that into one volume. Recently, we had an opportunity to spend three days with Carl Sandburg at his goat farm in Flat Rock, North Carolina. Charlie Mack was the cameraman.

Carl, I know that you do a lot of your work here in the house, but you also do some of it up on this rock, don't you?

CARL SANDBURG: Once in a while. There's some five months out of the year here that you can sit outside, if it isn't raining, and I have a chair up there and a bench down here, and I have written thousands of words with a lead pencil. I have not bothered to drag a typewriter up.

MURROW: Carl, why did you come to Flat Rock to settle, anyway?

SANDBURG: Well, we had no pasture for the goats, in Michigan. The Missus says if we could go where the winters are not so long and not so cold, we will live longer, and then we came up here. And out of several places, we thought we liked this one for scenery and for some air and some good pasture; and you can raise most anything on some of the ground there.

~~MURROW: Carl, it's up here on this rock where you wrote part of "Always the Young Strangers"?~~

~~SANDBURG: Yes, I wrote thousands of words with a lead pencil and my daughter Helga transcribed them. But on Lincoln, I couldn't bring the materials that I need to consult from time to time. I couldn't bring them up here. So—~~

MURROW: ~~You wrote most of that in the house?~~

SANDBURG: ~~Yes, sir.~~

MURROW: ~~Well, perhaps you will show us your workroom in the house a little later.~~

SANDBURG: ~~It's a dizzy corner, kind of a crazy corner—because I don't read and it's organized.~~

MURROW: How old were you when you scored your first literary success?

SANDBURG: I was thirty-eight when "Chicago Poems" was published. That was my first book by a regular publishing house.

MURROW: And when did you really begin to be seriously interested in Mr. Lincoln?

SANDBURG: Well, I have been nearly all of my life. Heard men talk about him when I was a boy—politicians and preachers—and I knew sometime I would do at least a small book on Lincoln, to be titled, "The Life of Abraham Lincoln for Young People." And as I went through the basic Lincoln research books, wliy, it came over me there was something else I was started on—and I ended up with six volumes and a million-and-a-half words on Lincoln, and I don't know yet what to make of it.

MURROW: A million-and-a-half words and then "Always the Young Strangers." You sat in that chair with a pencil, a pad, and that fabulous memory of yours, and wrote it here on this rock under the trees. Is that right?

SANDBURG: Trying to recollect with a memory that I think is imperfect, very—no one knows better how imperfect it is than I. But people say I have got total recall. I deny it.

MURROW: Well, let's sit in this chair where you wrote "Always the Young Strangers" and talk about Mr. Lincoln. I have got an advance copy here of this one-volume Lincoln, and in the preface you have got some of, I think, the noblest language I ever read. Will you read a little bit of it for us?

SANDBURG: Well, there are some good lines at the end of that preface. I did not write them. I chose them from thousands of commentaries on Lincoln that I have met in my life. These are among the most significant, about why Lincoln lasts: "There is no new thing to be said about Lincoln. There is no new thing to be said of the mountains or of the sea or of the stars. The years go their way but the same old mountains lift their granite shoulders above the drifting clouds. The same mysterious sea beats upon the shore. The same silent stars keep holy vigil above a tired world. But to the mountains and sea and stars, men turn forever in unwearied homage. And thus with Lincoln, for he was a mountain in grandeur of soul. He was a sea in deep undervoice of mystic loneliness. He was a star in steadfast purity of purpose and service. And he abides."

MURROW: Carl, why did you spend so much time with Mr. Lincoln?

SANDBURG: Oh, the straight-off simplest answer to that is: because he was such good company. I have been through all the basic research material about him, and I have sort of lived with him off and on for forty years and more, and he still is good to brood about. He still has laughter and tears that are good for a fellow. Well, he was also the first humorist to occupy the White House—the first man of humor. He was pre-eminently a laughing man, and he used to say that a good story was medicine.

MURROW: What was Mr. Lincoln's favorite story?

SANDBURG: It was about a druggist in the state of Maine, where they had a prohibition law. No alcoholic liquor could be sold, and an Irishman came in—the word among them for liquor was "the crather"—the creature. And the Irishman asked for a glass of lemonade, and as the druggist was fixing it, he said, "And could you put in a wee bit of the crathur, unbeknownst to me?" And once in a public speech, Lincoln had a sentence: "I am like the Irishman—I have to do some things unbeknownst to myself."

REPORT ON SOUTH AFRICA

PART ONE

DECEMBER 14, 1954

EDWARD R. MURROW: Good evening. We are about to take you to the Union of South Africa, a faraway country with many tensions of which we know little. About six weeks ago, our chief European correspondent, Howard K. Smith, and cameraman Bill McClure, left London for Johannesburg. The report opens about ten thousand miles from New York City.

HOWARD K. SMITH: This is the Cape of Good Hope at the tip of Africa, where the winds of two oceans meet. Straight ahead, the next land is the Antarctic. On the left is the Indian Ocean—and on the right, the Atlantic. Seven thousand miles up to the northeast are the spice ports of India, and seven thousand miles up to the northwest are the spice harbors of Europe. Three hundred and two years ago, the Dutch East India Company landed settlers here to provide food for the spice ships—and South African history began.

MURROW: The history of South Africa is the history of men and the precious ores they discovered here at the foot of the continent; gold, the world's largest deposits; diamonds, seventy per cent of the total annual yield of the entire earth; and now, in the nuclear age, probably the largest output of uranium.

This is Johannesburg, the city that gold and uranium built, the only major city in the world not located on a river or a seacoast. Fifty years ago, wild animals roamed this area. Now, the zebras and the lions and the elephants have been driven into a special preserve in the northeast corner of the Dominion, and the native population has been sucked into the big city to provide the labor force to pull the precious metals out of the earth. But precious metals don't always produce precious freedoms. The Union of South Africa has been called a melting pot of the races in which nothing melts—not even the human heart. There are seven races here and thirteen million people. Ten million are nonwhites, commonly called Bantus. Less than twenty per cent are literate. The Bantus have no real vote or representation. They, too,

SALESGIRL: Can I help you?

MRS. MUSUKU: Yes, please. I want a loaf of bread and one candle; yes—one. Two tins of polish—one red and one light, please.

MURROW: The great name in South Africa is Cecil Rhodes—an Englishman. But in spite of him and in spite of the fact that the British won the Boer War, no Englishman has ever been elected Prime Minister. It is the strong minority of Dutch ancestry of one and a half million that runs the government. This minority group is their own permanent majority. They call themselves Afrikaners. These white Afrikaners have their own language and their nationalism. They fear the Bantus, and want complete segregation of the races.

CHARLES CHANNON: Well, I think the color bar is really essential. The native in this district is far from developed—and he is a criminal, and dirty, and I don't want him too close to me. Twice this year, the car's been broken into and the radio stolen, and it's known that natives did it. The house has to be barred—burglar-proofing and every door has to be securely locked.

MURROW: But all the whites don't agree. This is Professor Leo Marquard, a distinguished historian.

PROFESSOR LEO MARQUARD: South Africa is like a house divided against itself. It seems to me that one of two things can happen. Either the white population of South Africa can take its colonial population into association with it in the government of the country, and I think if that happens, then the Union may become the greatest power for good—for what we might call peaceful democracy in the South continent. The other possibility is that the white population may try to withhold all political power from its colonial subjects. In that case, my own view is that history will probably describe South Africa as the classical example of the multiracial society that failed.

MURROW: If trouble ever comes to South Africa, it will begin in Johannesburg, now swollen to twice its normal size, because the mines are constantly in need of workers and have teams out in the bush recruiting Bantus.

[NATIVE RECRUITING.]

ARTHUR CHRISTIE: Has he got his passport? What is his name?

[INTERPRETER ANSWERS (TRANSLATING).]

CHRISTIE: He is going to Johannesburg for six months—six-months' contract.

[INTERPRETER SPEAKS TO NATIVE.]

CHRISTIE: He will be paid an initial salary of four pounds ten a month. On the mine he will be given free food. He'll be given free quarters, free hospital services if he is sick. Will you tell this man to go to the motor car? He knows my motor car.

[INTERPRETER GIVES NATIVE INSTRUCTIONS.]

CHRISTIE: And wait for me. Will the next man come along?

[TRAIN PULLS IN WITH MINE RECRUITS.]

MURROW: Sometimes the contract is for six months, often for nine months, and in the case of the diamond mines as much as fifteen or eighteen months without leaving the compound.

GUARD [AT TRAIN]: Hey! Come on. Come on!

MURROW: In two hops, by way of a Chevrolet and a train, these Bantus are scooped out of the jungles of many centuries ago and shunted into a mechanized jungle in the middle of the cold-war boom of the twentieth century. The pay is three shillings a day. That's forty-five cents a day, but there will be small raises after three months. They will see little of the actual city of Johannesburg until their hitch is over. But many like the big city, and for some of them it is their fifth and sixth trip. Some settle in Johannesburg, and that is another of the problems. All mine work is tough, and the medical requirements are reasonably strict.

[DOCTOR EXAMINING RECRUITS, FEELS THEIR THROATS.]

DOCTOR: He's a little bit thin. [PATIENT BREATHES HARD FOR DOCTOR.]

DOCTOR: His first time up?

ASSISTANT: First time up, Doctor.

DOCTOR: Yes. Yes.

ASSISTANT: Homba. (Go.)

DOCTOR: Is he all right. No coughing?

[DOCTOR EXAMINES ANOTHER RECRUIT.]

DOCTOR: Where does he come from?

MURROW: This is a Madulla, an old one. He's been here before.

DOCTOR: How many times has he worked on the mines?

ASSISTANT: Nine times.

DOCTOR: Nine times! I think he'd better have an X ray. There you are. [MARKS X ON MAN'S STOMACH.]

[RECRUITS BEING X-RAYED.]

MURROW: The doubtful ones are passed through the X-ray machines. Few are rejected.

[RECRUITS GETTING CHOW. VOICES OF NATIVES.]

MURROW: In addition to the forty-five cents a day, most of which is sent home, the food is plentiful and free.

[RECRUITS IN BARRACKS. MAN AT SEWING MACHINE. MAN EATING IN BARRACKS. VOICES OF NATIVES. MUSIC.]

MURROW: Our crew of Smith and McClure spent several days at this mine; reported that for the most part the life is rugged but much the same as military life in most countries.

Every week, nine ingots of gold are dug out of this hole in the ground in Johannesburg for shipment to the United States, for storage in a hole in the ground in Fort Knox. The United States pays $300,000 for nine ingots—a week's labor for 12,000 men.

[SOUND OF DRUMS AND YELLING.] Every Sunday, tribal dances take place during the day, with American cowboy movies that night. A few of the mines stage controlled battle-royals between the bands of natives, to work off animal spirits. But for the most part, they stick to the dances. [DRUMS, SHOUTING, SINGING.]

[SHOT OF DANIEL MALAN.]

MURROW: Since 1948, Daniel Malan, a Nationalist who believed in complete segregation, was the Prime Minister of South Africa. In November, when he announced his retirement, it was expected that his political heir, Nicholaas Havenga, would take over. But in November, a new contender entered the conflict. Dr. Johannes Strijdom, a Nationalist, considerably far to the right of Malan, returned from a health visit to Europe to seek the Prime Ministership. In Europe, he was remembered as the man who once said: "One of the cornerstones of the British Empire is equal rights for everybody—regardless of race, creed, color or smell." He has also denounced the "detestable British Jewish Liberal society." Mr. Strijdom calls Bantus "the things." He came home to a big reception.

DR. JOHANNES STRIJDOM [AT AIRPORT]: This friendly welcome we appreciate very, very much indeed. Especially in view of the fact that during the past six weeks in certain quarters we haven't been treated too friendly at all. [STRIJDOM LAUGHS.] So that to be received by my own people again in a friendly atmosphere, I think in a good deal makes up for the damage done in other respects.

MURROW: On November 30, at Pretoria, the Nationalist Party Caucus met. Malan's candidate was beaten. Moderate Havenga withdrew from the race and the cabinet. Strijdom was the new Prime Minister.

SMITH: The 120 members of the caucus of the Nationalist Party have just finished their meeting to choose the next Prime Minister to the Union of South Africa, and it is obviously Mr. Strijdom, who is now being held up on the shoulders of his supporters. [CHEERS AND SHOUTING IN BACKGROUND.] He will legally become the next Prime Minister when he goes to see the Governor General, the representative of the Queen, this afternoon. But now, in fact, he is already the next Prime Minister. Now there will be an announcement by the leader of the Party. [STRIJDOM WAVES FAREWELL AND SPEAKS IN AFRIKAANS.]

MURROW: The principal plank of Mr. Strijdom's platform is Apartheid, that is, segregation—or living apart. Howard Smith talked with Interior Minister T. E. Donges, who will carry out this program.

[HOWARD K. SMITH and DR. T. E. DONGES.]

SMITH: Mr. Donges, in view of the rapidly increasing number of natives and their increasing education, can the policy of Apartheid be made to work indefinitely in the future? I mean, will the natives not rebel or otherwise object?

DONGES: Well, I—I think, Mr. Smith, the answer is rather the contrary. It is the doing away with Apartheid, which is not a new policy, but is really the traditional relationship between black and white in South Africa. Relationship between two groups of people in different stages of development, different stages of civilization—and I say the destruction of that Apartheid is more liable to have these disastrous effects that you seem to suggest there. After all, we must remember that the only part of Africa where you had anything in the nature of rebellion is in Kenya, and there it has been, largely I should say, a protest against the too rapid Westernization of the—of the native. You can't foist on the native a civilization which is alien to his tradition, which is alien to his way of thinking, and expect it to work in the long run. And if you take that away—if you make him break from his past in too rapid a way—then you are going to have the results, disastrous results I think, for South Africa and for the native.

It is a very popular fallacy—got a match?—It's a very popular fallacy to think to equate education with civilization. The man who is educated in ordinary sense of the word is not necessarily civilized. So you see, it is—it's really the opposite. It is—if you want to take people away from their natural way of living, way of thinking, and you want to foist upon them something which under other circumstances and with other people may have been a great success in their case, owing to the time factor, the lag and development in civilization—in their case it may be a miserable failure; and I think, sir, the position really is that, as far as the white man has to stay in Africa, that will have to be determined. He can only stay here on the basis of the recognition of the principle of Apartheid based on justice.

MURROW: Experiments in the equating of education and civilization have been carried out with much success by the Anglican and Catholic missions. At the stroke of ten, everything stops for prayer.

But the new Bantu education laws so limited what the missionaries could teach that they decided to close the schools in protest. This was the last day of school.

TEACHER: Look at the board. Look at the board. What is the girl doing? Yes?

GIRL: The girl is washing.

TEACHER: The girl is washing. What is this?

BOY: It is a piece of soap.

TEACHER: All together, children.

CHORUS: It is a piece of soap.

TEACHER: What is this? Yes? What is it? It is a towel. All together?

CHORUS: It is a towel.

TEACHER: Yes. What is the girl going to do with a towel? Petros? The girl is going to dry herself. Here is a towel. Here is a boy. He is going to dry himself.

BOY: I am drying myself. I am drying myself.

TEACHER: Wipe yourself. Wipe your head.

BOY: I am wipe my head.

TEACHER: I am wiping my head.

BOY: I am wiping my head.

TEACHER: Good boy. Dry yourself. Dry your ears. Come on—your ears.

BOY: I am drying my ears.

TEACHER: All right. Thank you.

MURROW: Then, a special announcement:

TEACHER: We are closing school today. This is the last day of our term. We shall not be able to open the school any more. That means you shall not be able to come to school. The schools are closing down because the government of our country has decided to give us a type of education inferior to that of the European, and as such, the Bishop of Johannesburg and the Mission has decided to close the school in protest: Therefore you will take these papers home and give them to your parents. It will explain to them why the Missions are closing the schools.

[CHILDREN GATHER AROUND TEACHER AND RECEIVE PAPERS.]

TEACHER: Quiet. Quiet. Quiet.

MURROW: Perhaps the strongest spirit and the clearest voice among the Bantus is A.B. Xuma, a doctor.

DR. A. B. XUMA: Ever since the missionaries began education among the Africans, they were following the same syllabus so far as the Africans were concerned, and the Africans were able to attain the same qualifications when opportunity was given them as European pupils and students. But it has been felt that an educated African is a threat to the security of the European, and so, politicians have found that it was becoming more and more necessary in order, as they say, to protect the white man from the competition of the African, to limit the opportunities of the Africans, or at least to make it impossible for them to acquire the same qualifications and the same skills.

SMITH: Is there any communism in the African National Congress, Dr. Xuma?

DR. XUMA: Well, one is at a difficulty to know what communism really means, because in South Africa, under the Suppression of Communism Act, the definition is so wide that anyone who criticizes the government becomes labeled as a Communist. In fact, there are some people who have been restricted from participating in the African National Congress, not because they were Communists, but because as members of that movement they had dared to oppose the policy of the government and were therefore banned from attending meetings. Because I know of quite a large number of leaders among the Africans and the other non-Europeans who have been banned, although it was known by all concerned, including the authorities, that they were never members of the Communist Party.

SMITH: Do you derive any encouragement from the way the race question has developed in the United States of America, Dr. Xuma?

DR. XUMA: Well, I believe that it is an excellent thing for America itself. It gives her the moral courage to go before the world, to appear in the United Nations; and having that record behind herself, she can go into moral issues with other parts of the world—and of course, for other parts of the world, there's always an inspiration. That is, people who have no closed minds, to learn from others, and try—if they really mean to do the right thing—to imitate what they have found to be successful and useful for peace and co-operation among the people.

PART TWO

DECEMBER 21, 1954

MURROW: With the inauguration of arch-Nationalist Mr. Strijdom as Prime Minister three weeks ago, Apartheid again was tightened, and the Bantus' education restrictions were drastically stepped up. Strijdom's Minister of Native Affairs, Dr. H. F. Verwoerd, went out to address a council of native chiefs and explain the new Apartheid to this voteless majority. Afterward, Howard Smith interviewed Dr. Verwoerd. Camerman, Bill McClure.

SMITH: Dr. Verwoerd, it's often said here that Americans don't understand South African native policy, and I think that's largely true. What—does Apartheid mean segregation as we know it in the United States?

DR. VERWOERD: Apartheid means that there must be separate development for the Bantu on one hand and the European on the other. It means, therefore, that in the course of time we should separate the spheres of influence and of work of these two racial groups. That would take a very long time. But we set our foot on that road, and in the course of time it will be brought about to the advantage of both groups, because it simply means that if gradual separation develops and each gets his full opportunities with the—in the group of his own people, then he can go forward with the knowledge that he can end anywhere. Whereas if you try and keep the people together, it would mean nothing but continual clash owing to continual competition.

MURROW: But all the white men do not believe in Apartheid. This is Father Huddleston, who decided to close his schools when the new restrictions were announced.

[HOWARD K. SMITH INTERVIEWING FATHER TREVOR HUDDLESTON.]

SMITH: Of all the schools for natives in South Africa today, Father Huddleston, what per cent are mission schools like yours?

FATHER HUDDLESTON: Well, of all the schools that educate natives today, that is before the Bantu Education Act was passed, ninety per cent are mission schools—grant aided.

SMITH: What would be the fate of these mission schools under the government's new act for the education of natives?

FATHER HUDDLESTON: Well, we decided that we could not under any circumstances cooperate with the government in running a school on the terms which the government would impose upon us, and so we decided to close the school. But we've had so many people writing to us and urging us to continue, that we may yet survive as a private school that is entirely independent of any government grant whatsoever. But that's a very large undertaking.

SMITH: Father Huddleston, what do you think is the purpose of the government's Native Education Act?

FATHER HUDDLESTON: Well, I'm quite clear about that myself but I'd like to give you, if I may, the words of the Minister of Native Affairs. He said this in the second reading debate in the House, in September last year: "I want to remind honorable members that if the native in South Africa today, in any kind of school in existence, is being taught to expect that he will live his adult life under a policy of equal rights, he is making a big mistake." Now, of course, we are not so foolish as to imagine that those boys and girls who pass through our schools are going to live under a policy of equal rights in the immediate future. We do believe that they have a right to the fullest and freest life that God can give them—and that is the purpose of our education.

SMITH: What do you feel, Father, is the future of this question?

FATHER HUDDLESTON: Well, that's a question which I am often asked, and I'm not a prophet. I can't in any kind of way foretell how long it will take before disaster comes upon this country. But I am absolutely convinced that disaster will come as a result of the breaking down of any kind of racial intercourse; and what form it will take, I rather dread to think.

SMITH: I have heard, Father Huddleston, that in cities the race problem is about fifty per cent a housing problem. Is that true?

FATHER HUDDLESTON: Well, speaking as someone who knows the urban areas better than the rural ones, I can certainly say, yes. The position in Johannesburg, for instance, is that we need about 50,000 houses immediately, to catch up on our present backlog; and yet, although we need these houses, they have now passed an act called the Native Resettlement Act, in which they want to shift 60,000 people who already have houses, because they are living in an area which the Europeans don't like them to live in. It's a fantastic situation.

MURROW: This is Sofiatown, the product of the overcrowding that Father Huddleston talked about. Johannesburg has been called the city that gold and uranium built. Sofiatown is the extended ghetto that this prosperity wrought. Several million natives have now tasted city life, due to mine recruiting. As we said earlier, many have stayed on. Apartheid means separation. And Sofiatown is a preserve separated from the rest of Johannesburg and reserved for the Bantus. But in March, Sofiatown is to disappear. There is a white housing shortage in Johannesburg, and the Sofiatown area is to be bulldozed out of existence, and a modern housing development will be erected here—for whites. In line with the policy of Apartheid, the present residents of Sofiatown will be moved still further away from the center of the city. The woman coming out of the store is Mrs. John Masuku. On her back she carries her youngest son; on her head, the family's food supply for a week. It represents half her husband's weekly wage. Her husband is an office worker—makes ten dollars a week—which makes them members of Sofiatown's white-collar class. The Masukus and their seven children live, sleep, and eat in a single room.

[HOWARD K. SMITH INTERVIEWING MRS. JOHN MASUKU.]

SMITH: Now, how long have you been married, Mrs. Masuku?

MRS. MASUKU: I've been married about fifteen years.

SMITH: And have you been to school?

MRS. MASUKU: I've been at school.

SMITH: Where?

MRS. MASUKU: In Free State—Roman Catholic School.

SMITH: How many children have you got altogether?

MRS. MASUKU: I've got eight children—but at present I've got seven. The other one is in Rhodesia.

SMITH: Do they all live and sleep in this single room?

MRS. MASUKU: They all sleep in the same room—one room, of course.

SMITH: There is not much space for them?

MRS. MASUKU: There is no space for them.

SMITH: Can you name your children for us?

MRS. MASUKU: I can. My first boy, his name is Daveson. And this other little boy is Chillet. This one is Grace, and that other one is Yvonne. That's Sheila. That's Egnista. And the baby's Evola. That's their names.

SMITH: What do you want your children to be when they grow up?

MRS. MASUKU: I don't know. I would like this elder boy to be a doctor. I don't know what he wants. I'd better ask him. What would you like to be in the future?

DAVESON: If I can do well at school I want to be a doctor.

SMITH: And the others? What do you think the others will become?

MRS. MASUKU: The others—I haven't discussed it. I can't say anything by this time—but this one I know already what I want him to be. He is the eldest.

SMITH: Well, if you could vote, what group would you vote for?

MRS. MASUKU: If I could vote—for the United Party.

MURROW: The vote that counts most in South Africa are the Afrikaners. These are the whites of Dutch ancestry—the Boers—who make up the permanent minority of one and a half million which controls the Nationalist Party and therefore the entire Dominion of twelve million people. Smith and McClure went out to the farm of Afrikaner Johannes Gropler. His grandfather was the first white man to come to this region, Rustenburg. They raise oranges and grapefruit, and the migration of labor to the city is making it tough for them too.

[HOWARD K. SMITH INTERVIEWING GROPLER FAMILY.]

SMITH: Well, we are here to find out all we can about South Africa—and you gentlemen know all there is to know about farming in South Africa. So, let us ask you some questions. Mr. Gropler, what is the main problem that a farmer faces in South Africa?

GROPLER: Well, I think the biggest trouble we have here is water. If we could get water, then I don't think you will get a better country than in—to farm in than South Africa.

SMITH: What about native labor? Do you get enough labor for your farms?

SON: Yes, we have got enough laborers, but the trouble is most of the laborers don't know anything about farming. If you want to do something, you must work with them and show everything to them. Out of about thirty laborers, there is only two or three that knows anything about farming, that you can trust with your machinery.

SMITH: Is there any tendency for them to leave the farm areas and go into the cities?

GROPLER: Yes. We get only the worst ones—and all the best laborers are going into the towns.

SMITH: There is something I have been curious about. Why is most of the rural vote for the Nationalist Party?

ANOTHER SON: Most of the rural farmers vote Nationalist—for the Nationalist Party. They have got more contact with the natives. They know the natives better than the town people, you see, and that's why they vote for the government—for the Apartheid, you see.

[SIGN: VOTE U. P. THE FUTURE IS IN YOUR HANDS.]

MURROW: But all the whites in South Africa are not members of the Nationalist Party. Most of the million English descendants are members of the more moderate United Party, led for so many years by the late Jan Christian Smuts, himself of Dutch origin. The present leader of the United Party is J.G.N. Strauss.

[HOWARD K. SMITH INTERVIEWING MR. J.G.N. STRAUSS.]

SMITH: Mr. Strauss, you're the leader of the opposition. What is your view of the government's policy of Apartheid?

STRAUSS: Of course, Apartheid is really a negation of the European mission in Africa, and that mission, as I see it, is to bring Western leadership and enterprise to the Bantu people and to guide them in our Western ways of life. You must remember, of course, that the African Bantu have never produced a civilization of their own, and in spite of the various contacts they had with older civilizations, they have remained at a primitive stage of development. It is really this factor which makes the South African situation so unique. For while the natives are in the majority, they are for the most part still backward and illiterate. It should therefore not be surprising that social and residential separation have become a settled and traditional policy for us here in South Africa, but not Apartheid, or economic separation and isolation of the races. If our nonwhite question were to be translated to the broad canvas of your country, it would mean that your present population would have to solve the problems of political and human relationships involved in having as your fellow citizens some eight hundred million nonwhites, of whom two hundred million would be illiterate, living the carefree tribal life of the civilization of the tom-tom, the witch doctor, and polygamy.

MURROW: The party of the Bantu majority is called the African National Congress— but it has no place on the ballot. As we said earlier, the most articulate spokesman of the Bantu is Dr. A. B. Xuma, a physician. A brief generation ago, he and his parents raised themselves from the floor of the jungle, and now he and his children live in Sofiatown. Smith went back to ask him about the two political parties.

[HOWARD K. SMITH INTERVIEWING DR. A. B. XUMA.]

SMITH: How do you feel about the main opposition party—the United Party? How is it doing?

DR. XUMA: You would almost have to define what you mean by opposition, because so far as we are concerned the United Party is not in opposition to the present government party. So far as we are concerned, if there is any difference, it's not the difference of purpose or objective. There might be a difference of method in the approach, but the aim—the ultimate aim is the same. The tragedy in South Africa is that there is no effective opposition—and the United Party is not one. They are both conservative and they are both for white supremacy.

SMITH: Do you feel there is any danger of anything like Mau Mau breaking out here?

DR. XUMA: Well, I can't say, because I don't know what Mau Mau really is except what I read in the press. But one never can tell what might happen if the people are driven to a state of desperation and frustration.

MURROW: When Smith and McClure arrived in South Africa they presented their credentials and asked for an interview with Prime Minister Strijdom. The answer was negative. From time to time they asked again for an interview, and each time it was negative. Finally they were permitted to film his opening broadcast as Minister, and then they were allowed to ask three questions—all submitted in advance.

PRIME MINISTER STRIJDOM: Ladies and gentlemen: Having been appointed to the post of Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa, I should like to direct these few words to you. Mindful of the fact that we acknowledge the sovereignty and guidance of almighty God in the destiny of countries and peoples, and that we seek the development of our national life along Christian national lines, I want to ask you to remember me and the new government in your prayers. The new government that has now been entrusted with the control and direction of our country's affairs will remain true to this policy that dates from 1915, namely, to mete out fairness and justice to the whole community. I say this with the greatest emphasis because of the continual campaign by antagonistic people to instill fear into the minds of our English-speaking citizens by means of the false allegation that, either now or later, when South Africa shall have become a republic, their language and other rights will be suppressed. The good faith of us who are now in charge should be a sufficient reply and a guarantee to those who have been an easy prey of this antagonistic campaign of misrepresentation.

MURROW: Then it was time for Smith to ask his three questions.

SMITH: Mr. Prime Minister, do you intend, during your tenure in power, to take measures to establish a republic in South Africa?

STRIJDOM: We've been moving toward a republic since 1926, and especially since 1931, after the passing of the Statute of Westminster. It's a process of step by step, and so we shall continue until ultimately the ideal has been reached.

SMITH: What are the advantages that you expect from a republic?

STRIJDOM: The main advantage is that under a republic the two races here will be welded into one nation. The best example I can quote to illustrate that is the United States of America, where you originally had French settlers, English settlers, and Dutch settlers. Today they are all Americans—and that is the best means of getting the people here to ultimately—to form one consolidated nation. Till you have a republic, I'm afraid that most of our English-speaking people here will always stand either on one foot or both feet in England.

SMITH: In the realm of native affairs, do you intend to continue the policy of Apartheid that's been carried out up until now?

STRIJDOM: As the situation demands from time to time, further steps and new steps will be taken.

SMITH: You feel it's been satisfactory up until now?

STRIJDOM: Content with the way it's gone so far. It works according to plan.

SMITH: Well, Mr. Strijdom, what are the advantages you would expect?

[PRIME MINISTER GESTURES WITH HANDS.]

MURROW: After the three questions, the interview was terminated—as you just saw—by the upraised hands of the man whose supporters now call him "The Lion of Transvaal." There are some in South Africa who believe that Prime Minister Strijdom's total nationalism was only his method to gain control, and that now he will be more moderate. Father Huddleston is not among them.

FATHER HUDDLESTON: Well, I think the most significant comment on that is that Dr. Malan is now regarded as a moderate. Strijdom, of course, as you know, has always been the leader of the racialist faction in the Nationalist Party. The whole thing will become much more clear cut, and I personally am really glad we now can know where we stand, and we can fight the thing through on absolutely clear and basic issues. I am clear today that we have to go out for an absolutely courageous generous policy with regard to the franchise. I am quite clear that one of the major issues facing us is that of lack of opportunity. The professions are closed to the African people almost entirely, and the door has got to be opened. Of course, it's true that the industrial caliber is being broken down by economic forces, but it's not being broken down fast enough, and I am as clear as I can be today, that the only possible future for this country is the recognition of the fact that white supremacy is finished.

MURROW: In spite of all, the boom continues in South Africa—and so does Apartheid. The small Indian and Malayan population, now one notch above the Bantus, is being forced down to the subordinate role of the Negro. Likewise, at a time when the Afrikaner Nationalists are on the defensive against the colored majority, they have chosen to divide the white minority by forcing separate schools upon the British children. Segregation among the whites, too. The unfortunate part is that, at a time when the challenge of finding a new relationship between the white people of the West and the awakening people of the so-called backward or undeveloped part of the world is as important as the fight against communism, the best weapon that this most prosperous of all African countries can come up with is Apartheid. Now, Howard Smith again.

SMITH: South Africa's history began in windy Capetown. It's going to reach a kind of climax here in windy Johannesburg—a city built on gold and uranium and cheap labor, where an industrial revolution has been drawing African natives in hundreds of thousands into town faster than they can be housed or policed. It's our conclusion, after traveling five weeks in this country, that a racial explosion is likely. But not soon. The African Negro, by nature, is a happy man, not given to discontent. Despite Apartheid, despite low wages, he is enjoying his first experience as a city dweller. Moreover, there's a boom on. Economy is expanding. The United States of America is paying high prices for almost all of South Africa's gold, uranium, and diamonds. In these circumstances, jobs are plentiful for the Africans. Danger comes when a second generation of urbanized Negroes comes of age in Johannesburg and the other cities of South Africa. They will be more sophisticated. They will be susceptible to discontent. They will be capable of organizing. If at that time this expansion should slow down—if, for example, the United States should stop the process of having gold dug out of the earth at high prices here in order to bury it in the earth in Fort Knox, then there would be trouble. In these circumstances, we believe that a racial explosion would be likely if present policies continue. Back now to Ed Murrow and "See It Now" in New York.

by

TERMS OF REFERENCE

"It would be nice," Fermi said, not quite without seriousness, "If it could cure the common cold." He was talking of atomic energy. It was not yet three years since he had established the first fission chain reaction. Now we were meeting at Los Alamos, in the tired summer of 1945, in the week in which Hiroshima and Nagasaki were bombed. We were meeting at the request of Secretary Stimson's Interim Committee, not for the first time, and not for the last. We were being asked about the future of research and development in atomic energy, not only on the military side, but also, and even more urgently, with regard to its peaceful applications. Mr. Stimson had just issued a statement, after the bombing of Hiroshima, saying that the release of atomic energy faced us with far more than the development of a new weapon. Of course he was right. Among the peaceful applications, among the "benefits for mankind," would be the generation of atomic power: electric power from the energy of large scale, controlled nuclear fission.

The appearance of a new fuel would inevitably be of interest to technology and industry. Here was a fuel, widespread in its distribution on earth, of quite moderate cost, and radically new in the insignificance of its weight and bulk, a few million times more concentrated than any fuel hitherto known.

It would not be a simple enterprise to take full advantage of this fuel. A practical installation, replacing furnaces for chemical fuels, would have a cost running in the tens of millions of dollars. Relevant pilot plants would not be cheap. The development of atomic power would involve hazards which, if not graver, were far more unfamiliar and varied than those to which we were accustomed. It would soon become clear that there was an apparently limitless variety of designs, of secondary materials and arrangements, whose relative merit and economy could not lightly be assessed. Yet the complications went beyond these.

The atomic power prospect did not appear alone and in isolation. It has been part of a complex of programs, problems, and issues that have often and clearly been a heavy burden impeding its development, and that have occasionally given impetus and help to its development. It appeared to our times flanked by two vast and unprecedented revolutions: on the one side the explosive, brilliant, ramified growth of scientific knowledge and its technical application; on the other side, atomic weapons.

Atomic power came in sight as the result of a very new science. Two of its promising fuels, plutonium and uranium 233, were discovered only during the war, their properties studied, and they themselves synthesized by man-made applications of atomic and nuclear physics. Fission itself, the process from which the energy for atomic power was to derive, had been discovered barely six years earlier. Even the neutron, (though one of the two universal ingredients of atomic nuclei,) (which provides the links in the chain of fission reactions,) was discovered barely two decades before. The knowledge of the behavior of atoms and nuclei, which had gone into the wartime development, and which would need to be applied to the technology and industry of atomic power, was new; few but the young experts could have learned it in college. There was no day appreciation of its subtlety, power, abstractness; there was no corps of engineers or practical men to whom the concepts or the facts or the experiments were known. It was an element, startling but by no means unique, in the exponential growth of our knowledge of the natural world. Neither our society nor our education nor our culture prepared us for it; nor were we yet aware of its potentially world-wide character and of the problems and the hopes which this would raise.

The war-time effort had, by an early and clear decision, been devoted to the development of atomic weapons. It is true that the Navy had an early and continuing interest in atomic power for propulsion. Its interest was warranted, and the use of atomic power for Naval craft in general, and for submarines in particular, has been one of the first to prove out in a most practical and brilliant way. It is true that this Naval interest led to the development of a separation process for the isotopes of uranium which played a part in the atomic weapons program. But national policy was rightly based on two points: atomic weapons would be the most radical military development, and would most decisively add to available military power; and atomic weapons would have, as they have had since, a much shorter time scale for their development, their refinement, and their large scale production than would atomic power.

At the war's end, and quite apart from any assessment of whether the bombs should or should not have been used against Japan, and the related question of whether an acceptable surrender might or might not have been had without them, one could not help but be struck by the power of these primitive weapons, and by the portent of this power for the future. The years that have passed since then have indeed witnessed unimaginable changes in the arts and nature of war, changes at least largely based on nuclear weapons. They have seen new patterns in the behavior of sovereign states and in the relations between the states; and of this story, clearly, we have not seen the end.

These are but two examples of what accompanied atomic power into our world. They suggest why there are overtones in this development that have been absent in power developments in other respects not wholly beyond comparison, such as the diesel engine and the gas turbine: overtones of pride and terror, of mystery and hope.

It is the purpose of this introductory paper to describe some of the territories surrounding atomic power, some of the issues and problems, some of the places where atomic power intersects other enterprises and other fields of policy and dispute. I shall try to outline how these intersections appeared in the time after the last war. It was at this time that our legislative and administrative arrangements for dealing with atomic power were established; even more, it was at this time that our conceptual background developed, setting for us the kind of words, and issues, and values, and contrasts in terms of which we were for long to discuss the problems. I shall then try, somewhat more briefly, to review how, under the impact of historical change, and of further experience, some of these concepts had to be modified, and some of the legislative and administrative arrangements adjusted. Of atomic power itself, its technical, economic, organizational, legal and political problems I shall not write; these are the theme of the Twelfth American Assembly conference to which this is an introduction.

Perhaps it is best at this point to interpolate a word of definition and limitation: Atomic power, or nuclear power, could generally refer to any useful electrical power or heat derived from large scale nuclear reactions, nuclear transmutations. Indeed, the early public pronouncements about atomic energy left quite vague the scope of nuclear reactions and the nature of the devices for inducing and controlling them. In a sense this is right; though nuclear physics is a heavily travelled area, and there has been much tramping up and down in its corridors, radically new discovery is still possible, though we think that we do have a firm basis for doubting whether such drastic transmutations as the annihilation of the ingredients of nuclei, the protons and neutrons, are in accord with the laws of nature.

But even more, there is room for invention. The breaking up of all nuclei heavier than iron, and the building up of all nuclei lighter than iron, in general and for the most part yield energy. Only at the very ends of the periodic table, for the lightest elements and the heaviest, have practical methods for bringing about these transmutations on a large scale been found; and even here, practice is still further narrowed if we ask for large scale and controlled reactions. It is altogether proper that we have in the back of our minds the large vistas of unguessable discovery and unmade invention; but in what I write I should like to limit myself to the discoveries and inventions that have been made, to things that we more or less do know how to do, and that we can to some extent describe.

At present, and ever since the war, this has come down to a rather narrow range of possibilities: the generation of heat by fission in a reactor, and the conversion, except in the rare case where heat was used directly as heat, to electric power. Such reactors, whatever other materials they have, operate a neutron-fission chain reaction, and control the activity by removing or restoring neutrons. All such reactors must have one of three nuclear materials: uranium 235, plutonium 239, or uranium 233, of which the first is found along with a hundred times as much uranium 238 in nature, and the second and third are made respectively from uranium 238 and thorium by exposure to neutrons. It is true that uranium 238 and thorium do also undergo fission and add a little to the energy level in the reactors in which they are incorporated; but it is also true that they alone will not sustain chain reaction, nor will any material found in nature, other than uranium.

Elements heavier than plutonium can be made by nuclear transmutation; and lighter elements can undergo fission when suitably bombarded; but it seems unlikely that either of these possibilities will find practical application. Thus, whatever the variety of the materials, designs, configurations, and arrangements of the reactors of an atomic power program, they have at least one element of simplicity: the fuels are few. In the overwhelming majority of the reactors designed in the last fifteen years, the principal fuel has been uranium 235.

There are two other prospects for atomic power; both have been discussed publicly; both have been the subject of some work. One is the direct generation of electric power from fission reactions, without the conversion of the majority of this power into heat; the second is the large scale transmutation of light isotopes, primarily of heavy hydrogen or deuterium, into the more stable helium, which is the objective of the controlled thermonuclear power program. For both of these developments, especially for the second, there has been enough in the public domain to indicate that the problems are formidable, but not in principle clearly insoluble. But not enough is in the public domain to give a responsible estimate of what the developments may be like, or how long it may take to bring them to practical fruit, or to know which of the many advantages that these developments might appear to promise will, in fact, be realized. It does seem to be consonant with all expert opinion that these developments, whatever their remote promise, will not eliminate the usefulness, the need, or the importance of atomic power based on heat from fission in reactors.

THE HISTORICAL PACKAGE

All the early reports on atomic energy concurred in conceiving it as a threefold package. Thus it was with the Tolman report to the War Department in 1944, with the reports for and of Secretary Stimson's Interim Committee in 1945, with the findings of the Special Senate Committee under the chairmanship of Senator McMahon, with the Acheson-Lilienthal Report on the international control of atomic energy, and, in its non-military aspects, with the reports of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. The three ingredients were power, explosives, and scientific tools.

Power was foreseen primarily in the form of large reactors, most probably for ship propulsion, conceivably for large aircraft; and for civil purposes, in the first instance in regions where fuel costs for conventional fuels were high.

Apart from radiological warfare, atomic weapons were seen as explosives that would get cheaper and cheaper, more and more abundant, far more powerful, compact, light, and adaptable to a wide variety of military uses; and probably, though not certainly, capable of augmentation by thermonuclear reactions of the lightest elements, and fission reactions in normal uranium or thorium.

The tools were of two kinds: radioactive materials that could be used to follow individual atomic and molecular processes, and trace the kinetics of physical, chemical, and biological change, and the stable tracers that could, but with somewhat greater difficulty, be used for similar purposes; on the other hand, there would be radiation in the form of intense neutron beams for experimentation, and radiation for changing the bulk properties of matter.

The decade that has intervened has confirmed most of these precepts; the power and weight of stockpiles has grown; tracers and radiations have come to play a massive and valuable part in research, in engineering, in medicine, agriculture, and technology; and power reactors exist, and many more are abuilding.

As we shall see, much was to be learned between then and now about the conditions under which atomic power would be a practical as opposed to an imagined contribution to the economy; we understand better today the preconditions in capital, technology and scientific skill for their effective use. Even more, we understand the preconditions for the use of the tools provided by the atomic energy program. As a part of a competent, ramified, highly skilled and trained scientific endeavor and a sophisticated industrial economy, they are of great value; they are not a substitute and can not exist without them.

Indeed, most of the warm and glowing pronouncements about the hopes of atomic energy would have read more true had they been written with "science and technology" replacing "atomic energy," or with a more modest "atomic energy as a part of science and technology."

Power and Explosives

A power program and a weapons program are not the same thing, but they intersect in a massive way. Uranium 235, uranium 233, and plutonium 239, one of which at least is needed for atomic power, are all suitable for atomic explosives, and natural, even if not indeed indispensible, for thermonuclear explosives. Thus a power program presupposes the existence, in some form, of material which can be used in bombs. Furthermore, if there is uranium 238 present in a power reactor, as there will be if natural uranium is used, or uranium of quite low enrichment, the reactor will, itself, make plutonium. If thorium is present, the reactor will make uranium 233. Of course, from this it does not follow that one can not design a program for one of the two purposes poorly suited to the other. We can and do have many and enormous reactors which produce no power, as at Hanford and Savannah River. In England, comparable reactors produce both power and plutonium.

In practice, the most widely used fuel has been uranium 235 of rather low enrichment; it is not directly usable for weapons, but the further enrichment required to make it so is not a formidable undertaking if one has, as we and the British and the Russians do, an isotope separation plant. An enriched uranium 235 reactor, blanketed or otherwise embodying normal uranium or thorium, will make material suitable for weapons. Obviously a knowledge of the chemical and metallurgical arts of the heavy elements, as well as their nuclear properties, ~~have~~ has a place both in reactor technology and weapons design.

It may be well to have a few rough numbers in mind, relating the number of weapons and the total power produced. The number is clearly very rough, since weapons vary widely in the amount of fissionable material they use, and since reactors vary widely in the balance of fuel consumed per kilowatt. A "breeder," for instance, produces rather than consumes fuel. Still the number means something, in indicating what sort of weight of weapons production corresponds to a large scale atomic power generation program. A bomb corresponds to a few million kilowatt days. A capacity of a hundred million kilowatts, which begins to be an interesting proportion of the world's generating capacity, corresponds to many thousands of bombs per year.

There was much testimony before the McMahon Committee to the effect that the overwhelming part of the cost, and therefore clearly the principal industrial problem, of the war-time production of bombs was the building of the plants for enriched uranium and plutonium; and that the design of weapons, though it had had devoted to it a good deal of high talent, was not a massive or major part of the enterprise. What was not testified to with comparable clarity is that the bombs fitted into an existing military system of aircraft, intelligence, bases, without which they would have had a different and perhaps a much slighter meaning; and that the cost of this system, or even the minimal components of it, was very large compared to all the costs of the atomic energy program.

Today it seems clear that much more is involved in the determination of nations to direct their attention toward atomic power or atomic weapons, or both, than their ability to get chain reactions going. In particular, the considerations of the nature of the military establishment, equipment, doctrine and mission seem fully as important as the technical problems of supplementing the power program with a weapons program, and probably also more important than the considerations leading to the adoption of or delay in an atomic power program per se. Yet in the early days, it was easy to draw the conclusion that atomic weapons and atomic power were almost inseparable. This was to have a large and, on the whole, not a salutary effect upon the development of atomic power.

Power and Science

Between weapons on the one hand, and atomic power and the tools of science on the other, plausible technical connections also seemed to exist, though the firmness and necessity of these connections were soon cast in doubt. Reactors do emit radiation; the neutron beams in research reactors are used throughout the world for studies in the physical sciences and in biology. Reactors do make many radioactive tracers, though some of the most useful need to be made by other means, notably by positive ion accelerators. The great machines which were developed during the war to separate isotopes can be and are used for making non-radioactive tracers. Even during the war, extensive use was made of radiation and of large quantities of tracers for experimental purposes. Before that, they had been used, modestly but brilliantly, for more than a decade.

Clearly, any power program designed to do so will produce tracers in vast quantity and copious sources of radiation. But the converse is not true. Reactors whose level of activity is too low to be of interest for power, and which operate at a temperature where no power could be generated, still give plenty of radiation; and such reactors are springing up, often with the aid of the United States, or Canada, or Britain, at institutes, and universities, and schools and research centers all over the world.

Very early in the history of the American atomic energy program, even before the enabling legislation of the Atomic Energy Commission was passed, the Manhattan District began to make widespread and generous distribution of isotopes for research in the sciences, medicine, and agriculture. Late in 1945 Mr. Byrnes, the Secretary of State, went to Moscow, believing that the Soviet government might well wish to talk at length about atomic energy. This turned out not to be the case; but in preparation for the meeting, the use of the tools of atomic energy for scientific purposes had already become clearly enough disentangled from problems of weapons and power, so that it seemed that this aspect of the question could safely be touched upon.

The United States government has, from the first, understood that its possession of and monopoly in the manufacture or operation of these tools laid it under an obligation to make them available to qualified users in the sciences and the applied sciences, first on a national basis, and before long on a widely international one.

Yet, although the application of the tools of atomic energy could thus be relatively easily and quickly separated from all military problems, there is a connection of a different sort and, in a human sense, perhaps a good deal wider and deeper. Atomic energy has come to be a symbol of something that is real: the important, hopeful, inherently troublesome, new, and complex role that science and technology play in today's world. It catalyzed an explicit recognition of the role of science for the welfare of our country and its military power, an appreciation of the value of people familiar with atomic physics, with the behavior of nuclei, with the experimental techniques, and the powerful, analytic tools of physical theory. I remember that, late in the war, the present president of the duPont Company, who had had close connection and grave responsibility--among others--for that company's work for the Manhattan District, spoke, even earnestly, of his desire to return to graduate school to become competent in nuclear physics; that should be a hope for the future.

It is not only in the United States but in many, many parts of the world that an interest in atomic power has been the taking-off place for a new attitude toward the cultivation of science and the training of scientists. In this country, for some years, the largest contributor to the patronage of basic researches in the physical sciences, basic researches only very indirectly and improbably related to the immediate problems of atomic weapons and atomic power, has been the Atomic Energy Commission itself, following the wise initiative taken by the Office of Naval Research, and often in cooperation with it. In France the attempt to increase the budgets, the resources, and the level of activity and training in natural science were similarly stimulated by their own atomic energy commission. Brazil's atomic energy commission began its work as a training program in natural science. Recently, we read that Sir John Cockroft, Director of the Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell, has become the director as well of the Atomic Energy Institute of the Bagdad Powers.

What we are seeing here is something far more general and potentially far more significant than an attempt at the economical and practical production of kilowatts based on nuclear fission. We are seeing, on pathetically different levels, and, it is true, often under the cover of misrepresentation and specious hopefulness, a fostering and a recognition of one of the traits of our time. These men who are being trained, these specialists in biophysics, medicine, the chemistry of fertilizers, genetics, subnuclear particles, stellar constitution, may or may not have something to do with the design, the operation, the invention of reactors for power; clearly most of them will not. They become a part of the many networks of specialists. They find themselves at some point on the incredibly steep curve of growing learning, both what has been found before and what is there for them to find anew. There have been very few kilowatts from all of this, but there is a great reality to it.

Beyond, partly entwined by, and partly independent of these intersections of atomic power with the revolution in warfare and the evolution in science, there are many other cross-connections and considerations which have affected, limited, promoted, or distorted the development of atomic power. Some seem technically inevitable connections; in some, old issues, long debated and with their roots in matters far from atomic energy, have been newly fired or newly sharpened by the atom. For most of these I am in no way competent for even a summary discussion; the importance of some may have escaped me entirely. But here are at least some of the ways in which the exploitation of fission for power has differed from, let us say, that of petroleum or natural gas.

Secrecy

Most of the knowledge on which the atomic energy program had been based was acquired in the years between 1900 and 1940. It was not known or understood except by a few specialists. Yet it was open knowledge, obtained by brilliant experiment and the gradual sorting out and ordering of the phenomena in theories of great power and harmony. It has been a natural, a healthy and rather an inevitable thing for really new discoveries in science to be published; only so do the sciences advance freely and rapidly. Today the really new fields are, for the most part, studied in the same way, in international cooperation. Though this has long been hindered by the Communists, and to some extent by our response to Communism, these obstacles do not today have great effect on basic discovery or true understanding.

During the war, all work done for the Manhattan District was secret; not only were the designs of production reactions and separation plants secret; so too was information on the properties of materials and theories about the behavior of materials which were developed at that time. Plutonium had not existed before. Its chemical, metallurgical, and nuclear properties were studied; and the results, indispensable for weapons design and for some parts of reactor physics, were, of course, regarded as secret. Similar and detailed studies were made of the nuclear properties of many materials; these too were highly classified. In the light of the close connection which appeared to exist between atomic weapons and atomic power, and in the light of the fact that some information, at least, which was relevant to the one was relevant to the other, it is not astonishing that, initially, almost everything that one needed to know to get on with atomic power was classified. More than that, not only the facts that were known, but that the facts that were not yet known, but were related to the nuclear behavior of materials or the properties of fissionable materials, or the theories which connected these, or which were helpful in predicting the behavior of chain reacting systems, were all held secret. It was not merely that this or that fact was regarded as secret; it was certainly not merely that the design or performance of a specific reactor or reactor class was held secret; it was that the whole field of knowledge on which the design of reactors would have to rest was inherently secret. Initially all reactors were secret; and for a long time, almost all; and now some. The greatest single step in changing the situation was surely the first Atomic Energy Conference in Geneva in the summer of 1955. But of that, more later.

It is hard to assess at all wisely the effect of this policy of extreme and global secrecy. It does not seem to have been grave for the lively, growing frontiers of pure physics and chemistry; and although everything was born secret in a wide part of science, procedures were soon devised for declassifying what did not seem to be very sensitive information.

Undoubtedly the extreme secrecy provisions caused wide duplication. The British who had worked closely with us, though not on reactor problems, during the war, did their own post-war work when the partnership was broken. In Canada, in France, in Russia, on very different scales and with very different purposes, the same facts were being discovered, and the same way of describing and dealing with them invented. There was some duplication in this country; but the principal effect of secrecy at home lay not in duplication, but in a kind of thinning and impoverishment of communication. We were cut off from what was going on abroad and, in a strange sense, even where the channels existed, we were somewhat cut off from what was going on at home. Even those who had full access to classified information were, by its classified nature and the cumbersomeness of locating and transmitting it, often prevented from really acquiring it or taking it fully into account; and surely many who did not have access to the information, and perhaps did not know that it existed or that they should have access to it, were excluded from contributing.

Yet I suspect that, in our domestic development, secrecy was only one and not the principal block to more rapid progress with atomic power. The uncertainty of the incentives, their lack of robustness, and the very large unit costs for reactors, running to hundreds of dollars per kilowatt of installed capacity, would seem to me also good reasons. I know that Sir Christopher Hinton, who ~~is~~ was in charge of Britain's reactor program, once said to me, when I deplored the fact that our countries were no longer in partnership in matters of atomic energy, that he thought that that might well be a proper view with regard to weapons; but that, as far as the generation of power was concerned and in the matter of reactors, he was most pleased to be working on his own.

Yet my own view is that complete freedom and openness in publication and communication makes for the most rapid progress and for the most well-founded judgment, and that if one cites the spectacular achievements of secret undertakings, one should bear in mind how enormously much more rapid and deft is the development of open science, and how much more difficult the matters with which it deals.

Work on controlled thermonuclear power is still highly classified; the published accounts of what this work is all about, and the expressions of experts engaged in it, give no explanation of the grounds for this.

Hazards

For its size, the atomic energy industry in this country has been one of the safest: by any normal industrial standard, very few employees have suffered injury. Yet from the first, the development of atomic power has raised additional problems of physical danger, radically different from those more familiar in the chemical industries, if no more formidable. Indeed it is probably true that the relative simplicity of nuclear phenomena compared to chemical, and the fairly high degree of theoretical understanding which we have of nuclear phenomena and radiation, makes the prediction and the control of the hazards in reactors and their related plants more straightforward than in most other fields.

The hazards are diverse, and it has taken some time to see where the relatively grave ones lie. There is always, of course, the possibility, at certain stages in the handling of fissionable material, of its physical diversion; and it is conceivable that one might thus make a true atomic explosion. For a long time there was fear that reactors themselves could get out of hand and give something like an atomic explosion; but no one who knew what a pesky business the design of atomic weapons is would be likely entirely to believe that. The real dangers lie, rather, in the fact that relatively minor instabilities may lead to the release of the radioactive fission products which are an inevitable part of a reactor's operation; and that these may be dispersed to do serious injury to the plant and to the surrounding populations. It has taken study, delay, and cumbersome counter-measures to minimize or remove the possibility of such events. The handling of radioactive materials is costly because of the need to protect personnel, and the problem of the disposal of radioactive wastes has found no elegant solution. It may be comparable in gravity to the polution of present metro-politan and industrial atmospheres by our present industrial activities. But all this is in the light of the years of experience. To the layman, hearing of the enormous accumulation of radioactive material inside any reactor that could produce a reasonable amount of power, hearing of the thick walls of shielding at Hanford, and the remotely controlled chemical laboratories for processing, and having in the back of his mind the violence of Hiroshima, the hazards suggested, not the need for study and invention, but a frighten-ing wilderness.

Raw Materials

As much as is the case with oil, atomic energy has a unique and indispensable raw material: uranium. Thorium is at most secondary. It was an historical accident that the available and convenient sources of uranium during the war lay outside the United States, primarily in the Belgian Congo and Canada. Since that time, our own resources have been vastly developed, but so have many others in parts of the non-Communist world willing to make them in part available to us. This has brought with it a series of promises, more or less explicit, and more or less meaningful, to assist other countries in their own atomic energy programs at such time and in such way as may seem appropriate. This is for us a governmental obligation. It has had some affect on our views of the international development of atomic power.

Immediately after the war, the known accessible sources of uranium were not sufficient of themselves to support an atomic power production comparable to the world's power needs. In order for them to be adequate, reactors would have had to transform relatively inert uranium 238 and thorium into more actively fissionable materials. Such breeders have been long studied, and some have been built. In the past they have been kilowatt-for-kilowatt more cumbersome and more expensive than reactors whose fuel economy is less good.

It was naturally anticipated, on the basis of experience with other minerals, that the value of uranium would lead to the discovery of enormously increased sources of supply. This has happened; and today there would appear to be no meaningful limitation on the amount of power which can be supported by the available raw materials. Breeding may be economically helpful; it is not indispensable.

Nor has the atomic power program suffered from competition for material with the weapons program. The rate of reactor development and installation has been slow enough, and the acquisition of uranium and the production of fissionable material has proceeded on so impressively massive a scale, that no case is known to me in this country where a power reactor has been neglected for lack of fuel.

Monopoly

The war-time work on atomic energy was, of course, a governmental monopoly, carried out, it is true, by civilian contractors, primarily industrial, but including some universities and research institutes, but under the complete administrative and policy control of the United States government. It was, in fact, a quasimilitary operation, having been entrusted to a branch of the United States Engineers. But even during the war, under the President and the Secretary of War, policy decisions were in the hands of a mixed civilian-military committee.

It was not unnatural to regard the atomic developments, which had been paid for by public funds, as a public trust which should be kept in governmental hands. It may be that the endemic American debate on the merits of public power versus private power played a part in the initial legislation: debate on this has clearly not ended. It appears far more likely that other considerations were more important: the difficulty of disentangling the military and civil aspects of the enterprise, the need for regulation, both for secrecy and for safety, and the initial desire to retain in the hands of the government of the United States, those as yet poorly understood powers which it would need to exercise and to delegate in the event that international controls could be established. Now, within the government, the balance between military interest and civilian control, between executive responsibility and legislative understanding and responsibility, were achieved, is part of the story of the McMahon Act.

Atomic Power Abroad

When the war ended, most of the other industrial nations of the world were suffering from devastation, occupation, and great disruption. We were faced with the problem of contributing to putting the world back together, both for our former enemies and for our former allies. Could atomic power contribute to accelerating or enriching this process? The historical answer is clearly no. The economies of Germany, England, and Italy outstripped their prewar production, without the help of a kilowatt of atomic power. By the time reconstruction was no longer a pressing problem, the United States had become committed, in a modest way, to assist in the technology and the industrial development of underdeveloped countries, which characteristically show a great zeal to raise their productivity and civility, with utmost dispatch, to levels which had been attained over the centuries in Europe and the United States. History has not yet answered the question whether atomic power will play a decisive part in this enterprise.

Like all parts of technology, it has a tendency to give to him who hath; to make the rich, and not the poor, richer. It rests on an accumulation of capital, of skill, of learning, education, and social and vocational mobility; and flourishes best where there is a strong economy. If, indeed, the atom is to enrich the poor, it will be in large part because we and our friends in Europe have determined to make this so. What the atom is doing now for the underdeveloped countries is to give them an occasion and a symbol for that development of education, knowledge, technical skill, and learning which, in countless ways, will affect, and in many ways help, the great transformations which they are seeking to bring about.

THE PACKAGE IS TIED UP

The issues that we have outlined and countless others were dealt with in a more or less definitive way in 1946; indeed they were dealt with in more than one way: by the passage of the McMahon Act which established the basic pattern for our management of atomic energy affairs; and by the Acheson-Lilienthal Report which sketched a radically different, but closely related, alternative. Early in 1946, Senator McMahon summarized the considerations on which the act named after him would be based.

> (1) That the bomb is a weapon of appalling destructiveness. . . The bomb and the improvements on it which will certainly be made mean that another war in which atom bombs are used will threaten the existence not only of cities and nations but of civilization itself.
> (2) Other countries will be able to make atomic bombs. The monopoly which we hold at present is precarious and is certain to be short-lived.
>
> (3) No real military defense against the atomic bomb has been devised and none is in sight. . .
>
> (4) Some protection may accrue from faithful adherence to international agreements for the prevention of atomic bomb manufacture. . . The real protection against the atomic bomb lies in the prevention of war. . .
>
> (5) The secrets which we hold are matters of science and engineering which other nations can and will discover. . . We can give ourselves a certain temporary protection by retaining the secrets we now have. But that protection grows weaker day by day. . .
> (6) The peacetime benefits of atomic energy promise to be great indeed. . . plants which produce power also produce material which constitutes the explosive element of bombs. . .

> (7) Military control of atomic energy, though necessary and useful during war, is a form of direction to which scientists in peacetime will not willingly submit. The continuation of such control will probably discourage further development and research. . . On the other hand, the armed services are entitled to extensive participation in this development insofar as it relates to military applications of atomic energy. . .

Indeed the McMahon Act gave legislative form to the intimacy and inseparability of the historical package we have described. It viewed the three parts, weapons, power and science, as so closely related that they must have a common management. It extended the mandate for secrecy, appropriate perhaps to weapons, in principle to all the rest of the field. It gave the United States government, through the Atomic Energy Commission, ownership and control of fissionable material and the facilities in which it was processed or used. It limited, almost to the point of exclusion, cooperation on problems of atomic power with any foreign governments, scientists or industries. It severely limited the role of private initiative in the development of atomic power. It took those steps which seemed most likely to prolong, and for a while to preserve, our monopoly in the field.

In a very different way, in a very different context, the Acheson-Lilienthal Report is also responsive to the considerations set forth by McMahon. It gave an indication of the conditions under which the United States could, with reasonable prudence, be prepared to assist in liquidating its monopoly and to participate in international cooperative development of the peaceful aspects of atomic energy, and in international control, to see that neither nuclear weapons nor the makings of them fall into national hands.

The McMahon Act became law; the Acheson-Lilienthal Report remained a paper. Had it not, of course, we should have had both a sign and a portent for a radically different Communist policy, a radically different Communism and, in general, a moderation of all extremes of nationalism. We should have had a beginning of that open world of which Bohr then and often later was to speak; there would be neither atomic bombs nor atomic secrets.

It is now my opinion that any such plan would, if adopted, also have had to broaden its functions, to encompass not only those which history had packaged by accident and labelled "atomic energy," but also the many others in the various sciences and in technology which would have been of more immediate help to meet the desperate needs of reconstruction and development.

THE PACKAGE COMES UNDONE

The monopoly, which the McMahon Act sought to preserve, did not last long. Benignly the British and then the French chipped at it by establishing their own facilities for atomic research. The British planned to incorporate atomic power as an essential and growing element in their electric power resources. Barely three years after the McMahon Act was passed, the monopoly was broken by our most dangerous antagonist; then the nuclear arms race began to assume its now familiar aspect, with ever more frequent classified communications between the contestants ~~as they tested~~ by their tests of their nuclear weapons.

It is a long time since we have had strategic plenty: weapons adequate in number for the targets of the strategic air offensive. We may by now be close to having nuclear plenty for even the uncountable targets of tactical nuclear war. The production plants have multiplied and multiplied, and produced and produced; and the power of fissionable material has been vastly augmented by thermonuclear amplifiers and the use of abundant uranium. Those who have occasion to know our stockpiles are terrified by them; everybody is terrified by estimates and assessments of Soviet capabilities. Total nuclear war has begun to take on that desperate, perhaps genocidal, perhaps suicidal, quality which was anticipated from the beginning. It is reported that four years ago President Eisenhower, contemplating the facts as they were and as they were about to become, in contemplating the poverty and inadequacy of the then existing defenses, spoke on these matters before the United Nations Assembly. He then went on and proposed what has become known as Atoms for Peace, from which has grown the newly established International Atomic Energy Agency. But, whereas in the Acheson-Lilienthal proposal the international cooperative development of the peaceful uses of the atom had had a substantive, functional, and firm connection with atomic disarmament, the Atoms for Peace leaves this question not directly touched; its bearing on the prospects of nuclear war is at most allusive and sentimental.

Today the existence of a million or more-so kilowatts of atomic power does not seem very relevant one way or the other to the threat as it actually exists. Only three nations have atomic armament; and it is sometimes thought that our policies with regard to atomic power and our willingness to assist abroad in its development may have an important influence on whether other countries acquire atomic armament: specifically, that if we help in making atomic power available, they will renounce atomic weapons. It seems doubtful to me that anything we can do about atomic power abroad will have this as a decisive, universal or a lasting effect. A nation which is able to create (or beg, borrow, or steal) and operate a modern military force will not be deterred from creating (or begging, or borrowing) atomic power; and though, by wise management of our dealings with atomic power abroad, we may waive some mischief, probably the most important step we can take to limit, if we wish to limit, the countries making atomic weapons is to share our responsibility for their use with our allies abroad, and to make such weapons as effectively available as full partnership in the alliance might require.

Power and weapons have, to a great extent, gone their separate way. The problems of preventing total nuclear war can probably not be much helped by what we or anyone else do or fail to do about atomic power. Those problems need very different measures. To discourage the planned, deliberate, all-out atomic war, we need to look both to defense and to deterrence, defense that may not always in the wavering fortunes of a changing technology be trivial or even inadequate, deterrence which maintains a reasonably invulnerable capability for retaliation. In order to prevent the unsought, unplanned, eruption of all-out nuclear war, entrained by the growth of an initially limited conflict, we need to be prepared in equipment, men, training, planning, and doctrine to keep wars limited: limited in objective, in terrain, in tactics, and in means. These are not easy assignments; they are expensive, they are uncertain. They are not closely related to the main subject of our discussion.

Two things, however, are surely related: The McMahon Act has been amended in important ways to make possible, even to facilitate, the participation of private initiative, private money, and private decision in the advancement of the atomic power program. It has also been amended to make possible important, if still limited, assistance to power programs abroad. The adequacy of these amendments, the extent to which the present law still retains no longer relevant or appropriate vestiges of the post-war package, are questions hardly separable from the main themes of our meeting. the Twelfth Assembly.

Nor should we forget that there are today international, multi-national, and bilateral undertakings in the field of atomic energy, catalyzed in part by this country, and in even greater part by the recognized needs of other nations; some, like CERN, and in its initial phases, the I.A.E.A., are largely for research and education in different parts of natural science. Some are industrial, as is Euratom. Most are unsymmetric, providing means whereby the experience and resources of one country may flow to others less well endowed. But some, again as in Euratom, appear as true partnerships. None of them can, and as the technical situation stands, none of them ever will be able, to, assume the functions envisaged by the International Development Authority of the Acheson-Lilienthal Report; but they are responsive to the spirit, if not in all respects to the detail, of the President's Atoms for Peace.

VISTA

I have spoken of the limited relevance, at this time, of atomic power ~~and~~ to nuclear weapons. On the one hand, this has freed the atomic power program of inhibitions and constraints under which it long suffered; on the other, it has left the grim programs of military preparation for offense, defense, deterrence, limitation, to cope with keeping the peace. I do see a connection between the two; but it is not an immediate one; and it does not derive from the initially conceived unity of all parts of the atomic energy program.

In 1947 Mr. Stimson wrote, "The riven atom, uncontrolled, can be only a growing menace to us all." And then he went on to say, "Lasting peace and freedom can not be achieved until the world finds a way toward the necessary government of the whole." We think, of course, of a government having some analogy to our own experience: a federation in which we see, applied to the vast world, the notions of limitations and balance which have been fairly successful in our own country. I do not suppose the world has ever looked less hopeful for such an undertaking; and even if it were not for the Communists, it would not look very hopeful. Much of the world is in the grip of a fierce nationalism. Differences in culture, economy, education, custom and style are vast and deep. And there are the Communists.

Nevertheless, in our world, the nature of our defense problems pulls us together; the nature of our economic development pulls us together; the nature of the communications provided by technology pulls us together. Before one can have any hope of even limited federation on a larger scale, there has to be a common human community. This can not be global; it can not be that every two and a half billion of us knows everyone else. It can not have that kind of intimacy, in a world in which intimacy is harder and harder to come by anywhere. But how is it really? It is really so, in this world in which knowledge multiplies very rapidly and is increasingly more specialized, both knowledge of and knowledge how, both knowledge in the sense of science and knowledge in the sense of technique, that only very limited numbers of people know intimately about any one thing. They are intimate international communities: the people who know how to build high dams, the people who know something about subatomic physics, the people who know about malaria. The whole nature of our world is such that we are bound together in a transnational way, technically, economically, scientifically, culturally, by communities which are more loosely related to each other within a country than they are within themselves through the whole accessible world. This is in the nature of knowledge today, in the nature of competence. If the nations provide the warp of our life, these communities provide a kind of woof.

Atomic power will enrich our economy, perhaps in time in a decisive way. It will make possible undertakings that would have been foreclosed without it. In our dealings with other parts of the world, Americans will work with men of many countries; this they do today in countless enterprises for enlarging the understanding, increasing the civility, and deepening the spirit of man. If we see atomic energy as an example, as an appropriate if somewhat tarnished symbol, as one of many others, it will play its part in creating those communities, those true elements of federation, and that pattern of new order which will some day have to encompass this earth, if we are to live with the great new powers we have acquired.

These hopes, despite their remoteness and great uncertainty, seem to me nevertheless relevant to the criteria by which we assess the shortcomings and achievements of what we do with atomic power.

Do you know precisely what is involved in the Oppenheimer matter? Here is the entire sordid file, from the beginning. Oppenheimer put me a question which I passed on to "management" and "management" appears, after these many months, to be either unable or unwilling to answer it.

Unless you or someone else chooses to answer Oppenheimer's query, I have no alternative but to write him myself and will, of course, be obliged to include the Smith-Kendrick version in such a letter. Oppenheimer, who is a personal friend of mine, is under the impression that I had something to do with the program in question. I do not intend to allow this impression to stand, nor do I intend to make my letter to him of a confidential character. Pray advise me whether you wish the answer to Oppenheimer to come from "management" or from me. It is going to be one thing or the other.

Dear Ed,

I suppose that legalistically Mickelson's explanation can be argued: it is true that he had not, after two days, given me a final answer to my request that I be released from the Where We Stand program if the decision was made not to use the Oppenheimer interview. Then Oppenheimer settled it by withdrawing permission to use the 8-minute sequence.

However, Mickelson's explanation falls down when you recall the second installment of this matter--that is, when Midgley presented Mickelson with a half-hour edited version of the interview with Oppenheimer, told him he thought he could get a sponsor for it (The Fund for the Republic), and asked that it be accepted. Mickelson did not give Midgley an answer, though this happened many months ago.

It appears that the problem is to tell Oppenheimer the truth without calling our managers liars. I don't have any ideas on how to do that.

I hope to see you soon.

Sincerely,

Howard

Dear Dr. Oppenheimer,

These lines are merely to tell you how much I was impressed by your appearance on television with Ed Murrow last night. It was not only what you had to say in response to Ed's questioning, but it was the manner in which you said it that I found so engaging. The personality of the "whole man" carried conviction with it as it came over the air waves. And the total lack of venom, the high restraint of any bitter feeling after the soul-trying experience you have been through was, I thought, beyond praise.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Some time ago your program "See It Now" featured an interview with Dr. Oppenheimer, at which time you indicated that the more complete interview was the property of The Fund For the Republic, Inc.

Subsequently, prints of this longer version of the interview were made available to the Educational Television and Radio Center at Ann Arbor, Michigan, for distribution to the educational, non-commerical stations now operating in the United States. For several weeks WOI-TV has been attempting to secure this complete version with a view toward scheduling it on WOI-TV as a special feature. Needless to say, our station as a CBS affiliate did carry the "See It Now" program on which the abridged interview was presented, but we feel that the importance of the remarks made by Dr. Oppenheimer is such that the presentation of the entire interview would be of definite service to the public.

Although WOI-TV is owned and operated by Iowa State College as a non-profit concern for the purpose of disseminating educational and public service material in addition to the more general type of television service, it is technically a commercial station and not one of the educational, non-commercial channels allocated by the FCC in 1952. WOI-TV has been on the air since February, 1950. It is therefore impossible for us to secure prints of the interview from the Educational Television and Radio Center since they advise that they are obliged to limit distribution only to the non-commercial stations. An inquiry to the office of The Fund For the Republic in New York has indicated that their release of the entire interview is likewise limited, and they suggest that we contact you as perhaps the last resort.

Our intention is to clear our schedule during a Class "A" evening time period for presentation of the interview in its complete form. It will, of course, be a public service presentation and not sponsored. Any information you can provide as to its availability from your office will be greatly appreciated.

"NEHRU -- AN INTERVIEW WITH INDIA'S PRIME MINISTER"

February 15, 1955

NEHRU—AN INTERVIEW WITH INDIA'S PRIME MINISTER

FEBRUARY 15, 1955

EDWARD R. MURROW: Jawaharlal Nehru is the leader of 360 million Indians. He has been attending the meeting of the Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth held annually in London. This conversation took place at the residence of his sister, Madame Pandit, last Wednesday morning. Cameramen, Bill McClure, Leo Rossi.

Mr. Prime Minister, may I ask you a personal question?

JAWAHARLAL NEHRU: Yes.

MURROW: Why do you go about—both here and in India—with such a small bodyguard?

NEHRU: I have no bodyguard here—my own, I mean.

MURROW: Yes.

NEHRU: The British government supplies me with a person who is supposed to look after me, but otherwise I don't bring a bodyguard. It's a great nuisance, even in India, for me to carry about somebody with me. You see, Mr. Murrow, my life has been spent in crowds. I feel isolated if bodyguards come in the way between me and the people. [LAUGHTER.]

MURROW: Mr. Prime Minister, are you hopeful—well, that's not exactly the right word, because I know you are always hopeful—but do you have hopes of an eventual peaceful settlement on Formosa—or around Formosa?

NEHRU: I have certainly that hope. Indeed, Mr. Murrow, if a person didn't have hope he would be unable to function—properly, that is. One would become functionless. I certainly think it can be hammered out. I think it should be realized that the situation is a difficult one, but I would say it is not so difficult, after all, as the Indo-China situation was when the Geneva Conference met, and yet, through patience, through understanding, they arrived at a settlement. And therefore there's no reason why we shouldn't exercise that patience and understanding in order to get over this hurdle also. Because, after all, one has to understand that some kind of coexistence in the modern world is the only way to live on. The alternative is codestruction. Also, if I might add, I feel sure that all the parties concerned do not want war, and that is the most hopeful thing.

MURROW: You spoke of Indo-China, where India certainly contributed to the solution; similarly in a war in Korea. Do you regard at least part of India's function in this area to be a meeting ground where some of these tensions can be resolved, or at least where conversations may be held? It's sometimes referred to as a third force. I—I don't mean it in that kind.

NEHRU: I know. I know. We don't function as a force because we are not a force. But—India is, fortunately, so situated that it can speak with some, well, understanding and in a friendly way to the various countries involved. It is because of that that it can help in the present context too. We may have conferences and the like to deal with it, but these informal approaches help in—in creating that understanding and removing misconceptions, more than formal conferences.

MURROW: You believe in secret diplomacy and restraint—is that it, sir?

NEHRU: Well, secret diplomacy has a bad flavor. But I must say the open diplomacy of the present day [LAUGHTER] has been something worse than the old secret diplomacy. What I mean is that private exchanges, private talks, do create a better atmosphere for public meetings afterward.

MURROW: In my country, your policy is occasionally referred to as being neutralist. How would you describe it, sir?

NEHRU: Well, I don't like the word "neutralist" and I do not think it applies to our policy. First of all, the word neutral is normally used in times of war—belligerents and neutrals—not in times of peace. Our policy is neither neutral in that sense nor passive. It is an active, positive policy, well—in favor of peace—holding on to certain objectives and ideals, and trying in a friendly way and in a small way to influence events. We don't imagine that we can make a terrible lot of difference—but sometimes, when things are in the balance, even a little tells.

MURROW: Is it possible that we are all being brutalized as a result of these exchanges of epithets and sloganistic terms?

NEHRU: I agree with you, Mr. Murrow. There is far too much shouting at each other, and generally speaking, I am not referring to individuals. The wars and what has happened subsequently—has rather suppressed the finer instincts of men and made them somewhat brutal, which is unfortunate. Because after all—we are supposed to develop in the course of thousands

There is far too much strong language used, even by big statesmen, not to mention the press of course; which does not help. Now—any person, any country can put forward its own position as firmly as possible without necessarily running down the other party, which doesn't add—doesn't help at all. In this atomic age, one has to balance that atomic and nuclear age with patience, understanding, charity and compassion.

MURROW: Prime Minister, you were recently in China?

NEHRU: Yes.

MURROW: Do you regard Communist China as a threat to India?

NEHRU: No. Not at all. Quite practically, looking at the picture, I do not regard any country as a threat to India. But in so far as China is concerned, we have had not only long talks there, but we have come to certain agreements about common problems, and we have clearly stated there, in those agreements, the basis of our relationship. Nonaggression and, what is important, noninterference in each other's affairs—internal or other. That, I think, is the basis that might well apply to every country. Of course it might be said that, oh, it's all very well, but are you sure this will be acted upon? Well, that kind of thing can always be said, but the mere fact of coming to these agreements creates an atmosphere of goodwill, better relations, and an obstruction to somebody trying to break them. So, it's a great gain.

MURROW: What would you say, or would you care to say anything about the relationships between Moscow and Peiping, Mr. Prime Minister?

NEHRU: Well, obviously, the relationship between those two countries is a friendly relationship. Friendly in many ways, and Moscow has helped Peking in regard to technical personnel and other matters. But if your relation—if your question means any kind of subservience of Peking to Moscow, I think that is not so at all. One must remember the whole background of China, where the mere size is a very big size—past traditions, past history—and they are proud people, and in their revolution they succeeded very largely because of their own efforts—not of external help, even Soviet help. And all this has given them kind of a self-reliance. Their policy—internal policy, may be partly guided, no doubt it is, by Communist ideology; but you'll find that it is all translated in terms of Chinese life, not of any other country. And because they are great realists, the Chinese, and their approach is pragmatic in regard to land, in regard to industry, and everything, and so, while no doubt they will continue as friends to the Soviets, they lead their—their independent life as a nation.

MURROW: But this relationship again, to use the current political shorthand of the day, is not that of a satellite in any sense?

NEHRU: Well, that is completely correct. You can't have a country like China the satellite to any country. If there was any conflict in China between Chinese nationalism and some external influence, I have no doubt that the nationalism would be the stronger force.

MURROW: Yes. This—it would not be fair to refer to this as "Titoism" but it would be in the same—clime?

NEHRU: Yes—it is not—No. You can't compare the two.

MURROW: Well, yesterday as you know, Malenkov resigned. I was wondering if you would make any comment on the political changes in Moscow?

NEHRU: I'm afraid I am not in a position, really, to comment, and I don't know much about them except what has appeared in the press, and therefore I don't know what exactly they signify. But I am more interested, of course, in the foreign policy of the Soviet Union rather than its internal policy, and I would imagine that these changes are more concerned with internal policy than with foreign policy, and that the foreign policy will continue more or less as it has in the recent past.

MURROW: Why hasn't India accepted military aid from the Soviet Union or the United States?

NEHRU: First of all, the Soviet Union has never offered us military aid.

MURROW: Yes, but—

NEHRU: But there is no question of military aid from the Soviet Union.

MURROW: You have stated that. Yes.

NEHRU: I know. And even the United States have hinted at it, that if we so wished they would prepare to consider it—there has never been any question of the United States offering us military aid. Well, the real reason is that we really do not think—we try not to think in military terms. I want my country to be strong and I want—the strength of my country is going to be, apart from economic health and progress—the unity of my country, and self-reliance in my country. Now, I do not want anything to be done which reduces the feeling of self-reliance. And that, of course, is the big lesson that Mr. Gandhi taught us, and although Mr. Gandhi died several years ago, his influence in our thinking continues very much.

MURROW: Well, Mr. Prime Minister, having read some of your writings, do you ever regret that the burdens of state prevent you from writing these days?

NEHRU: Well, perhaps yes—sometimes. Well, of course you must realize, Mr. Murrow, that I'm not what might be called—ah—a writer by profession.

MURROW: Yes.

NEHRU: Whatever I have written has been, well, an expression of myself under certain circumstances. Not written, let us say, for—even with a very keen eye to publication. In the back of my mind I might have had that thought—and all my major works have been written in prison.

MURROW: Well then, as I understand it, you wouldn't recommend prison for aspiring writers?

NEHRU: Well, since you have asked me that question, I would recommend prison not only to aspiring writers but to aspiring politicians to [LAUGHTER] in the sense, not that prison is too good a thing—in the sense that it helps one to live quietly and—and think. And in the modern world I think one of the very unfortunate results of—well, if you like, industrial civilization, is that it gives little time to think. We live from act to act, and we rush from place to place. I think, so far as I am concerned, the years I have spent in prison have been the most formative and important in my life because of various things—well, the discipline, the sensations, but chiefly the opportunity to think clearly, to try to understand things. And I took my writing, too—more to clarify my own ideas than to address somebody else.

MURROW: Several years ago, Mr. Prime Minister, I had the opportunity to help bring Indian students to the States to study. Was that development successful, or, in the vernacular, did it pay off?

NEHRU: Now, obviously we require highly trained technicians in various subjects and we welcome their going to America or coming to England for this kind of training. That is, our whole outlook is changing from the literary type of study, which is encouraged in the past, to technical, and scientific, and the like, so in that sense they are good. But there is one—sometimes I have noticed—one drawback, if I may say so: that a person who goes to America, becomes a good technician, gets used to all kinds of mechanical ways of working; then he goes back to the Indian village, he feels frustrated. He says, "I haven't got those tools," you see.

MURROW: Yes.

NEHRU: He has to adapt himself to other conditions, and he tends to hanker after special equipment which he may not have.

MURROW: Well, you spoke of the need for self-sufficiency—that is, to rely upon yourself, but what sort of technical aid do you require from the West? Is it agriculture, hydroelectrics, mining —what is it?

NEHRU: Well, we really need it in ever so many departments. Of course, we need it so much that the only way to get it really is to train people in India. We may send a hundred, we may send five hundred, we may send a thousand people abroad, but we want to train a hundred thousand. We can't send a hundred thousand people abroad, so that what we need really is—as we are putting up institutes of training not only high-class technicians but the middle-grade ones.

Take the community schemes. Now we start at the lowest level —the village worker. We select him from the village—a bright young man or woman. At present we give him nine months' training, send him back to the village—above him a big group of ten villages. We have got a small group: a medical man, an educationalist, an engineer, an agricultural man, a veterinary man—five or six like this looking after that group of ten villages. Then the bigger group of a hundred villages has now a higher standard of people. Now, if you think in terms of five hundred thousand villages in India, imagine how many people require the village worker type. You require them by the hundred thousand. We have to train them ourselves, but some types of superior training we can't give at present, and therefore we have to send them—we like to send them and we do send them—abroad. What we require in India is equipment for our institutes. You see?

MURROW: Then you want to home-grow your own experts?

NEHRU: That's right. That's what I mean.

MURROW: Yes.

NEHRU: Of course, some people go abroad to be trained, but they have really to develop the habit of working in the environment they have got to work in future. If they get accustomed to another environment they won't easily fit in for a long time.

MURROW: This, of course, is a development that presumably would combat domestic Communism in India, wouldn't it?

NEHRU: Well, naturally, the more we lift standards of living, the more we make people realize that they are marching toward better objectives, the less they are discontented and frustrated.

MURROW: Well, Mr. Prime Minister, I know there is no such thing as one Asia, but what about the relationship between Asia and the United States?

NEHRU: Well, Mr. Murrow, you just said quite rightly that Asia is not an entity except in a geographical sense. You may divide up Asia into various large areas: the Far East, Southeast Asia, South India, of course, is part of Southeast Asia and at the same time is a big enough entity in itself. Big enough not only in size but in historical tradition and all that. Then, Western Asia, the Arab world and all that. They have different backgrounds and yet historically they have been connected in various ways. Also, the last two hundred years or so, they have had the common experience of some form of colonial or semicolonial domination. Now, this common experience is a big link between them, because they have reacted in a common way—principally a nationalist reaction; also a reaction in search of social progress, social justice in varying degrees.

And you will find in Asia, therefore, some common understanding of each other on that basis. I don't wish to put it too high because—because of the differences. Your question was about the United States and Asia. Well, the first thing to realize—and I say so with all respect—I have a feeling that it is not adequately realized in the United States or elsewhere in the world, is that something very big has happened and is happening in Asia. In a sense you might say Asia had become stagnant and static—not changing—unprogressive. Several hundred years ago—not now. That made it weak. And the Europeans came; they were dynamic, they were making progress industrially and many other ways. That set—that set in motion certain forces in Asia, slowly—nationalist forces, others. Well, they have come to fruition now, and so some kind of revolutionary turmoil has existed in Asia for some time past in the minds of men.

It has taken different shapes, different forms, dependent on circumstances. In China it has taken a big shape of the Chinese Revolution going in the Communist direction. In India we were guided largely by Gandhi, a very unique personality, and he turned us in another direction. But more and more, in the other countries, Indonesia, Burma, all the Western Asian countries, there has been this turmoil, trying to break through that crust which made it difficult for them to get out of it—social crust, economic crust, social habits. But the first thing that came in the way was political freedom—political lack of freedom. Now to realize this, and to realize that Asian problems have not only to be understood in their new revolutionary context but can only be solved in full cooperation with the Asians, is important. What I mean is this: In the past it became the habit for great European powers at first—America came into the picture later—to deal with Asia and the Asian countries as a kind of outer fringe of Europe and to be decided by the big people in Europe. Now, that kind of thing is not only very irritating to the Asian countries but too—but it just fails to solve the problem today, in the context of things today.

—social crust,

And mere military power is not enough when you are dealing with vast masses of human beings. Military power is of course important, but one has really to win the minds of those people and win them also not merely by, well, not certainly by threats and not merely by, well, doing good works even, if I may say so. Good works are good, but it's a psychological problem, the problem of friendly understanding and not merely showing that if they don't behave they will not get some benefit, or they might be injured. This kind of thing produces the opposite reaction.

MURROW: Thank you very much indeed, Prime Minister Nehru. Thank you, sir.

NEHRU: Well, I'm very glad—

MURROW: Thank you very much. Good-by.

SOME ENGLISHMEN LOOK AT AMERICA

MARCH 22, 1955

EDWARD R. MURROW: Good evening. This is "See It Now." Tonight: Bertrand Russell, Rebecca West, David Low, J. B. Priestley, and some Welsh coal miners, in an unofficial critique on the mistakes being made by both sides of what Mr. Churchill has called the Grand Alliance. This is an unscientific sampling of what a few Britons think of us and our policies. First, J. B. Priestley, who writes plays and books.

J. B. PRIESTLEY: Well, I feel there's a great deal of nonsense being talked about these relations. Anglo-American relations are really what the American people feel about the English people and what the English people feel about the American people. It's not a question of what Mr. Dulles is thinking about Mr. Eden, or Mr. Eden about Mr. Dulles. In other words, we can't begin changing the relations between these two great nations at every turn and twist of the political situation. I think that the more sensational press on both sides of the Atlantic might play the thing a bit fairer than they do. After all, there is a tendency to think that only a quarrel is news. I think we can't have too many exchanges, oh, of professors, students, authors, artists, everybody of that kind—perhaps politicians least of all. But finally, let's not keep digging the thing up and having a look at it as children do when they plant something. Just let it grow.

MURROW: Aneurin Bevan gets much of his strength from the Welsh coal fields. The miners, like Mr. Bevan, are very critical of the United States. Howard Smith asks them why.

HOWARD SMITH: Pardon me. Can I ask you what you think about relations between the United States and Great Britain? What do you think is wrong with relations?

WILLIAM ANDREW TUDOR: My name is Tudor—William Andrew Tudor. I am one of the original Tudors. We gave a king to the throne of England, and we Welshman are very independent. We are very grateful to America for assistance during the war, because we believe that they saved us from being ruled and governed by Germany. But we don't think it right that we should have another war over Formosa. And we don't think that they should rule and govern us, though they fed us. We like to feel and know that we are a independent people and we've always fought for independence and we're always going to fight for independence. We don't think it right that we should go to war over Formosa and Chiang Kai-shek, because we've had enough of wars.

JAMES GRANT: If America went to war with the Chinese people, or against Russia, and this country was to decide to fight them, if my union or the Labor Party said that they would back up, I would follow my union; but if my union said that it was not in favor of a war with China, I would definitely not be in favor, myself. Personally, I would not dig any more coal to fight China or Russia.

MURROW: This is the Ibstone, Buckinghamshire, farmhouse of one of the world's most distinguished reporters, Rebecca West. These are some of her books: The Thinking Reed, Black Lamb and Gray Falcon, The Meaning of Treason, The Train of Powder. She tells Howard Smith what she thinks is wrong with the Grand Alliance.

REBECCA WEST: There are a whole lot of forces which tend to produce ill feeling between Britain and the United States. Some of them could be smoothed over. Some are going to be very difficult to smooth over. First of all, there is, of course, a large amount of Communist agitation which goes on here, particularly among the Communist-dominated trade unions. They pump anti-American feeling into their members all the time. So does the Communist press, and of course, many anti-Communists spread it. They are simple folk and they believe it, and then, of course, there's a whole historical background to it. You are—you Americans—you're now powerful, very powerful, and you're being hated in just the same way the French were hated when they were powerful, and the same way the British were hated when they were very powerful. You won't like it but you've got to take it; it is a consequence of power. And then also, I'll tell you another thing: There are many Americans who speak so ill of their country when they go abroad, and they represent the United States as really a barbarous place. I do wish more Americans would speak well of America—would tell, for example, what a lot you've done for your colored people. And I've seen that; in my lifetime, I have seen the most extraordinary improvement in the lot of colored people. It would be a good thing for Europe if you said more about them.

SMITH: Well, in the specific case of Formosa, why do you feel we are not at one? What's—what's hindering our unity on that policy?

MISS WEST: Well, it's awfully hard for us to understand. You know, the other day my doctor came in to see me and he said, "Oh, how dreadfully the Americans are behaving about Formosa. How would we like it if the Americans occupied the Isle of Wight?" Well, that struck me as quite amusing, because Formosa is what?—it's about 13,000 square miles, I think, and I think you have ten million people on it; whereas the Isle of Wight is, I think, perhaps thirty square miles and we have less than a hundred thousand people on it, and it's also quite near our coast line. It's just a boat throw from the coast line instead of a hundred miles away. And it was an absurd comparison. He didn't reflect on what you did with ten million people who didn't want not to be defended by the Americans. He didn't reflect that the—Formosa is necessary to the defense of the Philippines, nor how many people on the Philippines would prefer to be defended by the United States. My doctor would never dream of passing a quick and derogatory judgment on an individual. He wouldn't say of a man and a woman: he's behaving disgracefully in this and that issue—unless he got the facts. But as this was a political affair, an affair of international relations, he felt at liberty to be rash. I'm sure that's all wrong, and it's a fault that we've got to correct in ourselves. We've got to apply in our capacities—public, as political animals—we've got to apply the same standards that we do in our homes, in our personal relationships.

SMITH: Well, could you suggest something practical that we might do to prevent misunderstandings?

MISS WEST: I think we ought never to act out of hatred. We ought to—if we have to lift our hands, it ought to be in the—in self-preservation, and to preserve the people for whose lives we made ourselves responsible. We mustn't act out of hatred; and we must also bind ourselves to tell the truth; and we must also cultivate a good deal more horse sense than we've had. Not only must we not tell lies—we mustn't believe lies.

MURROW: Another British tradition is fish and chips. For one and thruppence, deep-fried whitefish and French potatoes wrapped in yesterday's newspaper.

SMITH: I beg your pardon. There's been a lot of friction between America and Britain lately. What do you think has been wrong?

MAN [EATING FISH AND CHIPS]: There's a little story I'd like to tell you, about when I was in Switzerland for my holiday this year. The—we met some Americans out there and they were very charming people. We had a drink with them and they happened to mention they were coming to England. We said, "Fine. Well, when you come, come along and see us." Gave them our phone number and our address. So they duly came, and we took them out one evening for a drink in our local pub, and showed them how we go on, and then invited them back to our flat for a cup of coffee. And this American lady went into the kitchen to help my wife to get this coffee, which I thought was very noble of her. As soon as she stepped into our little kitchen, she said, "Oh, honey, you got no icebox in here!" Well, I haven't got a television set either, so what the hell? Cheerio!

MURROW: From a fish-and-chips shop in East London we take you to Magdalen College, Oxford University, for a learned comment on the Yalta papers by Professor Alan J. P. Taylor.

SMITH: As a historian who presumably lives on documents, do you feel the State Department was wrong to publish the secret Yalta documents, Mr. Taylor?

PROFESSOR ALAN J. P. TAYLOR: Well, I think I'm probably out of —out of step with most people in this country, which is not unusual for me. I think it's a splendid thing, though not, I may say, a very important one. For us historians there are hardly any surprises in—in this publication. Nearly all of it has come out though in a rather scrappy way before, and looking very rapidly through this enormous bulk, I haven't found anything that added to my knowledge and understanding of what happened at Yalta. I believe that the whole business of secrecy is greatly overdone; that while statesmen need to negotiate in—in private while they're doing it, that to sit on things for fifty years, which is what our Foreign Office wants to do, is a very bad thing. But of course you must remember that the historian, in my opinion, if he is any good, ought to regard all officials and all secrecies as his enemy—that we are, after all, just like journalists on a larger scale. We are scavengers. We are looking out for everything we can get hold of, and in so far as the whole story of Yalta has now come out, it's probably a very good thing.

MURROW: Then we asked Professor Taylor if he thought the release of the Yalta documents would increase anti-American feeling in Britain.

PROFESSOR TAYLOR: I don't believe so. I think this is a thing built up by the newspapers. Journalists, after all, being practically illiterate, have certainly not read the documents that have come out already, and they treat a lot of them as if they were a great surprise. They're not. We really knew it already—that, when we look over the record of Stettinius and James Byrnes, and what, after all, Churchill has published, himself, and gotten many good dollars for.

SMITH: Well, what can we do to spread understanding?

PROFESSOR TAYLOR: I should think, change places—let the Americans come and live here a bit and we try living over there.

MURROW: As Professor Taylor said, he is an exception. Most Englishmen do not like the Yalta publication. Lady Violet Bonham Carter, a former M.P. and an old friend of Mr. Churchill, speaks for the majority of British opinion on the Yalta Papers.

LADY VIOLET BONHAM CARTER: I understand from your newspapers that President Eisenhower was not consulted about the release. The protest of our own government was made crystal clear. It was disregarded and it was overridden. I understand—please correct me if I am wrong—that the State Department was solely responsible for authorizing this release. They must surely have realized, not only the reactions in our own country here, but also the heart-burnings, the reopening of old wounds it must have caused in Europe.

SMITH: Well, what is your opinion about the State Department's decision to publish the documents concerning other international conferences since the war?

LADY VIOLET BONHAM CARTER: Well, may I be quite frank? I feel that it is common form even in private negotiations on a much lower level if a release, or if any kind of statement is issued, to do it only by consent of the—mutual consent of the parties concerned—an authorized release and an accurate and agreed record and statements. This release is unilateral. I think that in future the people may enter such international conferences with very, very much impaired confidence. After all, foreign relations can surely not be conducted by scoop or leak. We cannot use these great international issues as a whetstone on which to grind a domestic party battle-ax.

MURROW: A newspaperman with considerable credentials is David Francis Astor, editor of The Observer, an independent London publication.

SMITH: Mr. Astor, as the editor of the newspapers that have been constructively critical, what would you say is wrong in our relations, especially in regard to the Far East?

DAVID FRANCIS ASTOR: Well, I don't think there is anything wrong in the fact that British and American policies in the Far East often disagree. When partners disagree it usually means that both of them are partly in the right, but neither entirely so. It's one of the values of partnership—that you should hear the opinions of someone else whose interests are basically the same as yours but whose standpoint is different. I often wonder what is the real basis of the difference of approach of America and Britain to these questions. I believe it lies in our different situations. America's the largest of the free countries and therefore she is bound to worry over defense problems. If she doesn't worry over that, nobody can do it for her, and the rest of us all expect that of her and wish it. It means that in her policy she is inclined to put the emphasis on what you could call the power factor, the military considerations. But Britain, on the other hand, is not a giant power. She is a middle-sized power. We make our way in the world by making friends and influencing people.

MURROW: An expert on what the British and the Americans are doing wrong is Cassandra, of the Daily Mirror. His real name is William Connor.

NEWSPAPER HEADLINE: "What the British Think of the Yanks."

WILLIAM CONNOR [CASSANDRA]: Well, I think the first thing we could do is to do more business together. I think business is the great bridge which joins conflicting ideologies. I think if shrewd Uncle Sam, thinking he gets a big bargain out of business, can meet even shrewder John Bull, and both sides are satisfied and look at it and retire—then they can start saying: "Well, we'll do the same deal again and we'll scalp each other." Now, I think that's a very good thing. I think that when friends, or even slightly strange friends, can do business together and both make a satisfactory profit out of each other, then I think it becomes a very strong friendship—commercial, sordid but practical.

MURROW: The creator of "Colonel Blimp" is David Low. He is also the creator of some of the best political satire done on either side of the ocean. Born in New Zealand, he draws for the Manchester Guardian.

DAVID LOW: Nowadays, too many Americans seem to think that negotiation of any kind is—is appeasement in the worse sense. But we don't have that view. Too many Americans seem to think that if they go within a mile of a Russian or a Chinese, they're —they're bound to have their pants stolen. These wonderfully clever Chinese and Russians—bunk! I don't believe it! All the responsible people I know, know perfectly well that in the last resort we'd be with the Americans. Yes. Sure, of course we criticize you a lot, and naturally—for a very simple reason: We don't want to get our heads blown off. And what you Americans do in public affairs, in international affairs, might just very well decide whether we wear our heads on or off.

MURROW: Lord Bertrand Russell is a scientist, a philosopher, and an author. He won the Nobel prize for literature at the age of seventy-nine. He is now eighty-three. He lives at 41 Queens Road, Richmond, Surrey, and it was here that Howard Smith interviewed him.

SMITH: Well, Lord Russell, we've been talking a great deal about America's faults. Are there any British faults that make—that make relations difficult?

LORD RUSSELL: I think the British have very grave faults. I don't think they're political. I think they are more social. I am constantly really shocked by the impolite things that English people, in talk, will say about and to Americans—things that really make me blush, because they are so unjust. And I think they ought to learn the ordinary courtesies of life in dealing with Americans, which they don't seem to have at present, and I think that's been a very great source of trouble—very great.

SMITH: Well, Lord Russell, there seems to have been an unusual amount of friction between America and Great Britain just in the past year. What do you feel is wrong?

LORD RUSSELL: Well, the fundamental cause of the friction between England and America is a difference of view as to policy, especially, I think, in the East. The English have a more cautious approach to Eastern questions, we think, than you seem to have. We're more afraid of war and less persuaded of the justice of certain causes which appear just to America. I notice that Attlee said quite emphatically and without reservation that the Chinese Communist government ought to have Formosa. I think that is a view which is very general in England and hardly anybody holds it in America. It's a very great difference, and of course, there goes with that another difference which is: most English people who know anything about China consider that Chiang Kai-shek is a ruffian, a totalitarian, a bad man altogether, and not the sort of man that one wants to support. And also they think that Americans are quite mistaken in supposing that if Chiang Kai-shek, with the help of America, were to invade China, large parts of the Chinese population would come over to support him. Because they remember that Chiang Kai-shek was beaten because his troops deserted to the Communists. That was before the Communists had power to make them do so.

SMITH: Well, what about America's general attitude toward world affairs? Could you make any suggestion as to how we might develop our attitude?

LORD RUSSELL: Well, in Europe, I don't think I have much criticism of the American attitude. I think, as far as European affairs go, I am pretty much in agreement with it. It's—it's almost entirely as regards Asia that I don't agree. Not that I like the Communist regimes. I don't. I don't like them at all. But I don't think it's the duty of the West to go crusading against any regime it doesn't happen to like. That's altogether too serious. I think, of course, in your internal, national affairs, the will of the country is supreme, and if the country wants something, that happens, and you get the habit of thinking the will of the country is supreme. Now, in international affairs, that is not so. You meet the will of other countries and there has to be give and take, and you haven't the habit of give and take in politics in the same way, I think, that you would have after long experience. You don't—you feel as though you are giving away a principle when you concede things to the other party; whereas it's in the very essence of negotiation.

SMITH: Can you suggest any practical steps we might take to improve relations and to strengthen the Western Alliance morally?

LORD RUSSELL: I think that one of the things I should most wish to see is that there should be no more of this purging of libraries and purging of professors, and no longer the attempt to impose upon the public, by authority and misinformation, a false view about a great many important world problems; and that it should no longer be thought that a man who brings forward some fact that the authorities would like to have kept dark is necessarily disloyal. I think that is one of the main sources of trouble. Undoubtedly, the harshness in America toward people who are thought to be Communist sympathizers is a thing which has shocked English opinion—and, I expect, continental opinion too. The kind of thing that has been associated with McCarthy—but it isn't by any means confined to him. I think what has defeated McCarthy is the fact that other people have taken up his policy, and so I don't see that, from a public point of view, there's very much gained.

SMITH: Yes.

LORD RUSSELL: I don't think it's very much better. Now, this habit of investigating anybody who works for government—so minutely—makes scientists shy off from government work, and is almost certain to be a very great impediment to atomic research in America, and actually to make the whole business of atomic weapons not nearly so effective as it would be if there was less.

SMITH: Do you draw any hope from such things as the Supreme Court decision against segregation in American schools?

LORD RUSSELL: Yes. I think that's a very good thing indeed. And I should like to say here, generally, that I find no criticism whatever of the federal judiciary in America, which I think is very good indeed. Its decisions seem to be sound and liberal and wise.

SMITH: Well, which do you think is the greater menace in the world today, Lord Russell: Communism, or the problems that arise due to the awakening of what are called the backward peoples in Asia and Africa?

LORD RUSSELL: Well, they are virtually the same problem because —the—certainly the awakening of Asia's a thing going like a prairie fire. The Communists have made themselves the protagonists of the—the people of Asia, and they will be the protagonists of the people in Africa as soon as there is much doing there, and that is a very grave danger. But at the same time, I think that we, the Western nations, are very much to blame for not having done the things which ought to have been done—such as land reform, for instance, which ought to have been done long ago, and which we've left for the Communists to do.

SMITH: Well, do you feel then that we have a good chance of leading the Western Alliance along constructive paths?

LORD RUSSELL: Well, nobody else has—that's quite certain. I mean—[LORD RUSSELL LAUGHS] it's got to be you or nobody.

SMITH: I think a great many Americans doubt the validity of a policy of peaceful coexistence with the Russians. Do you feel that it is possible?

LORD RUSSELL: I think there are only two possibilities: coexistence and coextinction. If you're not going to find a way of coexisting, the human race will cease to exist. That's in view of modern armaments. And I think we've got to coexist. I think the Russians have got to realize that, and we have got to realize it. I am perfectly aware that we shan't get the Russians to realize it unless we have very powerful armaments. We must have sufficiently powerful armaments to make the Russians think a war is not worth while. That, I think, is obvious. I am not at all inclined to urge disarmament at the present time—not at all. But I do think we have got to realize, ourselves, and we have got to get the Russians to realize, that if there is a war, neither side will get any single thing that it wants. Nothing. The Russians won't get world empire. We shan't get security. What you would get is masses of corpses and an extinction of the human race. And that's not what anybody wants—so that we've got to learn to coexist somehow.

SWISS WATCH TARIFF

February 28, 1955

Dear Alan;

Before we go any further, allow me to introduce myself. I'm Gene DePoris, a PR in the domestic division of HRH IF NW, and currently exploring the American end of the Swiss watch tariff story. In this regard I have come across an amusing series of correspondence sent by a Swiss representative of the Hamilton Watch Company to his boss here in America. Fred suggested that I bring you up to date on my visit to Hamilton, so enclosed are copies of the letters which I am sure will amuse you and Bill Mathews. Since I promised the head of the Hamilton Company not to let these get around, please don't let the Swiss find out about it, as it would violate a confidence between Hamilton and their Swiss contact.

In one of the reels I saw yesterday, you have a Swiss labor leader who says that last year five thousand were made unemployed and four thousand sought work in other industries, presumably as a result of change in the tariff law. However, in Washington, our Department of Commerce people say that only 456 were unemployed in the Swiss watch industry in June of last year and that in September, two months after the tariff change, unemployment dropped to 397. They also added that of the 63,000 watchmakers employed in Switzerland, 4,000 are foreign workers.

For some reason, the September figures were the most recent the Commerce Department had. In view of the great disparity between the figures we have here and those given by the Swiss labor leader, Fred wonders whether you could get the latest official figures from either the U.S. Embassy or the Swiss themselves.

Thank you for your trouble and best regards,

Rowe, Donald D

Dear Brother Rowe:

Many thanks for your kind words about our SEE IT NOW program on the watch tariff question.

It is indeed gratifying to know that our efforts were so well received, and we appreciate your taking the time to write to us about it.

Dear Brother Murrow:

Although I've adhered to a policy of not presuming on fraternity ties in my work (I'm Kappa Sigma - Rutgers '35), I don't think such a policy need inhibit me from congratulating a Brother for an extremely well-done job.

I refer, of course, to your "See It Now" on the watch tariffs. As the firm representing the American Watch Manufacturers Association we naturally are very much on one side of this question, and were all eyes and ears between 10:30 and 11 last night.

I think congratulations are very much in order not only for the excellence of the presentation but for the comprehensive job that was done in exploring both sides of the question. In this, you are virtually a pioneer.

Fraternally,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Needless to say I viewed your program of Tuesday, March 29, with considerable interest. It is very difficult for me to be objective on the subject of the competition between Swiss and American watches, but I recognize in your program a real effort to present the subject objectively to the American public. I deeply appreciate the fine effort on your part and the excellent work done by your crew here in Lancaster.

I can't help but comment on the last remark made by you on the program that to whatever extent we decrease trade with foreign countries we increase their trade with the Communists. This might be true with respect to other countries but is certainly not true in the case of Switzerland. The evidence seems fairly clear that Switzerland is already trading with the Communists or anyone else to whatever extent they can make money for Switzerland in doing so and history shows that they have always dealt with both sides in any war.

Very truly yours,

DRS. SALK, FRANCIS, GREGG REPORT ON A VICTORY OVER POLIO

APRIL 12, 1955

EDWARD R. MURROW: Good evening. This is "See It Now," April 12, 1955. The entire program originates live from the Polio Vaccine Evaluation Center, the director's office at the University of Michigan. Today a great profession made a giant step forward and the news that came out of this room lifted a sense of fear from the homes of millions of Americans. In this room is the man who made the vaccine, Jonas E. Salk; Dr. Thomas Francis, the man who made the nation-wide test; Dr. Alan Gregg of the Rockefeller Foundation, a medical statesman who spoke for history today. These three scientists will be reporting on today's event. On this table the products of a year of testing and measuring were evaluated. Upstairs in this small building were the records of some one million eight hundred thousand American youngsters. Some had vaccine. Some didn't. No one knew who had it and who didn't except Dr. Francis and his colleagues. He made his report in a 130-page document which will be a model for future tests. Dr. Francis, tell me, is it true that you wanted just to write this report and make three copies and mail it in, and have nothing to do with all this business of radio and television?

DR. FRANCIS: That was really my first suggestion because I thought it would save a great deal of difficulty and confusion.

MURROW: I wonder if you could highlight the report for us briefly?

DR. FRANCIS: Well, the major problems were those of the identification and registration of the people who were involved in the study; and then the subsequent problem of determining who got sick, who developed poliomyelitis, and of following them; having proper investigation of the case so that we had records that we could depend upon and were complete, and from which we could draw valid conclusions. The basic data showed, I think, quite distinctly, that the vaccine had a protective effect of no insignificant level, and that if one were to measure it against the most clear-cut cases of the disease that there was something in the level of eighty per cent effectiveness against paralytic poliomyelitis; that the effectiveness was less distinct against Type One of poliomyelitis virus infections, but against Types Two and Three of poliomyelitis virus, infection or disease was quite pronounced.

MURROW: Dr. Francis, what about the harmful effects? Were any children made ill as the result of the inoculation?

DR. FRANCIS: We carried out some studies under controlled conditions again, of that effect and so far as we can determine there was nothing that seemed to be related to the vaccine which had any significant harmful effects. In fact, the frequency of what were called reactions was just about the same in the vaccinated, or those that got controlled inoculations, or even among those who were uninoculated; so that there was nothing in that series of studies that suggested that the vaccine created any harmful effect. And when one came to the cases of disease, there were quite pronounced diseases; it seems that they were incidental or coincidental, rather than related to the vaccine itself.

MURROW: Well, sir, we have heard the word "placebo" several times today. Could you tell us what it is and why was it necessary to use it?

DR. FRANCIS: Well, the accuracy of a study depends upon the unbiased character of it, and if one has to depend upon observations which are related to memory or to opinions, then one has a great deal of difficulty. And in a study where everyone who is vaccinated is known, then there is the opportunity for the introduction of a virus, even though it's unintentional. But if a group of children are inoculated with a material which seems to be the same as the vaccine, and no one knows who got what, then the reports and investigations are carried out in completely unbiased, objective fashion, and this results in much more solid and more convincing data. The term placebo—Dr. Gregg reminded me this morning—comes from the Latin—the future, placio. It means "I shall please," or "I shall placate" and it really is the medical term used for something which is given as a substitute—or as a pacifier, let's say, rather than a real therapeutic agent.

MURROW: Sort of like a blank cartridge?

DR. FRANCIS: Yes, it is a blindfold test.

MURROW: Your figures go from sixty to ninety per cent in effectiveness, depending upon the type of polio. What about going to ninety-five or a hundred per cent? What are the prospects?

DR. FRANCIS: I think we must say we are limited in this study by the fact that these were done under certain conditions with certain preparations of vaccine, and that these results apply only to this particular study. Dr. Salk indicated today that with the preparations of vaccine that are being made at the present time, that they are far superior in their capacity to produce antibodies; and if the antibody level is the indication of the degree of immunity, then one should anticipate that it would be improved. But when you talk about ninety-five to a hundred per cent, there is no vaccine that really gets beyond that point in the—or even reaches that point, except under very ideal conditions, because one has to be concerned and one is confronted with the conditions under which it is used, and the time, and all the other factors which might make a difference, so that a study of this sort and the results of this study are related to this study itself. The future depends upon the future.

MURROW: Dr. Salk, you ought to be at home in this building. I think two of your children were born here, weren't they?

DR. SALK: I paced the floor right upstairs a few years ago.

MURROW: What do you think of the chances of total immunity?

DR. SALK: As you were talking to Dr. Francis about this, it reminded me of our conversation of several weeks ago when we discussed the question of "Is this the year of victory?"—and I believe I said then, I preferred to regard whatever the findings were as indicating a trend. Well, I think what Dr. Francis has provided today is a very substantial indication of trend, and the mere fact that there were differences in the degree of immunity with respect to Types One, Two, and Three, is part of the indication of the trend. Now, as you were speaking together I felt a bit excited with respect to the challenge. Dr. Francis said that no vaccine is better than ninety-five to one hundred per cent effective. Well, this may be so, and I think that this is one of the things that would be very interesting to try to do something about. There is built into the results of these studies the indications of the trend, plus the additional studies that we have done this past year, an understanding of the dynamics of the immune process. That is to say, how does this immunity come about?

MURROW: Yes. How long will it last, this immunity, now?

DR. SALK: Well, this is part of the answer to this question. The question of degree of effectiveness and the degree of immunity, or persistence of immunity, are linked together. We have indications that it should be possible to produce long-term immunity. Now if you come back and say, does this mean lifelong immunity?—I would like to say we will discuss that at some time in the future.

MURROW: Yes. Dr. Gregg, in your lifetime you have seen a lot of diseases whipped, beaten, brought under control. What would you say about the possibilities, the probabilities, or the certainties, in connection with this vaccine?

DR. GREGG: Possibilities, probabilities, and certainties—Well, I should think that the main possibility—and I speak this guardedly because I think it is extremely important not to take any part in any disillusionment later—but I think the main possibility is that, thanks to the vaccine, we shall have a protection comparable to and perhaps better than the protection we have in the case of two other virus diseases, namely, smallpox and yellow fever. Now that's a way of stating something that is already reasonably familiar, but I think perhaps the best way of describing the situation would be by the comparison to the question of having a town free from any large conflagration. A house on fire is a disaster to the owner but it is a danger to the neighbors, and with communicable diseases it is somewhat the same thing. A person who is protected so that he does not have a communicable disease is also a protection to his neighbors, because he no longer is or does not become a source of infection. Now, you can never say that every house in a town has to be fireproofed in order to have no fires there, but you can say that if fireproofing is widely adopted, either by reason of law or by reason of private intelligence, the chance of a big conflagration is very small. Now, the analogy is fairly good. We could get up to a certain point of the population protected, and the chances of what one would call an epidemic, or conflagration—it is much the same thing—are greatly reduced; so much reduced that there are occasions when the contact simply doesn't take place, and there is a whole community freed from what otherwise might be a serious epidemic.

Now, the two other possibilities: One is that this technique of mass experiment with controls that are simultaneous, secret, impartial, and scientific, will be adopted for the study of and the control of other diseases; and I would like to think that sometime we will be able to control what appeals to me as the urchin among the diseases—namely, the common cold, in a somewhat similar set of studies.

A third possibility is that the success of this entire enterprise, which was due to a reasonable number of well-trained doctors and medical scientists, will throw attention back where certainly attention is needed, and that is in the quality of our medical education. Medical education in this country at the present time is languishing. Personally I think the medical-school deans ought to put the medical schools on the "dangerous list," which is hospital slang, as a warning from those who are concerned—rather, a warning from those who are responsible to those who are deeply concerned. The American public is deeply concerned, and I would want to serve a warning to them that they must support medical education better than it now is.

Now, probabilities—and very briefly: There is an important probability that improvement will be made in this vaccine. Possibly other vaccines will be found. This was a semi-prediction that I made as of last week. It is already vindicated very considerably by what Dr. Salk has told me, namely, that since the 1954 trials and this mass experiment, the vaccine has already been improved, and improved substantially. It may continue to be improved—and especially the methods of administration. And I think, among the certainties, the biggest certainty is that we face now as a nation—and the laymen face it as well as the doctors—a desperate test. And the test is, are we good enough to receive this boon?—in the sense: Will we refrain from bootlegging, cheating, quarreling, in order to get a little snack of the vaccine for ourselves or our own? That's a very serious certainty—that there may be trouble in that quarter.

MURROW: I think we might come back to the matter of bootlegging in a few minutes. Dr. Salk, you have been talking with medical experts all day. Would you mind a few simple laymen's questions?

SALK: With great relief.

MURROW: What about the supply: how many children will be inoculated before the polio season arrives?

DR. SALK: Well, I can't be sure of that, Mr. Murrow, but I can report one thing that we did discuss today. I have recommended, on the basis of our new findings, that two rather than three doses of vaccine be administered. This is not cheating. On the contrary, this will make the supply go further, but the real objective is to make immunity last longer. On the present basis, from the figures that I have read in the newspapers, whatever was estimated—I believe somewhere in the vicinity of twenty million—the possibility now is that thirty million could be inoculated. But that is only a small part of the total requirement, and one is tempted to wonder, and to think about the possibility of giving everyone some hamburger, instead of sirloin steak to a few, and this is a problem with which we are seriously concerned. How can we make that which is available go farthest, in order to prevent the kind of conflagration that Dr. Gregg refers to. We must look on this not only as an individual disease but as a community disease. This has occupied our very serious attention.

MURROW: Have you reached the point yet of considering booster shots and how often they may be necessary?

DR. SALK: Yes, I think we have a formula now that seems rather clear and well substantiated experimentally: that two doses of vaccine given at an interval of two to four weeks—that is to say, one now, and the second one two to four weeks from now, with the booster dose to be given before the next polio season but not earlier than seven months from now. It takes that long for the maturation of the hyperreactive mechanism to make the booster a booster.

MURROW: What about the priorities? Who should determine who gets what in this limited-supply situation?

DR. SALK: Well, I think it is unfair, really, to let everyone decide for himself who gets what. It would be as if everyone on your show decided what he wanted to do if and when he wanted to do it. It seems to me there ought to be some central intelligence that could indicate, at least suggest, what should be done—if not specify. The way in which one would approach this problem from an intelligent viewpoint, to solve the problem, would be to begin at the peak of the epidemic curve or the age incidence. For example, we know that the disease is of low frequency in the youngest ages, then it reaches a peak, and then it begins to descend. If one would see that vaccine was administered to the children who are the greatest risks, as more becomes available, to descend both limbs of the curve, I think we would then use the available supply to its greatest advantage until the supply and the demand can meet each other.

MURROW: What is the cost likely to be on what might be called the open market?

DR. FRANCIS: Again I must refer to what I read in the newspapers and what I hear on the radio. The information that I have is indirect in that way. I have learned two dollars is what the cost of one cc. of vaccine is expected to be. It is likely to be less.

MURROW: What about the youngsters who may be allergic to such things as penicillin? Is there any danger there in inoculating them?

DR. FRANCIS: We have discussed this earlier today, and the indications are there are no contraindications to the use of the vaccine —and I want to make that general statement for those who have written to me and who are concerned as to whether or not a child with a kidney infection or some other consideration should not be inoculated. We have not been able to ascertain the existence of any contraindications. The child with allergies takes the vaccine just as well as the one without, and children who are allergic to penicillin. We have failed to substantiate any reaction in penicillin-sensitive individuals.

MURROW: Dr. Francis, in passing, a question about that placebo: Have the children who have received it, have the parents been notified, and will they subsequently get the vaccine?

DR. FRANCIS: All those records have been sent out to health departments of each area and should be in their hands at the present time. We started to mail them out last Friday with a decoding, so that each child that had placebo or vaccine in those areas could be specifically identified. May I say something at the present time? You are talking about the effectiveness. This may be a little off your schedule.

MURROW: Nothing is off our schedule.

DR. FRANCIS: I think there is quite a difference between this and the problem of smallpox. In other words, smallpox is a disease that is of a nature that if a susceptible person is exposed, the chances are very very high he will get the disease. In other words, the contagion, let's say, is very high: what we call the disease index is very high. In poliomyelitis, if you take a year such as 1952, which was the highest year on record, it was only about forty-two cases of paralytic poliomyelitis per 100,000 and seventeen per cent of those occurred in this age period. Well, it means in the end that you practically have to vaccinate some 20,000 children to prevent a case of poliomyelitis. Therefore, it is much more difficult to measure one hundred per cent effectiveness than it would be in a case of smallpox. Furthermore, under those conditions, the probability that a child would get paralytic poliomyelitis is much less than it would be if he had been exposed to an active case of smallpox and were unvaccinated, so I think the parallels are not entirely as easy as they seem.

MURROW: Is there in prospect, any method, of discovering whether a child is already immune to polio so he or she need not be vaccinated?

DR. SALK: We carried on some studies of that kind in Pittsburgh and we have recently done a study in 15,000 children, utilizing a drop of blood from the finger. We worked out what you might call a micro test. The intention was to develop something similar to the test that's used for susceptibility to diphtheria, the Schick test. We have not been able to utilize the skin test as yet. We find that such a test is really not useful or necessary. By such a survey not more than ten per cent of the children would be excluded from vaccination.

MURROW: I see.

DR. SALK: So it makes such a test unnecessary. We are using this test, however, for follow-up purposes and to simplify our research problem. But from the practical viewpoint it would be easier to vaccinate. In keeping with this, Mr. Murrow, let me point out that because of the fact that three doses of vaccine were given so close together last year, we do not consider that the children who had three doses have received a booster inoculation. We are therefore proposing, which is contrary to what has been announced to the press up to the present, that all children who were vaccinated last year will receive a dose this year which can truly be considered a booster dose.

MURROW: Dr. Salk, I remember when we were in your laboratory several months ago. You had samples there of all the vaccines sent out by the pharmaceutical houses and you checked them for potency, etc.

DR. SALK: Yes.

MURROW: Who is going to do that now. Who's going to be sure that it meets the proper requirements?

DR. SALK: The manufacturers test potency. The National Institutes of Health, I believe, do spot checks occasionally. We ourselves have tested a large proportion of the batches of vaccine that are going to be used in the nine million children that the Foundation is going to inoculate. We will follow this through and be sure that the standards are going to be set and are going to be maintained, but the National Institutes of Health have the responsibility, ultimately, for assuring potency.

MURROW: Who owns the patent on this vaccine?

DR. SALK: Well, the people, I would say. There is no patent. Could you patent the sun?

MURROW: Well, I would like to put this question to all three of you gentlemen. It seems to me that we are a "have" nation, and we are not accustomed to be rationed; and I go back now to something that Dr. Gregg said earlier about the possibilities of a mad scramble, a black market. What is to be done about it? Dr. Gregg?

DR. GREGG: I should be rather inclined to think, from experience, including perhaps the difficulties we had with alcohol, that unless the people understand the issues pretty clearly there will not be support enough to make any pure legal procedures effective, but there is a difference there too. Namely, here is something in which safety is involved, children are involved. And the drive—to be very sure that your child or grandchild is protected, is a very powerful drive. I would, myself, prefer to see this under some paragovernmental or semigovernmental control, with the withdrawal of licenses—the teeth that it puts in any such board or group.

MURROW: Dr. Francis?

DR. FRANCIS: You recall when penicillin was first available, that it had to be put under very strict control, and there was a body organized through the National Research Council who really decided its distribution. Well, I think the amount of vaccine that may be available this year is much larger than was available—than was true of penicillin. But it seems to me that the major thing is the same type of discipline from the American public that they have displayed in this study, and that I would hope and expect that they would be reasonable in their understanding that this was a limited product at the present time and that everybody couldn't get it—and they would, as Dr. Gregg said, avoid the bootlegging and the personal demands, which would make it available to the more susceptible children.

MURROW: Dr. Salk?

DR. SALK: Well, Dr. Francis and Dr. Gregg have both expressed points of view that are some distance apart, and I somehow would feel a little more certain if I knew that the distribution curve of the disease, agewise, was being followed as far as distribution of vaccine is concerned.

MURROW: Well, gentlemen, you all stand on something of a summit of achievement here. Where do you think preventive medicine should go next: mental disease, cancer, heart?

DR. FRANCIS: I have always had a great inclination in the field of mental disease, because I think it is one of the areas in which we need to understand who are the susceptibles—just as talk of who are the susceptibles in poliomyelitis is needed, and what are the factors that can help control it. I do not believe that mental disease is basically separated from the normal biochemistry or physiology of the body, and it can't be handled in a vacuum. It seems to me there is a great area there in which continued investigation can be carried out to great advantage. This is not precluding the fact that there are still plenty of other diseases that need a good deal of attention.

MURROW: Dr. Salk, where do you think we should go?

DR. SALK: Well, I think that where we can go is to apply the methodology that has been utilized in these investigations to any other problem that needs solving. I would agree with Dr. Francis: that the area of mental disease is one of the largest by far, and particularly desperately in need of quantitative measures that tell us precisely what we are dealing with, so that one can measure the dynamics of the process as we have tried to measure the dynamics or determine the dynamics of the infectious diseases. Rather than continue to remain in purely a descriptive qualitative area, it would be splendid to apply quantitative terms. We have many analogies between immune phenomona and phenomena that are associated with mental disturbances. Perhaps one can bridge the gap between the two.

MURROW: Dr. Gregg?

DR. GREGG: I agree with Dr. Francis, it is probably the mental and emotional diseases that need the attention the most. But I would feel that one should be very candid in admitting—and in foreseeing—the fact that that may be the area which is one of the hardest ones in which to make progress, because what is technically or sometimes known as "the leads" are not so numerous. But determination to do that will make the difference.

MURROW: Well, thank you very much indeed, gentlemen, for sitting here on the anniversary of Franklin D. Roosevelt's death and discussing with us the achievements that have been made in the whole area of polio. I think it would be appropriate to use a phrase that Carl Sandburg likes very much and say that "we are very much beholden to you." Thank you very much. Good night, and good luck.

TEXAS LAND SCANDAL—
"THE POWER OF THE PRESS"

MAY 3, 1955

EDWARD R. MURROW: That's a printing press—a small one in Cuero, Texas—prints 3,800 papers every afternoon. That's its editor, Ken Towery, veteran of Corregidor and three Japanese prison camps—disabled. Never worked full time as a newsman until last year; last November, started running a series of controversial articles on some Texas land scandals. His friends told him to stay away from it, that he would end up with "rich enemies and poor friends." He stayed with it. This is a report on what happened to Editor Towery and The Cuero Record since then.

MURROW: This is a report on a little newspaper and a big scandal. The people of Texas voted one hundred million dollars to be used as loans for Texas veterans who wanted to buy a piece of Texas soil. They were required to pay five per cent of the purchase price. The state now charges that certain corporations and individuals employed fraud, deceit, and misrepresentation, in order to get veterans to sign up for the land. That land was then reassessed in order to increase its book value, and certain other manipulations occurred so that the promoters made huge profits. On the other hand, many of the transactions were legal and legitimate. We sent reporter Ed Scott and cameraman Leo Rossi down to Texas to try to find out whether the generosity of Texas voters had been abused, and whether or not the veterans of that great state—some of them, at least—had been victimized.

ED SCOTT: Ed, this is Cuero, Texas—population, eight thousand. It is also the county seat for De Witt County, where there have been 180 indictments. Where this veterans land scandal will end, no man can say, but the story broke here. It all started in the tiny office of The Cuero Record, when its managing editor began hearing stories—then he began writing them. In a few minutes we will be taking you to some of the pretrial hearings. But first, meet Editor Ken Towery.

KEN TOWERY: I guess a newspaperman's supposed to have a lot of different ears for different people, but I'd heard a few rumors of a little something that might possibly be irregularities, we might say. But at the time, I had no idea that it was anything on the scale that it was, and while I was checking, actually some one of the first places I went to check on it was right here in our own pressroom. We had some boys here that I thought I would put out the feelers with, and I had heard it was mostly with the Negro veterans, and I contacted the Negro veterans here that work in the plant, and—and asked them to kind of look out for me and keep me posted on it. And a few weeks later, well, I found out that actually our county attorney had been checking on it for quite a while, and so whenever he had called—he had called in some state authorities by then, and we kind of teamed forces, you might say. In other words, I went over and talked to him, and they asked me how much I knew, and I told them, and they said, well, it was much larger than I had suspected; because at the time I thought it was possibly a local situation wherein some of the boys had been maybe rooked out of their rights to purchase land, or just paid off, say, fifty dollars for their signature on a piece of paper. But I had no idea then that it went as high as it did.

MURROW: This is Wiley Cheatham, the county attorney, who worked with Editor Towery and began the official investigations.

WILEY CHEATHAM: The veteran says that they come to him and, for example, want to borrow his discharge for a couple of weeks and offer him fifty dollars if they can use his discharge. And of course, most of these veterans are colored boys or Latin-American boys that don't have any money, and never had any money, and when somebody offers them fifty dollars, or three hundred dollars, for the use of his discharge and tells him everything's going to be all right—and they are prominent people that do it—and—and they have every reason to believe what they are being told, why, they—I don't think they felt that they were doing anything wrong at all. As far as the promoters, I've heard lots of people say, well, they're high-class people—that they ought not to be treated like what we commonly refer to as common criminals. But I'd like to say, as far as I'm concerned, they're—they're much worse than a common criminal, because for the most part they are highly educated, intelligent men, and financially responsible. They wouldn't have to do any of these unlawful practices to make a living. I just hope that the people will demand that the investigation be carried out to the fullest—that no one be whitewashed; and demand that it be cleaned up, so that we can again hold our heads up, down here in Texas. I think it's a—it's a terrible disgrace to De Witt County and other counties involved, and to the state as a whole.

MURROW: It started in Cuero; but before long many counties were involved, and Senator Jimmy Phillips investigated at the state level. In his office at Austin, he talks about some of the scandals.

SENATOR PHILLIPS: A gentleman who lived on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico appears in this deal, and he purchased, in 1951, two sections of land in west Texas for twenty dollars an acre—approximately 1,300 acres of land. He sold that land to the state less than two years later for two hundred dollars an acre. He purchased, according to the revenue stamps in the courthouse, indicated he paid $27,600 for the land. The state paid, in fifty-four checks for fifty-four veterans, $266,778, leaving a gross of $249,178, and that only took the gentleman sixty days to do. Stranger than that is the situation where one individual, operating under assumed names—and in Texas we have an assumed-name statute where you can do business there as John Smith if your name is Joe Blow—this individual ran three deals through the Veterans Land Board under an assumed name; and he, in these deals, appeared as the seller, the purchaser, the title examiner, and the closing attorney. Now, if you can top that on any operation of any state program, I have never heard of it. And strangest thing of all, we have the Veterans Land Board which consists of the attorney general, the governor of Texas, and the land commissioner, as the members of the Veterans Land Board. Those three members, under the statutes in Texas, are equally responsible for the administration of the Veterans Land Board and for the sales to veterans—purchase from sellers for sales to veterans. And now, we have the situation where, as attorney general, he is participating in every grand jury room in the state of Texas that is investigating the operations of the Veterans Land Board, of which he is a member. And you have the unusual situation where the investigated, or the one subject to investigation, is doing the investigating.

[HEADLINES: The Cuero Record: GILES REFUSES COMMENT.]

[The American-Statesman: BASCOM GILES PLACED UNDER ARREST ON INDICTMENT OF THEFT CONSPIRACY.]

MURROW: Governor Allen Shivers is one of the three members of the Veterans Land Board. While Reporter Scott was in Austin, he asked for an interview, but Governor Shivers was unavailable. Bascom Giles, another member of the Land Board until his resignation last January, had been land commissioner of the state of Texas for eight terms. On March fifth, he was indicted for conspiracy to commit theft. There have been eight charges since then. He is out on bond awaiting trial. In addition to Giles, there are 269 indictments in seven counties, and the criminal cases are pending, but some of the pretrial hearings in the civil cases have already begun. Several of the veterans were subpoenaed to appear at this tomato shed. Prosecutor Wiley Cheatham advised them that it was not to their best interest to go out and look at the land which they had never seen. Finally, hearings were held last week in the Yoakum City Hall—a town adjacent to Cuero. This is Sheriff Cutter Dietz, who also worked on the case, and who urged the veterans not to go out to their land. The lawyers for the defendants—the land promoters—sit at the left of the table.

THOMAS [DEFENSE LAWYER]: I say, just assume that you're right and that the veterans didn't know anything at all about the land that they're buying. Do you think its in their best interest that they not find out anything about it before they give it up?

SHERIFF CUTTER DIETZ: They have already given the thing up.

THOMAS: Well, that's another legal conclusion. Isn't it, Mr. Dietz?

DIETZ: My personal opinion. Yes sir.

THOMAS: That's your personal opinion. Of course, the law questions will have to be decided by the judge. I'm just asking you—assuming that they haven't—

DIETZ: Let's use common sense.

THOMAS: All right, sir. Let's use common sense.

DIETZ: Do you know that Mr. Kirkendahl did not want the land in the first place?

THOMAS: Well—

DIETZ: He wanted something for nothing, and he was promised that by the land promoters.

THOMAS: Well, we will just assume that that's true. We will just assume that he was told that he was going to be given a piece of land, but the facts are that instead of being given to him, that the state of Texas was selling it to him. Now, before he makes up his mind that he's going to give up that property, do you know of any reason why he shouldn't have the benefit of seeing that land and seeing whether he got his money's worth?

DIETZ: No. No.

THOMAS: All right, sir. And you know that that was the purpose of the trip to Crystal City, do you not?

DIETZ: What do you think?

THOMAS: I know. Have you seen the land?

DIETZ: No sir.

THOMAS: Do you know what the land's worth?

DIETZ: I have heard enough about it.

THOMAS: Well, what have you heard about it, Mr. Dietz—about the land?

DIETZ: A good billygoat couldn't make a living off of it.

THOMAS: Uh-huh. But you don't really honestly know what kind of land Walter Kirkendahl has down there in the Zavala County, do you?

DIETZ: That's right.

THOMAS: And if I told you that it was land that was very productive land and was well worth the money, you wouldn't believe that, would you?

DIETZ: I'm afraid I wouldn't, friend.

STATE ATTORNEY: Does it look like perhaps that the state of Texas or somebody has been defrauded?

DIETZ: Very much so. Yes sir.

STATE ATTORNEY: Now, your interest is as a law-inforcement officer, trying to protect the peace and to protect the rights of the state of Texas. Is that correct?

DIETZ: That's right.

STATE ATTORNEY: When you found out they were taking those poor boys, most of whom have no education whatsoever, and those that do have education—very limited education—and for a paltry ten, or twelve, or fourteen dollars, they had taken away from them what veterans' rights were supposed to be given to them, and then herded into a warehouse to have their depositions taken in the very spot where they were defrauded from, you thought there might be something wrong, didn't you?

DIETZ: That's right. Well, I thought it was crooked, to be honestly frank with you.

STATE ATTORNEY: Well, I think you are to be congratulated, and I thank you very much.

MURROW: The sheriff and Cheatham told the veterans that they had to answer the subpoenas to the City Hall, and they did, and this was the pretrial hearings. Next witness, Sylvester Webb. He owns land he has never seen.

LOONEY [DEFENSE LAWYER]: . . . when you first heard about it?

SYLVESTER WEBB: When I first heard about it he was there talking to me.

LOONEY: There were two men—a white man and a colored.

WEBB: A colored fellow. He give me a paper. I don't even remember what I read on that. I just slyly looked over it and he gave me a pencil.

LOONEY: Well now, he asked you if you were a veteran—you said yes?

WEBB: Uh-huh.

LOONEY: And if you had a honorable discharge—you said yes. He asked you if you wanted to sign up for some of that veterans' land, and—and what did you say?

WEBB: Well, I looked at the paper. He gave me a paper—some kind of sheet, and I looked at it.

LOONEY: Yes . . .

WEBB: But I—I just slyly looked over some words. I don't hardly remember what was on it.

LOONEY: Let's see, now. He handed you these papers, and you glanced at it?

WEBB: Yes.

LOONEY: And—well, did—did you ask him what that was all about —how you went about getting this land?

WEBB: I asked him: Now I ain't buying no land now—what you got to do about this? Do you have to buy the land? He said, no.

LOONEY: He said no. Said—said—said that they had—did he say that they had a—plan worked out, where no money would have to come out of your pocket? Is that about it?

WEBB: Yes.

LOONEY: It wouldn't—it wouldn't have to be a cent out of your pocket?

WEBB: . . . If I want to do it.

LOONEY: For three years there wouldn't have to be a cent?

WEBB: That's right.

LOONEY: Now—now tell me that again?

WEBB: He said, for three years you don't have to pay. For three years you lease the land and you get some kind of—you get some money or something out of the land, but after three years—where the land belong to you.

LOONEY: Now, he said, after three years that— Did he say something like this: that after three years you could sell the land if you wanted to, that it belonged to you, and you could do with it what you wanted to, after three years—after the lease was over?

WEBB: Yes.

LOONEY: Now, tell me that again.

WEBB: He said, after three years the land would be yours. You could sell it or either—lease it.

LOONEY: Or lease it again. Is that correct?

WEBB: Yes.

LOONEY: And—and leasing—is that—is that the same as renting?

WEBB: I don't understand that—no sir, I don't think so. I beg your pardon. I don't think so.

LOONEY: But you knew it was a lease?

WEBB: Yes.

LOONEY: You said a lease?

WEBB: Yes.

LOONEY: Defendant Winter Garden Exhibit Twenty-two—Webb. [Reads]: "Veterans Land Board of the state of Texas, Austin, Texas. Affidavit of possession. I, the undersigned, veteran purchaser of the land fully described in deed from Winter Garden Development Company to Veterans Land Board of the state of Texas have been given and have taken possession of said land. There is no one in possession claiming adversely to me." I'll read that last line again. "There is no one in possession claiming adversely to me." Sylvester, you look at that paper there. Take a look at it.

WEBB: I tell you I ain't much of a reader.

LOONEY: You read "Sylvester Webb," up there at the top.

WEBB: Yes, I can read "Sylvester Webb."

LOONEY: Can you read what's right underneath that line?

WEBB: What is that?

LOONEY: What's that?

WEBB: I don't know what that word is.

LOONEY: That's my writing—it's pretty bad. Is this the paper that you signed on Front Street, back in 1952? You signed up just one paper that day, I suppose?

WEBB: Yes.

LOONEY: Is that correct? You wanted to do what the other boys were doing?

WEBB: Well, I did saw they sign up. I did, too, so that's as far as I can remember, you know.

LOONEY: And if—if you signed up like the other boys were doing and—and got you some veterans' land, well, that was all right with you. Wasn't it?

WEBB: Why, I—probably so.

LOONEY: You wouldn't be ad—You wouldn't feel bad if you got the land?

WEBB: No, I wouldn't feel bad.

THOMAS: Now, the truth of the matter is, Sylvester, that you didn't—you didn't go into all details. You didn't even read those contracts. Did you?

WEBB: I sure didn't.

THOMAS: You figured it was all right and you were satisfied?

WEBB: That's right.

THOMAS: You had a chance if you wanted to—you had a chance to go and read those papers. Didn't you?

WEBB: Sure, but I—

THOMAS: You didn't tell him—you don't think that Shorty Robinson—that's a member of your own race, a man that you've known for years and years and years around here—would refuse to let you take those papers and have them read, or read them yourself if you'd ask him to? You don't think Shorty would do you that way. Do you?

WEBB: Shorty could have done that way. All he wanted was money, too.

THOMAS: Well, I understand that—he wanted money. You know, Shorty was working for wages, just like you work for wages. You understand that?

WEBB: Sure.

THOMAS: But you didn't ask Shorty—you didn't say: "Shorty, I want to take these papers off here and study them a little bit." Did you?

WEBB: No.

THOMAS: If you had wanted to you'd ask him—wouldn't you?

WEBB: Shorty didn't have no papers when I seen him.

THOMAS: Well, did you ask the other man?

WEBB: . . . No . . .

THOMAS: You were satisfied—and you were satisfied, weren't you, Sylvester, up until all this trouble came up about it? You were satisfied, weren't you?

WEBB: Yeah. I wasn't worried.

THOMAS: You wasn't worried until—and you hadn't gone out to anybody and—and tried to stir up any trouble about this. Had you?

WEBB: No. No.

THOMAS: You were just going along. Now, Sylvester, you understand down-payments, don't you?

WEBB: Yes.

THOMAS: You purchased—do you own a car?

WEBB: No sir.

THOMAS: Did you ever purchase anything on the installment plan?

WEBB: No, I haven't, but my wife has. [LAUGHTER.] But I don't question that, but I don't owe nobody.

THOMAS: They're pretty bad about it, aren't they? You understand that if you pay so much on the principal, you don't owe as much?

WEBB: That's right. That's right.

THOMAS: So if you owed $7,200 to start with, and you pay $1,200 in round numbers—$1,200—well then, at the end of the year, you'd only owe $6,000. That's right, isn't it?—because you paid $1,200—you owed $7,200, so twelve and—$1,200 and $6,000 will be $7,200. You understand that, don't you? [SYLVESTER LAUGHS.]

MURROW: In the beginning, only Towery wrote these stories, and only The Cuero Record carried them, but now it is a major Texas story in every newspaper. But it was the small press in Cuero that had the power to start it.

SCOTT: This trial, and the tribulations that I am sure you went through, have any influence on your feeling in this particular story?

TOWERY: I don't know—I just believe that when a man takes on a position of trust in government, that he should be completely above reproach, and I know—I know we are all human, and we all have errors, but when a man takes a position of influence in government—In other words, he comes before the people and asks for their support and their help in going into office, and then after he is in there, and goes ahead and violates the confidence that the people have put in him, why, to me, it's—it's pretty bad. It's pretty low, actually. In fact, I—Just like I said before, I can't think of anything that's worse, except maybe some newspaper people that won't tell the truth, of which, unfortunately, we have a few.

In other words, I'm not afraid, actually, of America ever being defeated from without its boundaries near so much as I am being defeated from within, simply because people like—well, the ones that we've got mixed up in it now, and thousands more that haven't been named. I don't say in this particular thing, but other things just like it. When it is brought out, or when it's found out, then people lose so much faith in them, or in the government in general, that they become disgusted, disheartened, and become prey for Communism or any other ism that happens to be—to come along at that particular time.

So I think that, aside from the fact that we are just in here trying to report news stories and show the people what's going on, that underneath it has a real reason for being like that, because of the fact that it possibly will awaken the people to—to, well, become a little more interested in good government, and to see what happens when they are not interested in it. In other words, politicians always come before us and say: "Look at me, I am the best." And we never go in and check on their past or their qualifications, or this or that, and we just take their word for it. Well, I don't know, it's taught me a lot.

MURROW: It taught us something too. Our crew decided to spend another day in his office, just in case something should happen —and it did.

Kenneth Towery is one managing editor who takes all incoming calls. He has to: he is one-third of the entire editorial staff of the Record. Yesterday, May 2, the phone rang on Towery's desk. It was the city desk of The Houston Post calling. They wanted to know if Towery knew he had just won a Pulitzer prize for journalism.

TOWERY: Record office. Who? Yes ma'am. Speaking. Yes. Uh-huh. How are you, Jim? [PAUSE.] Oh, is that right? Oh, get out. You're not joking, are you? Huh? Oh, well, the world of wonders never ceases. I don't hardly believe it, fella. I think you're pulling my leg. [LAUGHS.] Oh, for goodness sake! Oh? Well, you mean, you think I got it? Did I? Oh, for goodness sakes! Well, oh my, just a minute. [LAUGHS.] What's that? I tell you, I'm not satisfied yet and I won't be till there's a couple of more indictments. But —but I mean the investigation is—well, I am so nervous I can hardly talk. But I mean the investigation, I believe, is still—has a little way to go yet, and I don't think—well, let's put it this way: I don't think justice is going to be done unless there's at least two more indictments. I hate to say which ones. I mean, I wouldn't say which ones I thought they ought to be, but down here in this country we got our ideas anyhow. But—oh, shucks, fella. I still think you are—that don't sound right to me. [LAUGHS.] Well, I sure do thank you an awful lot. I really do. Goodness, I don't know. Well, shucks, I still—well, I mean it's just a long story, but I ran up against a brick wall everywhere I went, almost. And then finally, I found out that Cheatham was working on it and had been working on it for many months, and actually, he—he's the one that deserves all the credit, not me. Good gracious! All I did was just kind of go along and do the best I could, I—I do believe that by bringing it out to the public, and—and I mean you boys, too, up there at the Post, and all over the country, are the ones to get the credit for it, because our little old voice down here couldn't have been heard very far if the big papers hadn't picked it up and ran with the ball. Well, I sure do thank you an awful lot for calling. And I hope some day I'll be able to meet you in person and thank you a lot for the call. Okay. Well, bye-bye [SIGHS.]

[EXCITED VOICES IN OFFICE.]

MURROW: As the word about the thousand-dollar Pulitzer award got around, the townspeople came in to congratulate Towery. First there was his partner in the fight, County Attorney Wiley Cheatham.

CHEATHAM: And I hope this is just the start of a great career.

TOWERY: Well, thank you a lot, Wiley. Thank you again, boys.

MURROW: And Sheriff Cutter Dietz.

DIETZ: I am glad you got it, son. You really deserved it.

TOWERY: Well, I don't know, but thank you anyhow. Thank you. Thank you. It's mighty fine, I'll tell you for sure.

VOICES: Congratulations. Congratulations, Ken.

TOWERY: Hello, Larry. Thank you a lot.

MURROW: And Towery's boss, the Record's publisher, Jack Howardton.

HOWARDTON: Well, I am proud of you, boy.

TOWERY: Well, I am proud of you, boss. Well, we made it.

VOICE: Don't go away.
MURROW: Mrs. Ken Towery, the editor's wife.
[LAUGHTER, EXCITED VOICES IN BACKGROUND.]
MRS. TOWERY: I'm shaking. I'm proud of you.
TOWERY: Well, I'm proud of you, gal.

MURROW: Thirty-eight hundred isn't much circulation—not much power as newspapers are generally measured, but courage and power are not always found in the same package. There are newspapers and radio and television networks with much greater circulations and much more potential power than The Cuero Record. The Pulitzer committee merely called attention to courage, perhaps with the hope that it might be contagious. Good night and good luck.

Dear Maff:

Very many thanks for your nice letter about the SEE IT NOW story we did on lung cancer.

We like to follow progress made in matters of this kind, and I shall always be glad to have informative suggestions from you about any piece we can do on the subject of cancer.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

We at the Society are most grateful for the report you gave to the American people on the lung cancer situation as it exists at the present time. We think you have done a real public service and we were delighted to have the matter presented in such a fashion.

We have just appropriated another $500,000 for lung cancer research so that we have now allocated a million dollars to activity in this area. This matches the figure put aside by the tobacco industry itself and I am sure that we will ultimately resolve this question.

I am glad we can count on you for timely reports to the public on developments as they occur.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

M. R. Runyon

WHAT ARE WE DOING ABOUT CANCER?

I. HOW MANY PEOPLE DIE OF CANCER IN THE UNITED STATES?

1. The Number Two Killer of our people is cancer. (1)
2. One out of every seven people who died in 1951 died of cancer. (1)
3. 22,000,000 people now alive will die of cancer unless new treatments, cures or preventive measures are found. (2) (16)
4. 219,239 persons died of cancer in 1951 in the United States, or one out of every seven deaths. (1)
5. Almost 2½ times as many people died of cancer during World War II as were killed in action in the Armed Forces. (3)
6. About 601 people died of cancer in the U.S. per day in 1951, which means that over a period of 36 days, cancer killed 21,636 people, or more than the 21,471 American dead in Korea in 28 months of war. (8)

II. WHAT WAS THE MILITARY MANPOWER LOSS DURING WORLD WAR II FROM CANCER?

1. Of approximately 5,000,000 men between the ages 18 to 37 rejected for medical reasons during the last war, 32,200 were rejected for cancer and other neoplasms. (4)
   a. This would have been sufficient to man at least two Army Infantry Divisions of World War II strength. (14,477 men to each division). (5)
2. Out of 245,358 registrants for military service examined between July 1950 and June 1951, 6,064 were rejected for cancer and other neoplasms. (10)

November 1952

III. WHAT IS THE CIVILIAN ECONOMIC LOSS FROM CANCER AND WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO WARTIME PRODUCTIVITY?

1. 113,000 man-years are lost each year in industry due to cancer disabilities. (7)

2. About $367,589,000 were lost in 1951 in productivity due to lost man-years. (6)(7)

   This would purchase:

   4,900,000 Garand rifles at $75 each or
   2,009 pursuit planes at $183,000 or 1,838 medium tanks at $200,000 or 4.9 airborne divisions' equipment at about $75,000,000.

IV. HOW MANY PEOPLE ARE SUFFERING FROM CANCER IN THE UNITED STATES?

1. At least 700,000 people are estimated presently under treatment for cancer. (9)

   a. About 525,000 new cases of cancer are diagnosed each year. (9)

2. About one out of every five people now alive in the United States will have cancer at some time in his life unless new preventive measures are found. If skin and lip cancers are counted (which are not usually fatal), the ratio is one out of four. (9)

V. HOW MANY VETERANS WILL BE VICTIMS OF CANCER?

1. On the basis that 1 out of 5 Americans now living will have cancer unless new preventive measures are found (9), and that in 1951 there was a total of 18,813,000 living veterans of all wars (15,200,000 were veterans of World War II) (11), about 3.76 million veterans will be hospitalized or will be entitled to hospitalization for cancer.

2. They will be in the hospital for an average of 1 year apiece, and each case will cost the taxpayer $3,000 (12), or a total of about $11.29 billion dollars.

VI. WHAT IS BEING DONE TO HELP CANCER SUFFERERS IN THE UNITED STATES?

1. There are only 18 special cancer hospitals in the United States registered by the American Medical Association for 1951, (with only 10 approved in 1952 by the American College of Surgeons (14) with a listed bed capacity of 2,118. (13) There is a new cancer hospital in Chicago whose bed capacity is not indicated. There are also 3 related institutions (such as nursing homes and infirmaries, which give certain medical and nursing care), with approximately 271 beds listed. (13)

   a. In contrast with this, 104,773 special beds are available for tuberculosis patients; (15) tuberculosis killed an estimated 29,492 people in 1951, while cancer killed 219,239. (1)

2. We have only 138 cancer detection centers approved by the American College of Surgeons, (for people with no apparent symptoms), in the United States (14); or less than 1 detection center to every 1 million people. (16)

3. We have only 639 approved cancer treatment and diagnostic clinics in the United States, of which 135 are cancer diagnostic (only) clinics. (14)

   a. There is need of one cancer diagnostic and treatment clinic for every 100,000 population, one within a radius of 30 to 50 miles from each patient. (17)

   b. On this basis, there is need of 1,550 cancer diagnostic and treatment clinics in the U.S., or a deficiency of 911 such clinics. (14)(16)

VII. HOW MUCH MONEY IS AVAILABLE FOR RESEARCH TO FIND NEW TREATMENTS AND CURES FOR CANCER FROM THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT & LEADING VOLUNTARY AGENCIES?

1. About $18,621,655 divided as follows: (Appendix I)

   a. Government Funds:

   The National Cancer Institute, USPHS, has appropriations for cancer research for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1952, of about $10,342,000. (This includes $4,797,000 for intramural research, $4,920,000 for project grants-in-aid to colleges and hospitals throughout the U.S., and $625,000 for research fellowships - see APPENDIX I.)

   The Atomic Energy Commission has appropriations of about $2,250,000 for the same period. (19) The Veterans Administration's contractual Research Program for 1952 provides no funds for cancer research. (29) This is a total of $12,592,000.

b. Non-Government Funds:

The American Cancer Society, a voluntary agency, allocated in 1952 approximately $4,125,000 for cancer research. (28) The Damon Runyon Memorial Fund allocated approximately $1,374,759 for the same period. (24) The Jane Coffin Childs Memorial Fund allocated in 1952 approximately $529,896 for cancer research. (28) These three agencies (which are the major national non-governmental agencies giving grants-in-aid for cancer research) have allocated a total of about $6,029,655 this year towards cancer research. (See APPENDIX I).

2. This means that we are spending about $85 per cancer death annually, or $26.60 per known case; but only about $.85 per person who will die from cancer unless new treatments, cures or preventive measures are found.

a. In contrast, the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis allocated $2,581,824 for research in 1951 (20) or about $1,954 per death.

b. In contrast, it is estimated that The Department of Agriculture in fiscal 1952 will spend about $32,701,700 for the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease. (21)

VIII. DO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES WANT MORE DONE ABOUT CANCER RESEARCH?

1. Yes. In a nationwide poll, 82% of the people questioned said they believed that $200,000,000 should be spent by the Government for cancer research. (22)

IX. HOW MUCH MONEY HAS THE AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY RAISED FOR EDUCATION AND SERVICE TO CANCER PATIENTS, AND FOR LAY AND PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION IN THIS FIELD, EXCLUDING RESEARCH?

1. Out of the total $15,100,000 raised, The American Cancer Society and all its state and local divisions allocated about $11,174,000 for this purpose in 1951, over and above the amount raised for research. (23)
   a. This is in contrast with $832,862 raised nationally by the Society in 1944, and $372,057.17 in 1943 when no funds were allocated to research. (23)

X. HOW MUCH IS THE GOVERNMENT SPENDING FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CANCER CLINICS AND SERVICES?

1. The National Cancer Institute, U. S. Public Health Service, has about $3,050,000 for the year ending June 30, 1953, for grants-in-aid to States for establishment of clinics and services to cancer patients, and $2,225,000 for teaching grants and $500,000 for trainees, to medical schools. (18)

2. In contrast to the $3,050,000 for the establishment of clinics and services by the National Cancer Institute, Congress made available to the U.S. Public Health Service alone for grants-in-aid to states to establish clinics and services: $8,104,000 for control of venereal diseases, and $5,307,800 for tuberculosis control. (25)

   a. Only 7,074 deaths were attributed to the major venereal disease (syphilis) in 1951 and 29,492 deaths to tuberculosis; but cancer killed 219,239 people in the same year. (1)

XI. HOW DOES WHAT WE SPEND ON CANCER RESEARCH COMPARE WITH WHAT WE SPEND ON OTHER THINGS?

1. In contrast with the total of about $18,621,655 which is available from major public and private sources, for cancer research:

   a. The people of the United States spent approximately: (26)

      1. $7,000,000 for dog and pet medicaments in 1951.
      2. $17,440,000 for nail polish and enamel.
      3. $23,500,000 for playing cards.

XII. HOW DO DEATHS FROM CANCER COMPARE WITH DEATHS FROM OTHER DISEASES?

1. The Number Two Killer of the United States is Cancer. Only cardiovascular-renal diseases cause more deaths. (27)

   a. More than 7 times as many people died of cancer as of tuberculosis in 1951. (27)

b. Nearly 166 times as many people died of cancer in 1951 as died of infantile paralysis in the same year. (27)

XIII. IS CANCER PRIMARILY A DISEASE OF OLD AGE?

1. No. Of 211,090 deaths in 1950 from cancer and other malignant tumors (latest breakdown available): (1)

a. 106,015 or over half, were under 65 years old.

b. 23,647 or about 11% were under 45 years old.

c. 5,466 or about 2.5% were under 25 years old.

XIV. WHAT ARE THE LEADS IN THE FIELD OF CANCER RESEARCH?

1. There are leads in cancer research in many directions, including:

a. Uses of radioactive materials, both as methods of treatment and as research tools.

b. Use of nitrogen mustards in the treatment of leukemia and Hodgkins disease.

c. Antibiotic substances and chemical compounds which affect cancer tissue.

d. Use of hormones, including ACTH and Cortisone in leukemia, lymphosarcoma and other types of cancer; also use of estrogens and androgens in the treatment of cancer of the breast, and estrogens in cancer of the prostate gland.

e. Studies in nutrition.

f. Improved methods of surgery, including removal of adrenal glands for advanced breast and prostate cancer when cortisone is used as a substitute for the activity of the adrenal gland. (See published works of Dr. Charles Huggins of Univ. of Chicago.)

g. New methods in the use of X-ray.

h. New and refined methods of diagnosis.

i. Studies of the chemical life processes of the normal and cancer cell.

j. Research in use of viruses against cancer.

XV. WHAT ARE THE NEEDS IN THE FIGHT AGAINST CANCER?

1. More funds for research, training and education in cancer are needed for the leading voluntary agencies interested in this disease and for the National Cancer Institute of the U.S. Public Health Service.

2. New treatments and cures must be found to aid the estimated 700,000 people presently under treatment for cancer and the estimated 22,000,000 people now alive who will die of cancer unless these new treatments, cures or preventive measures are found.

Q. I just heard about somebody who predicted a cure for cancer within ten years. Is this justified?

A. The statement is misleading. We are already curing 25 per cent of all patients with cancer and we probably could cure 50 per cent of them if the best existing methods were adequately employed.

Q. Why aren't we doing as well as we could do?

A. Because laymen and physicians are inadequately informed.

Q. What is being done to achieve the best rates of cure?

A. A very substantial program of education for both laymen and physicians is presently under way. It is designed to bring every bit of available knowledge to the aid of the patient with cancer.

Q. But what about the other 50 per cent of patients, whose cancer is too advanced or diagnosed too late to permit cure by already available procedures?

A. Whereas we cannot cure these patients today, we can alleviate the symptoms of many very substantially by chemical and x-ray treatments which have been developed in the last few years.

Q. Is any progress being made? What are the chances of actually curing, rather than just helping, the other 50 per cent?

A. The chances are excellent, but it is unlikely that any single drug will cure all types of cancer.

Q. How many different types are there?

A. There are many, but most cancer falls into a small number of groups. The members of each group may well turn out to be susceptible to control, or perhaps cure, by the same or related chemicals.

Q. I am still not certain from your statement that progress has been made.

A. There has been enormous progress. Five years ago we had no means other than surgery or x-rays for curing any kind of cancer. Today we have a variety of drugs which will cure cancer in animals, though none are curative in man. Most important, we now have, for the first time, an understanding of certain basic chemical principles of cancer control by medical means. These new principles are almost certain to give us, in the next few years, means of curing one or more types of human cancer. Not only have these principles been established, but we have, for the first time for cancer, laboratory methods like those which eliminated the infectious disorders such as pneumonia and tuberculosis by new drugs. This combination of new knowledge and new techniques is certain to yield new means of cancer restraint and cure. Just when--whether in months or years--no one can say. For what types of cancer, it is impossible to predict.

Q. Will we ever be able to prevent cancer entirely?

A. We are preventing some today. It is wholly possible that if promising studies now under way are continued, we can prevent more.

Q. How will this be done?

A. By the further development through research of means for defining and eliminating certain abnormalities of the body's chemistry which, we believe, are the cause of cancer.

Q. Then both cure and cause of cancer may be discovered in ten years?

A. Possibly; but only if the research presently under way is continued.

Q. How can I help to see that this is done.

A. By giving to the cancer organizations and by insisting that Federal aid for cancer research in private institutions be continued and increased.

Suggested Murrow Close

You have heard a report on the unfinished business of medical research. There was about twenty-six million dollars available last year from all sources, government, public, private — to push forward the fight on these three vital disease fronts. About 27½ [redacted] million dollars. The American people spent one billion 312 million dollars on [redacted] cosmetics alone ~~last year~~ during 1951...

27½ [redacted] million dollars will buy 8 jet bombers (B-47 type) for the Air Force.

We need these bombers. But we think the American people want some heavy bombers enlisted also in the fight to conquer disease. We think economy-minded legislators will take the hint, the hint that a healthier, more productive people is our best economy in these perilous times.

And since this is Cancer Control Month, we trust our listeners will remember the American Cancer Society. ~~It can be reached~~ Contribute through your local post office.

CIGARETTE-CANCER STORY

Biographical Information On Cancer Interviewees

Evarts A. Graham

Evarts Graham is 71 years old and ranks as one of the great surgeons of American medical history. A former President of the American College of Surgeons, he has been Chairman of its Board of Regents since 1951. He is now Professor Emeritus of Surgery and Lecturer in Surgery at Washington University of St. Louis. The first surgeon to remove a human lung successfully (his patient was a Pittsburgh obstetrician who was operated on in 1933 and is practicing today), he holds thirteen honorary degrees and decorations from many nations. In 1948, one of his sophomore students, 26 year old Ernest Wynder, convinced him of the value of interviewing lung cancer patients in hospitals from coast to coast to ascertain any relation between the disease and smoking habits. During his summer vacation Wynder interviewed over 400 patients and began the work which culminated in the mouse-painting experiment.

Ernest L. Wynder

Dr. Wynder is now 32 years old. He was born in Herford, Westphalia, Germany. At present he is Head of the Section of Epidemiology, Division of Preventive Medicine of Sloan-Kettering Institute. Sloan-Kettering is the research unit of Memorial Center for Cancer and Allied Diseases, New York City. He has published extensively in the leading medical journals on the subject of lung cancer. He points out that of the 1104 cases of lung cancer which he studied only 1½% were non-smokers. The same percentage, he adds, holds true for the more than 6000 cases covered in various studies throughout the world.

E. Cuyler Hammond

The statistical work of Wynder, Graham and early researchers suffered from a major flaw. Patients were interviewed while suffering from disease and their responsesto questions about their smoking habits were subject to psychological factors. A so-called "forward-looking" study was essential and this was conducted by the American Cancer Society under the direction of E. Cuyler Hammond, Director of the Statistical Research Section of its Medical and Scientific Department. Dr. Hammond holds a Doctor of Science degree from Johns Hopkins University and is also a Professor of Biometry at Yale University where he is also Director of Graduate Studies in Statistics. He is 42 years old.

The American Cancer Society survey concerned 187,000 white men between the ages of 50-69 who were in good health at the time they were interviewed by more than 22,000 volunteers of the Society. Follow-ups were made at periodic intervals to ascertain causes of death. These men had filled out questionnaires concerning their occupations, smoking habits, etc. In 1954, a preliminary report based on 4,854 deaths was printed in the Journal of the American Medical Association. Its principal findings were as follows:

The death rate from all causes is 75% greater among those who smoke a pack-a-day or more than among those who are non-smokers.

The death rate from lung cancer ranges from 5-16 times greater among pack-a-day or more smokers than among non-smokers.

Death rates from diseases of the coronary arteries are almost twice as great among pack-a-day or more smokers than among non-smokers.

The statistics are precisely the same for rural as for urban populations, the rates depending upon the amount of cigarettes smoked.

Dr. Charles S. Cameron

Dr. Cameron is Medical and Scientific Director and Vice President of The American Cancer Society, Inc. and has held those positions for eight years. He is 46 years old and is a former Rockefeller Fellow in postgraduate cancer surgery. As a Commander in the Naval Medical Corps he was Chief of Tumor Service at Brooklyn Naval Hospital. In his present post he has broadened the attack on cancer along many lines.

Dr. Clarence Cook Little

Sixty-six year old Clarence Cook Little is ~~Scientific of Director~~ of the Tobacco Industry Research Committee and chairman of its Scientific Advisory Board. He is also Director of the Roscoe B. Jackson Memorial Laboratory, Bar Harbor, Maine. This is the oldest and largest research institution in the world devoted principally to the study of heredity of cancer and allied diseases. A million mice a year, representing sixty strains, are bred at the laboratory and sent to researchers throughout the world.

Dr. Little is a biologist who holds degrees from ten institutions. He was President of the University of Maine (1922-25) and of the University of Michigan (1925-29). He is a former president of the American Association for Cancer Research, predecessor of the American Cancer Society.

He has an international reputation as a cancer investigator. As the great-great grandson of Paul Revere he would be disposed to warn the American people of any known danger.

Timothy V. Hartnett

Timothy Hartnett (he would like Murrow to call him Tim on the show) is chairman of the Tobacco Industry Research Committee. He began his career in the tobacco industry as a $4 a week office boy, rose to become President of the Brown and Williamson Tobacco Corporation. He assumed his new post after retirement from Brown and Williamson. His Committee, which consists of representatives ~~from~~ of fifteen leading cigarette manufacturers, organizations of tobacco growers and warehouse associations, has made an initial appropriation of$500,000 for research into the relationship of smoking and health. The funds are to be allocated by the Scientific Advisory Board under the direction of Dr. Clarence Cook Little.

Mr. Hartnett has been in the tobacco industry for 45 years.

Dr. Paul Kotin

Dr. Paul Kotin, 38, is Assistant Professor of Pathology at the University of Southern California Medical School, Los Angeles. He has done extensive ~~research on the cancer-causing activity of the~~ exhaust products of internal combusion engines and has pointed out the presence of potent cancer-causing agents in the air of Los Angeles and other major cities.

Using products of air pollution he has produced skin cancers in mice of highly resistant strains. He has achieved this with materials of less than one thousandth the amount of cigarette tar necessary to cause the same type of cancer in mice. He is a member of the Scientific Advisory Board, Tobacco Industry Research Committee.

Dr. W.C. Hueper

Dr. Hueper is 59 and was born in Schwerin, Germany. He is Chief of the Environmental Cancer Section of the National Cancer Institute, U.S. Public Health Service. He is also Chairman of the Committee on Cancer Prevention of the International Union Against Cancer. He is an internationally-known authority on occupational cancer and its causes. His views on the cigarette-lung cancer question, which differ materially from those of his superior at the National Cancer Institute, Dr. John R. Heller, are affirmation of the freedom of inquiry practiced at the U.S. Public Health Service (as Dr. Heller points out in his talk).

Dr. Hueper is a distinguished pathologist. Among his many top-level responsibilities have been his service as Chief Pathologist of the Cancer Research Laboratories at the University of Pennsylvania and his work as Assistant Director and Pathologist, Haskell Laboratory of Industrial Toxicology of the DuPont Company.

Dr. John R. Heller

John Heller is a career Public Health ~~expert~~ administrator who directs the National Cancer Institute, one of the U.S. Public Health Service's seven National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Maryland. As chief of the division of venereal diseases, U.S. Public Health Service, he ran the national venereal disease control program during the crucial period from 1943-48. His statement to SEE IT NOW is the first public statement of the U.S. Public Health Service position on cigarettes and lung cancer. He speaks as a personal representative of the Surgeon General of the U.S. Public Health Service. He was born in Fairplay, South Carolina, 49 years ago, and believes the differing opinions among scientists in his own organization provide a healthy atmosphere for inquiry.

Facts About The Cigarette Industry

From 1900 to 1952 the number of cigarettes sold per year increased from 3.2 billion to 435 billion.

The industry is of vital importance to the national economy. Cigarette manufacturers pay over 1.5 billion dollars in Federal taxes alone. This is exceeded only by the revenue from personal income taxes and liquor taxes. In addition to Federal taxes, 41 states and the District of Columbia collect $500,000,000 in taxes ranging from one to six cents per pack. These taxes are often earmarked for veteran's bonuses, education, hospitals, and road-building.

The farmer has a great stake in the prosperity of the industry. The value of the tobacco crop is over one billion dollars per year, about one-twelfth the value of all national crops. 850,000 farm families are involved in tobacco-growing and 81% of their crop is used for cigarettes. The average price for flue-cured tobacco, which predominates in cigarettes, has risen 660% since the advent of mass cigarette smoking.

The number of people concerned with the manufacture and distribution of cigarettes is staggering. More than 100,000 workers are employed in manufacturing. Two-thirds of all the retailers in the United States, in more than 1,300,000 retail outlets, sell cigarettes. The American economy knows no other product sold by such a heterogeneous assortment of business enterprises, large and small.

Large numbers of people are involved in peripheral phases of cigarette manufacture and distribution; people who supply the chemicals, the paper, the ingredients like sugar, molasses, licorice and the services such as transportation.

The American Tobacco Company, for example, uses the products of 3000 suppliers. The company has 80,000 stockholders and spent more than $15,750,000 for network radio and television advertising alone in 1953. Total advertising expenditures for the whole industry are well over $100,000,000 yearly.

From the depths of the depression until 1953 there was an uninterrupted rise in the sale of cigarettes. Then came the reversal.

In 1952, 435 billion cigarettes were sold.
In 1953, 423.8 billion cigarettes were sold.
In the first six months of 1954, a drop of 10.5 billion cigarettes over the comparable period in 1953 was recorded.

As meaningful as this business reversal has been the shift from regular cigarettes to king-size and filter-tips. During the first six months of 1954 the sale of standard size cigarettes was down 15.1%; but the sale of king-size cigarettes rose about 5%. The greatest change by far was recorded by filter-tips which rose fully 200%.

Should a cancer-causing agent be identified it is possible that all cigarettes of the future will be filtered if the agent cannot be removed at an earlier stage. At the moment it is impossible to assess the value of filters since we do not know the product which should be filtered out.

munist influences. The bay window that is Berlin allows the cooling breezes of the ways of the West to blow over Communism's campfires.

The West German Federal Republic at Bonn also is unstable because it is a coalition of parties, a somewhat motley collection of political faiths united only in their devotion to one man, Konrad Adenauer. And Konrad Adenauer is nearly 80 years old. His successor is nowhere in sight.

United, Germany could be the balance of power between east and west, between Communism and Democracy in Europe. If her leaders conceived that to bend toward Russia would serve Germany's national interests, Europe would be Russia's to own. If her leaders see alliance with the West as best serving Germany, Russia would be no more than an Asiatic toe in the European door.

Divided, Germany is a last unhealed scar of World War II, fertile field for the dissension, international tension and diplomatic ulcers that come from the frustration of a nation's rightful and traditional aspirations.

For these reasons, and others, it is hardly likely that unification of Germany will be one of the early fruits of the Geneva Big Four meeting and the series of lower-rung conferences it has set in train. Neither is an East-West security pact, for security from war already is at hand in the existence of a military stalemate both on the ground and in the air. And neither is agreement on disarmament, for any moves to disarm would bring the suspicion that the stalemate were being broken and the security of equal forces would disappear, bringing back the fear of aggression of one side against the other.

Therefore, for signs of the first fruits of the new era of direct, frank and cordial relations between Russia and the United States, we must look to the realm of Item Four on the Big Power agenda, the matter of improved East-West relations. Barriers between East and West were erected just after the second World War—first by Russia, who invented the Iron Curtain, and then by the United States, which built one of its own.

The restrictions this nation placed on Russian travel, on Soviet visitors visas and other elements of international relations were principally by way of recrimination. But at this writing, it seems easier for one of us to get a visa to visit Russia than for a Russian to visit here. When both sides start removing these artificial restrictions, when people get to meet people freely, without government barriers, then will the Big Powers have achieved their first objectives at Geneva.

For, after all, it was you and me, here, and a guy named Ivan, in Russia, that the Big Powers were talking about at Geneva when they said they hoped they could arrange to have peace for all the world's people.

CIGARETTES
And Lung Cancer

A two-part study on "See It Now" . . . widely applauded as an example of television's capacity for forthright, impartial presentation of an issue "hot to handle" on the air.

See It Now, the news documentary series produced by Fred W. Friendly and Edward R. Murrow on the CBS Television Network, recently examined the medical controversy over cigarette smoking as a cause of lung cancer. The study, presented in half-hour episodes May 31 and June 7, 1955, took the form of a discussion among medical authorities. This condensation retains all of the factual and evaluative text.

PROGRAM I

EDWARD R. MURROW: Webster defines science as "the state or fact of knowing . . . knowledge as opposed to intuition, hunch or belief."

We present a report by scientists on the relationship, if any, between cigarette smoking and lung cancer. We obviously accept responsibility for the editing, but the facts will be presented by scientists who are pre-eminent in their fields.

This (on screen) is a cigarette factory in Richmond, Virginia. Highly automatic machinery wraps millions of miles of paper around hundreds of thousands of bales of tobacco to form a 5-billion-dollar annual industry. Tobacco is a vital part of our economy, pays the Federal Government a billion and a half dollars a year in taxes. Only personal income taxes and liquor pay more. The states receive another half billion in taxes. Since 1920, cigarette consumption has risen 450%. There are now about 70 million smokers in the United States.

Our report begins in St. Louis at Washington University Medical School and Dr. Evarts Graham who in 1933 became the first surgeon to remove a human lung successfully:

The Wynder Experiments on Mice

DR. GRAHAM: During the years which followed World War I it became apparent to me that gradually as each year went by, I was seeing more and more patients with cancer of the lung. After the year 1930, the number seemed to increase very rapidly. By the year 1950 it was the most common cancer in the male sex.

In 1948, one of our medical students, Ernest Wynder by name, came to me with the suggestion that he make a study of our patients with cancer of the lung to see approximately what percentage of them were heavy cigarette smokers. As the result of the study of about the first 50 cases showed that there was a very close association between excessive cigarette smoking and the incidence of the disease in these patients, we felt greatly encouraged by the study. We pursued it until we had made an examination of more than 600 patients, and we found that it was extremely rare to find anyone who was not an excessive cigarette smoker. We, therefore, in 1950, undertook a series of experiments on mice with the idea of attempting to produce cancer in these mice by using the tar obtained from cigarette smoke.

MURROW: Next, Dr. Ernest Wynder and Research Assistant Adele Croninger demonstrate the "cigarette-smoking machine" that led to their findings:

DR. WYNDER: The machine puffs every 18 seconds a 2-second puff, and the volume of the puff is about the same as encountered in human smoking. In this machine, the temperatures of the burning cigarette are quite the same as that encountered in human smoking habits. The machine puffs and the smoke is drawn into flasks which are immersed into dry ice. The smoke, therefore, is being condensed and the tar results therefrom. This bottle contains the amount of tar to which the average heavy cigarette smoker is exposed over a given year's period of time.*

ADELE CRONINGER: These animals were painted 3 times a week with the cigarette tar solution. What we noticed in our original experiment was that after about 8 months, these animals first lost the hair on the painted area and then little warts, or papillomas as we call them, appeared. These are merely pre-cancerous lesions. In the 11th month of painting we had our first cancer.

DR. WYNDER: The significance of this experiment, which produced 44% cancers in 81 mice painted with the cigarette tar, lies in relationship to the human evidence. It is not, as is frequently pointed out jokingly, significant because it shows that perhaps mice should not smoke. It is significant because of the human evidence available.

We are also doing studies with cigarettes which have been wrapped in cigar leaves to determine whether the cigarette paper may add to the carcinogenic effect of the cigarette. The data so far suggests that the cigarette paper is not a very important part leading to the carcinogenic activity of cigarette smoke.

We have done one experiment in which we removed the nicotine from the cigarette tar, and we are observing that the tar from which nicotine has been removed has the same cancer-inducing activity as the total tar, from which we induce that the nicotine is not the cancer-inducing material—as we had indeed expected.

We believe that the present evidence very strongly indicates that tobacco smoking, and particularly cigarette smoking, is a major cause of lung cancer. This does not mean that we believe it is the only cause. Certainly, there are a few that may develop lung cancer without ever having smoked, and there are, of course, many who do smoke and who never develop this disease.

A Government Specialist Dissents

MURROW: Next we went to the National Cancer Institute of the U. S. Public Health Service. This is Dr. W. C. Hueper, Chief, Environmental Cancer Section:

DR. HUEPER: I do not believe that cigarette smoking is one of the major causes of cancer of the lung, among the various causes which may be responsible for cancer of the lung.

Now, for instance, in England we have a lung cancer rate which is twice that of the United States although the English smoke 30 percent less cigarettes than the Americans do. In greater London, we have lung cancer rate which is two and a half times that of the English people living in rural, agricultural areas. We have very similar observations from the United States. For instance, in Cleveland, we have a much higher lung cancer rate than we have in the agricultural areas of that state.

* 1300 grams or 2/3 of a pound.

It has been maintained by the protagonists of the cigarette theory that the increase in lung cancer during the last decades was parallel with the consumption of cigarettes, and that for that reason, there was a causal relation between these two phenomena. If we study the number of industry-connected items which have risen in production or consumption during that same period, we will see that not only the consumption of cigarettes has increased during the last few decades but also the production and consumption of other products which had known relation to cancer-producing agents: for instance, the construction of asphalt-covered highways, or the consumption of gasoline, or the production of coal tar. All these agents show a marked rise during the last two or three decades.

The mere fact that two phenomena run parallel is no proof that they have any cause-and-effect relationship.

There are certain definite defects and inconsistencies in the medical evidence advanced in support of the cigarette theory. Statistical data, for instance, have not shown any correlation between lung cancer and cigarette cough or chronic bronchitis, although we know that chronic cigarette smokers suffer from such diseases.

There is, moreover, no statistical evidence indicating that cigarette smokers have a higher liability to cancer of the lip, mouth, skin, fingers . . . although these tissues come in intense and prolonged contact with the tar oozing from the tip of the cigarettes.

While we have very consistent findings in connection with the production of cancer of the skin by the application of coal tar, the evidence which is supplied by various investigators in regard to tobacco tar is quite varied. The majority of investigators, in fact, either did not produce any cancers of the skin in mice or rabbits, or produced only a few. Only two investigators succeeded in producing cancers of the skin in appreciable number of animals. This means that the evidence produced by animals can only be taken with very great reservations. Moreover, we have to consider that mice are not men. And a direct application of any experimental animal to the human problem is not permissible.

The Air Pollution Theory

MURROW: There are those among the scientific community who claim that the smog in certain cities causes more lung cancer than cigarette smoking. This is the voice of Dr. Paul Kotin of the University of Southern California:

DR. KOTIN: This is Los Angeles. People live here, breathe here. People smoke here. Here, as in all other city areas, statistics show people are in greater danger of developing lung cancer than are people living in rural or farm areas.

This mouse has a cancer . . . produced not by cigarette tars but by materials obtained from the air. It is a skin cancer. The production of skin cancers is an early step in the experimental production of lung cancers in experimental animals.

This series of chambers (shown on screen) has been especially and specifically built so that the atmosphere of the air can be duplicated. The breathing experiment is based on the expectation that the cancer-producing substances, which have been already chemically demonstrated, will produce cancers of the lung in these animals if they have the susceptibility for the development of lung cancers.

Not only have we made facilities for our animals to breathe the exhaust products of gasoline engines and diesel engines, but we know the atmosphere contains dusts and soots, and many, many other things. We have (in the breathing chambers) the aerosol substances in the air that must be introduced; . . . the mice at this very moment are breathing exhaust products in a manner similar to the method that we breathe them in normal city daily living.

Lung cancer has been increasing in frequency throughout the entire world for the last half century. Along with this increase, there have been certain observations which would tend to incriminate the air. The reason we are interested in the air as a possible cause of lung cancer is that everybody who has lung cancer breathes; and more important, at one time or another they all have breathed polluted air. Not everybody who has lung cancer has smoked.

The Cancer Society's Statistics

MURROW: In 1952, Drs. Hammond and Horn of the American Cancer Society began an extended study of the smoking habits of American men. Here is Dr. Hammond reporting on the results of the first two years:

DR. E. CUYLER HAMMOND (of Yale U., who conducted the study for the A.C.S.): We, in American Cancer Society, are making a study of smoking habits and death rates among 187,000 white men who live in 394 counties stretching from the East Coast to the West Coast.

These men were all questioned while they were presumably well. At the end of 22 months, 4,800 of them had died. I'd like to tell you a little bit about our findings of the death rates in relation to the smoking habit.

First, we found that the heavy cigarette smokers had about 9 times the death rate from lung cancer as did those men who never smoked. Even moderate cigarette smoking had a considerable effect: the moderate cigarette smokers had a lung cancer death rate about 4 times as high as men who never smoked. Now, lung cancer kills about 24,000 Americans each year at the present time. So, this was a very important finding in itself.

What is most important to us, however, I think, is not so much the details as to how people die but whether or not they die. Therefore, we made an analysis of the over-all death rates among this group of men, comparing the smokers—the various types and amount of smoking—with the men who never smoke. We found that the heavy cigarette smokers (a pack or more a day) had a death rate about 75% higher than had men who never smoked.

To me it is very highly convincing. It is now established, in my opinion, beyond a reasonable doubt that cigarette smoking greatly increases the probability of developing lung cancer.

In my opinion, people should be warned of the danger—and they are being warned. What they then want to do—whether they wish to smoke or not—is their own business. But if we now accept it as being reasonably well established that smoking does increase death rate from these causes, then we can clear the mental decks for an intensive research program to develop a safe cigarette.

(Murrow introduced Dr. Elmer Hess of Erie, Pa., as President-elect of the American Medical Association, to speak "as a physician who does not believe there is any important rela-

Bad Kids Listen To ROCKY

ROCKY GRAZIANO, turned from juvenile delinquency by an interest in sports, carries a message and example to youthful terrorists on the streets of New York.

ROCKY GRAZIANO was a tough, bad kid with a penchant for brawling and stealing when he grew up on the Lower East Side of New York. He got into reformatory and jail. He liked to beat up adults. He hated cops. Then one day, acting on some of the best advice he ever got, Rocky turned professional fighter, in time became middleweight champion of the world.

Rocky now is a popular performer on TV, and an effective campaigner against juvenile delinquency in rough neighborhoods of New York. He talks to young punks in a native tongue they understand—about trouble, sports, his Cadillac, his brother-in-law (a cop) and that often-underrated commodity, the honest buck.

Here are excerpts from an interview on Let's Find Out (WCBS Radio, New York) in which Rocky told how he deals with youngsters headed for trouble. Moderator Martin Weldon, newspapermen Allan Keller and Harold Harris conducted the interview. First question: "What do you think is the main cause, if there is a main cause, of crime among the youngsters?"

ROCKY: Well, I think the fathers and mothers are very responsible for the children, with this juvenile delinquency stuff.

You blame the parents?

I certainly do.

Rocky, what was the toughest fight in your life? Was it in the ring or out on the street?

I had a lot of tough fights in the ring but I had a lot of tough fights out on the streets, to tell the truth. . . . actually trying to survive. I had a lot of bad environment like a lot of kids. All the boys were rough, tough kids and we didn't care for nobody. We didn't respect cops and we didn't respect teachers and we didn't respect nobody.

Somewhere in the book you said, "We were good kids . . . we didn't pick on old women," and things of that nature. It makes me think you have arrived at a good standard of behavior for a kid in the street.*

Well, we were pretty stupid in those days but we had respect. If we had to hit somebody or beat somebody up we wouldn't beat an old man or old woman or make him any harm. In our own stupid way we would maybe pick on somebody 25 or 30. We were about 13 or 14.

Graziano related that he was arrested for the first time when he was only 11 years old. A policeman caught him robbing slot machines in the subway. The cop was "pretty rough." If purposes of this argument, we will take the "average American": because she reads about so-and-so's shampoo and because our great know-how has made it possible for almost the poorest people in this country to be able to afford those things at the dime stores if they don't get it at Elizabeth Arden's, she is attractive. The average American girl and boy have more schooling. Their minds are opened up to the fact that maybe there is a way to find an answer.

FADIMAN: Perhaps we should have examinations, as people do who want to be electricians or plumbers; they have to pass courses, and then they get a kind of certificate which enables them to be a licensed electrician.

ZILBOORG: Not a good electrician, just licensed.

FADIMAN: But at least they know something about electricity.

EMERSON: But of course, you do make that examination. Everyone does inside. There are very few people, even in runaway marriages who don't say to themselves, "Is this right?" And I think there are very few people cynical enough to marry thinking: "If this doesn't work, I can get out of it." Most people really basically say to themselves, "This is maybe the most important step of my life." They really try at the moment, and that's the kind of examination you pass.

FADIMAN: I think they do, but often they're incapable, particularly at a very young age, of making the constant series of difficult adjustments that marriage requires. To come back to your Greeks, Alistair, Aristotle it was who said that a man should be 35 and a woman 28 before marriage can be solemnized.

EMERSON: But Nature says no.

FADIMAN: Nature does say no, but Aristotle says yes.

COOKE: No, no, Nature has nothing to do with legal contracts; it's society.

ZILBOORG: Notice how we drifted from love, from the drug store, and finally into a sentimental sort of reunion towards marriage and families?

FADIMAN: I think it's very natural.

ZILBOORG: I don't object.

Cigarettes and Lung Cancer

tionship between smoking and cancer.")

DR. HESS: I think you have to depend upon the man who prepares the statistics more than anything else. You've heard the old saying that there are lies, damn lies, and statistics. You can make statistics do anything if you are interested in coming up with a certain objective.

Now, I don't mean to say that the statistics that are given to us on various things are incorrect, but very often the individual is so enthusiastic that he points at statistics to prove his point.

I don't think smoking cigarettes particularly has anything much to do with it (the rise in lung cancer). In the first place, we have, through scientific medical achievement, prolonged human life from an age of 37, at the turn of the century, to 67 in the male of today and 72 for our women. That means that a very large proportion of our population are going to live in the cancer age, which is usually after 40.

The second reason is that we have a very much more improved scientific approach to diagnosis, and we are able to diagnose cancer today, particularly of the lung, much easier than we were able to diagnose it 15 or 20 years ago. In other words, we're discovering cancer today when 15 or 20 years ago we were unable to discover it until it was ready to kill.

I can't see where (smoking) has done me a great deal of harm. Cigarette smoking may be a smelly, dirty and very expensive habit. There have been periods when I have quit smoking, but all of my life I have smoked, and I have enjoyed smoking. I would rather, myself, live fifteen very, very active, productive years than live twenty-five years as a potato unable to do anything but just exist, and that isn't the object of scientific medicine. The object of scientific medicine is to increase the age with comfort. I think we should do everything in moderation. And I think that we should smoke in moderation, we should drink in moderation, we should eat in moderation. More people kill themselves by digging their graves with their teeth than by any other thing that we know of. I would say that if an individual is worried about his cigarette smoking, he should go to his family physician, and he should take the advice of his family physician as to whether he is smoking too much or whether he should stop smoking.

DR. CHARLES CAMERON (Medical Director, American Cancer Society): Now there is an unbecoming scepticism in some quarters of the value of statistics, and the statement is repeatedly made: "We must have laboratory proof." I'm not sure what the nature of this laboratory proof is. I assume the ultimate in proof would be the production of cancer of the lung in a living human being under conditions of experimental control. If that is the degree of proof which is required, I hope the experiment is never done. There is nothing in the entire world of science which demands that degree of proof.

I think that we can look back in medical history and cite a number of instances where statistics, a good deal cruder than the kind of statistics we're talking about here tonight, have succeeded in pointing rather directly at causes of disease well in advance of the laboratory indentification of those specific causes. For example, it was long known that milkmaids never got smallpox but they almost always got, as young girls, a little, unimportant lesion which was known as cowpox. And that led Jenner, on the basis of these statistical observations, to think that maybe cowpox immunized people against smallpox. That was the seed from which vaccination came, and today the efficacy of vaccination is accepted by every sane person.

Finally, I would remind you that the great London cholera epidemic of 1848 was abated by the incredibly simple device of removing the handle of the Broad Street pump when a single doctor noted that most of the people who had cholera had drunk of its water. I think we're very much in that position in respect of what we know about smoking and cancer of the lung today.

Now, there are those who would minimize the importance of the statistical evidence by saying: "But it is probably not the only cause." We are not concerned at this point with whether it is the only cause or not. It may well not be the only cause, but if it is a cause of any moment at all, then we must find that fact out.

The Tobacco Industry Study

MURROW: The cigarette industry has insisted that no cause and effect relationship between smoking and lung cancer has ever been established. Nevertheless, the industry has appropriated a million dollars to be placed at the disposal of a Scientific Advisory Board. This is Timothy V. Hartnett, former President of a major tobacco firm and Chairman of the Industry Research Committee:

HARTNETT: Mr. Murrow, I would like to quote from a statement released at the time the Tobacco Industry Research Committee was formed. At that time we stated: "We accept an interest in people's health as a basic responsibility paramount to every other consideration in our business."

That's where we stand today. I would like to emphasize that the industry has assured the Scientific Advisory Board, individually and collectively, of complete freedom of action. They have extended the same freedom of action to investigators, who are free to present their findings or publish their findings without clearance or prior approval from this Board. The distinguished scientist, Dr. Clarence Cook Little, Director of the Jackson Memorial Laboratory of Bar Harbor, Maine, agreed to serve as our scientific Director.

PROGRAM II

MURROW (introducing interview with Dr. Little): Almost a million people are employed in the making of over 4 billion cigarettes a year. This year, however, there has been a change in the statistics. Filter-tips represented less than 2% of the total

THE EXPERTS—PRO AND CON

These scientists appeared on See it Now as exponents of the theory that smoking causes or contributes to cancer of the lung:

DR. EVARTS A. GRAHAM, Professor Emeritus of Surgery at Washington University, St. Louis, and former president of the American College of Surgeons.

DR. CHARLES S. CAMERON, Scientific Director of the American Cancer Society.

DR. ERNEST L. WYNDER, head of section of Epidemiology, Sloan-Kettering Institute (New York) and originator of a study that produced skin cancer in mice painted with tobacco tar.

DR. CORNELIUS RHODES, Director of Sloan-Kettering Institute, New York.

DR. E. CUYLER HAMMOND, Yale University, who conducted the survey on smoking's effects for the American Cancer Society.

These scientists questioned the theory:

DR. CLARENCE COOK LITTLE, eminent cancer investigator, former President of the University of Michigan, now Director of the Jackson Memorial Laboratory in Bar Harbor, Me., and head of the Tobacco Industry Research Committee's Scientific Advisory Board.

DR. W. C. HUEPER, Chief of the Environmental Cancer Section, U. S. Public Health Service.

DR. PAUL KOTIN, University of Southern California Medical School, expert on air pollution.

DR. ELMER HESS, Erie, Pa., then President-elect (now President) of the American Medical Association.

DR. HARRY S. N. GREENE, head of the Pathology Department, Yale University Medical School.

These scientists also discussed current research programs:

DR. ROBERT N. DE PIUS, Chairman of the Industry Technical Group of the Tobacco Industry Research Committee.

DR. JOHN R. HELLER, Director of the National Cancer Institute, U. S. Public Health Service.

in 1952; in 1955 more than 20% are filter-tipped, and the figure is rising. There is a clear indication that the relationship between cigarettes and health has caused this change.

ARTHUR MORSE (See It Now's reporter): Dr. Little, have any cancer-causing agents been identified in cigarettes?

DR. LITTLE: No, none whatever, either in cigarettes or in any province of smoking as such. This is interesting, in a way, because there are many known cancer-forming substances in tar, and I'm sure that research in this field will continue. People are bound to look for cancer-causing agents in all kinds of material.

It's also interesting that certain of the published data seem to show an association between certain types of cancer, or perhaps cancer in general, and excessive use of cigarettes. Now, we are very interested in finding out what kind of people are heavy smokers and what kind are not. Not everybody is a smoker, not everybody who smokes is an equally heavy smoker; and what determines these selections on the part of people? Is it a different nervous type of person that smokes a great deal? Is it a person who's reacting differently to strain or stress—because it is very clear that certain people just "can't take it" as well as others, and the fact that they are of this type may very well mean that they've established certain habits; and it's conceivable, at least, that intensive and excessive use of any agent might be one of the habits they established.

The purpose of the (Tobacco Industry Research) Committee is to study in every possible way the relations between smoking and human health. The Committee has put at the disposal of the Scientific Advisory Board the first $500,000 and then doubled that amount, and I have every reason to believe that as the Scientific Board finds projects and plans that are worthwhile, that that does not represent the final limit of support.

None of the research is done in laboratories owned by the tobacco industry as such. It is all done at various colleges, institutions, medical schools, laboratories throughout the country. That's an important point, I think, because there might be an idea that the industry is trying to set up a limited or restricted piece of experimental work.

MORSE: Suppose the tremendous amount of research now going on, including that of the Tobacco Industry Research Committee, were to reveal that there is a cancer-causing agent in cigarettes. What then?

DR. LITTLE: Well, if it was found by somebody working under the Tobacco Industry's research grant it would be made public immediately and just as broadly as we could make it and then efforts would be taken to attempt to remove that substance or substances.

I'd like to say this, however: I have heard a sort of point-of-view that says, "Let's eliminate the agent in the tobacco that is harmful." Well, it seems to me that we can't possibly eliminate an agent that hasn't yet been identified or the presence of which hasn't yet been proved.

New Hammond-Wynder Reports

MURROW: Last week, Dr. E. Cuyler Hammond of the American Cancer Society reported on the statistical relationship of the smoking habits of 180,000 men to lung cancer in males. Timothy Hartnett, chairman of the Tobacco Industry Research Committee, charged that the report ignores important environmental, geographical, physical and emotional factors. Others insisted that the incidence of lung cancer in city dwellers indicated air pollution was a primary cause.

Yesterday, in presenting a new report in the A.M.A. meeting at Atlantic City, Dr. Hammond included a survey—the survey including city dwellers to rural:

DR. HAMMOND: The findings are as follows:

• Of those men who never smoke (we had 32,460 of them), 12 died of lung cancer—33 per 100,000. The occasional smokers had about the same death rate; so did the cigar smokers; men who smoked pipes only had a death rate about twice as high. But men who smoked cigarettes regularly at some time had a death rate of 245 per 100,000, which was about 7 times as high as for those who never smoked.

• The question has been raised as to whether the association between cigarette smoking and lung cancer occurs in rural areas as well as in urban areas. In order to determine this we divided the men into four groups: (1) those living in cities of 50,000 or more (such cities as Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo and Newark); (2) men living in towns of 10,000 to 50,000; (3) men living in (smaller) towns and in suburban areas; (4) men living in strictly rural areas, such as farming districts in Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, New York and other states.

The tall bars on the chart (reproduced below) indicate the death rate of the men who were smoking cigarettes regularly. Now you will note that these tall bars are about the same. The bar that's slightly the tallest is for the big cities. There the death rate for the cigarette smoker was 268.6 per 100,000. In rural areas it was a bit lower: 217.

Again, the small bars indicate the death rate of the men who never smoked. All of them are very small as compared with the cigarette-smoking rate. In other words, what matters is not where you live but how much you smoke.

• The question arises as to whether the damage, if any, done by cigarette-smoking to a particular man has already been done after he's smoked cigarettes for a number of years. If so, then giving up smoking would not lower the risk of lung cancer in such a man.

FIGURES atop bars represent number of deaths from lung cancer per 100,000 male population. (American Cancer Society chart)

In our study there were 2,903 men who had once been regular cigarette smokers but had given it up at the time they were questioned. 22 men in this group died of lung cancer during the next 2½ years—that is (a rate of) 100 per 100,000 of them died. This would seem to indicate that giving up cigarette-smoking lowers the risk of lung cancer below that of men who continue to smoke cigarettes.

MURROW: A second report was read at Atlantic City yesterday. This study had been conducted collaterally by the Sloan-Kettering Institute. Dr. Cornelius Rhodes, head of the Sloan-Kettering Institute at Memorial Center, reports it for us:

DR. RHODES: Mr. Murrow, the conclusion is inescapable to me and to my associates that a real relationship exists between the long-continued inhalation of cigarette smoke and the occurrence of cancer of the lung in man. This is not an exclusive relationship; there are some cases of cancer of the lung—perhaps 1 in 5—which are not associated with smoking, but probably 4 out of 5, from the weight of the evidence, who have such an association at least.

Now, very much evidence backs this up. In the first place we've known for years that cancer of the lung is high among smokers. Secondly, no less than 14 separate scientific studies have been made in a number of different countries, all with the same result. There is a rare relationship between the duration and the amount smoked and the rate of occurrence of lung cancer. Thirdly, it is possible to make forward-looking studies: it has been possible in Great Britain and in this country to select large groups of the population, to classify them according to their smoking habits, to set up a prediction as to the rate of occurrence of lung cancer, and to see that prediction actually fulfilled in a very brief period of time.

Yesterday in Atlantic City, at the Annual Convention of the American Medical Association, Dr. Wynder presented a report on cancer of the voice-box of the larynx. This report was the result of an international study involving three countries. The results indicate that there is the same relationship, though not an exclusive one, between the use of tobacco and cancer of the voice box as exists between cancer of the lung and the continued inhalation of cigarette smoke. Indeed, in 209 individuals with cancer of the voice box, the larynx, there was only one non-smoker.

Dr. Wynder will summarize for you his studies dealing with the possibility of preventing cancer of the lung and the larynx in human beings.

DR. WYNDER: There are numerous aspects of preventive measures as far as cancer of the lung and cancer of the larynx are concerned. Among these, however, those directed against tobacco are of particular importance because we believe that some 80% of all lung cancer and larynx cancer cases now appearing in the American male could be avoided if it were not for smoking.

Among the preventive measures directed against tobacco we list:

(1) Moderation of smoking habits. Our data on relative risk indicate those smokers smoking more than half a pack of cigarettes a day begin to have an increased risk of larynx and lung cancer.

(2) Effective filtration. There has been in the literature, and particularly in cigarette advertising, much concern about effective filtration, and the American public has started to smoke filtered cigarettes to a great extent during recent years. It remains to be shown, however, what "effective filtration" means. Only further research can show whether any of the filtered cigarettes now on the market would effectively remove the ingredients in tobacco smoke responsible for the cancer-inducing action. In the meantime, it is our hunch that a mechanical filter that removes, let us say, 40% of the tar is more effective than one that removes only 10%. At any rate much more research must be directed along these lines.

In medicine, as in all other phases of life, we cannot overcome a problem by denying its existence: However, if the tobacco industry together with private researchers all over this country and all over the world would concentrate on the problem at hand, I am sure that we can solve it, and that practical means can be produced that will reduce the carcinogenic activity of tobacco on man.

Yale Findings Differ

MURROW: Part of Dr. Wynder's evidence is that he has grown skin cancer on mice using tobacco tar. For 10 years, Dr. Harry S. N. Greene, head of Pathology, Yale Medical School, has been trying to use tobacco tar to grow cancer on human lung tissue without success.

DR. GREENE: I do not attach any fundamental significance to the statistics linking cigarette smoking to lung cancer. In fact, any statistics that purport to show the cause-and-effect relationship should be taken with a grain of salt.

I don't believe a single agent is concerned in the cause of cancer at all; I think they are multiple in nature. Thus, in the case of cigarette smoking, it's quite conceivable that the cigarette smoke may act as an irritant in the lung and bring about changes in the epithelium; but the conversion of this change to cancer is only brought about by constitutional factors, and most cigarette smoking is not a constitutional factor. It is conceivable, of course, that the constitutional factor that makes one a heavy cigarette smoker might also be the same constitutional factor concerned in the conversion of the focus of growth to a cancer.

Q.—Do you believe that cigarettes play any role in the production of lung cancer?

No, I don't—certainly no more important role than the eating of tomatoes. We've been much concerned with that question in our laboratory for the past 10 years and have tested a variety of tobacco products, tobacco from a variety of brands of cigarettes, cigarette papers, and the cake and crud from my pipe. Our technique has been somewhat different from that used in other laboratories. In testing for substances that might produce cancer, it's been customary to paint these substances on the skin of adult mice. However, we have what I believe is a much more sensitive test object, and that is tissue from unborn mice.

The technique we use is relatively simple. The desired organ is dissected from an unborn mouse, impregnated or saturated with the suspected substance, and then this fragment is placed under the skin of an adult mouse. It grows there—as a matter of fact if one does not infiltrate it with any foreign substance it grows progressively and persists throughout the life of the animal to form an organ very much like its adult counterpart.

Now, if such tissue is saturated with one of the ordinary cancer-producing substances such as the coal tar products, cancer occurs in the fragment in about 30 to 40 days in almost 100% of cases. But in the models that have been infiltrated or saturated with the tobacco products there is no change whatsoever from normal.

There is an added advantage in using embryonic tissue, for embryonic tissue can be transplanted successfully into foreign species. It's possible, for example, to transplant any organ or tissue from a human embryo if that is obtained before the fifth month of pregnancy. Thus, human tissue becomes available for experimentation.

Now, when we take embryonic human lung and saturate it with these same substances and transport it to laboratory animals, nothing whatsoever happens to that lung that doesn't happen normally.

As I've said, we have used a great variety of tobacco products in this test, used a great many animals—more than 800—and have held the animals for more than a year, but not in any single case have we found anything in the transplant remotely resembling cancer. As a matter of fact, not only have we used the standard extracts of tobacco but we've used some of the tar that Wynder successfully produced cancer with in adult mice in the Washington University experiments. But in no single instance has any evidence of cancer been found.

MURROW: If cigarettes cause cancer, it still must be determined what it is in the cigarette that does the damage. Dr. Charles S. Cameron explains:

CAMERON: Of course this is not to say that strenuous efforts should not be made to develop laboratory evidence supporting or denying the statistical data. The American Cancer Society has recently appropriated ½ million dollars to carry on such studies. A research plan which might be expected to give important information bearing on this subject is shown here [on chart]. Using as the starting point the experiments of Dr. Evarts Graham and Dr. Ernest Wynder which showed that the tar derived from cigarette smoke would produce cancer on the backs of mice, it becomes important to find out whether the same tar will produce cancer in the skin of animals other than the mouse, and in tissues other than skin. It is also important to find out whether the smoke itself will produce similar effects.

But in the meantime it is necessary to break down the tar into its component chemical compounds to find out whether they, individually, are responsible for this cancer-producing effect. Having demonstrated that they are, if that proves to be the result of the experiment, it's then necessary to isolate each of these compounds. Having identified them and isolated them, it would be necessary then to determine whether they are actually present in smoke. If so, are they present in the processed cigarette, are they in the paper wrapper? . . . in the crude leaf? . . . in the insecticide with which the leaf was sprayed? . . . in the additives which are put in to improve quality and flavor?

MURROW: As Dr. Little said earlier, all of the research of the Tobacco Institute Research Committee is done independent of the cigarette companies. Nonetheless, each major cigarette producer has been conducting its own experiments on this problem. This is the Richmond Laboratory of one of the major producers.

DR. ROBERT N. DE PIUS (chairman of the Industry Technical Group of the Tobacco Industry Research Committee): Our primary objective is to analyze all the components of smoke. Of course we do a great deal of research on analysis and technology of tobacco itself; but even if we knew all the components of tobacco we still would not know the components of smoke, and since smoke is what we sell, we feel that we should emphasize this phase of research.

After we have produced the smoke and separated it into fractions, the next step is to identify these fractions . . . either photographically or on the oscilloscope. Using these instruments, we have isolated and identified some three dozen components of smoke. Many more will be identified. As we find these components we publish the results of our work in technical journals which are available to any scientist in any part of the world. So far we've found none that have given any cause for concern. If we do find any we consider harmful, and so far we have not, we'll remove these from smoke and still retain the pleasure of your favorite cigarette.

Conclusion: Open Question

MURROW: Up to now there has been no statement from the Public Health Service on this problem. We asked Dr. John R. Heller, Director, National Cancer Institute, U. S. Public Health Service, to comment:

DR. HELLER: I have been asked by the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service to indicate our interest and activity in the increasing problem of lung cancer. There seems to be, without any doubt, a reasonableness that the risk of applied lung cancer is greater among smokers than in non-smokers. We do not say that smoking is a cause of cancer. There are other factors such as air pollution that may be quite important in the cultivation of lung cancer. It is possible that heavy cigarette smoking may be one of these factors. It is possible that hormonal imbalance may be still another factor, and there may be still additional ones about which we know little or nothing; only time will tell. Some have advanced the idea that cigarette smoking, or heavy cigarette smoking in particular, may be compared to a trigger mechanism in which the individual has a susceptibility to lung cancer, and the interaction of these forces may be in such a fashion that cigarette smoking may be the very one that pulls the trigger, and there results what we know as lung cancer.

After all, here at the National Cancer Institute we have scientists who disagree about many things, and in this problem of the relationship of the possible causation of lung cancer by cigarette smoking, our scientists are pretty well divided.

MURROW: We have no credentials for reaching conclusions on this subject. In the course of our research we were impressed by the disposition of scientists of different views to collaborate, to pool their knowledge, to whet their minds one against another. There is controversy and a vast area of ignorance, and there is—as we hope you have seen—a determination to acquire knowledge, which is the only ground upon which opinion and action can be based.

unwise and how dangerous it might be at this particular time for him to indicate that he is not going to be a candidate.

BROOKS: Others can play coy then, is that right?

DESAPIO: No, I don't subscribe to the theory they should.

SPIVAK: You mean then, Mr. DeSapio, you think Stevenson, if he is going to be a candidate, ought to declare he is or he isn't?

DESAPIO: Any serious potential candidate, in my belief, should indicate that he is anxious for this office, and he would be happy to have it if his party afforded him the opportunity.

DESAPIO: Well, I think we must concede, Mr. Spivak, that up until 1954 the President's program was absolutely nothing. I think he was under the domination of the senior members of his party, who controlled these various committees, and practically made both the President and Mr. Dulles a captive. And only since the election of a Democratic Congress has there been any positive performance in behalf of the President's program.

SPIVAK: Well then, you think that the President's position has improved recently?

DESAPIO: Only by virtue of the assistance that he has received from a Democratic Congress, so therefore, my reasoning is this: If those are the issues that are going to present themselves in 1956, the question resolves itself, who is to get credit for what?

Republican Natl. Chairman Leonard W. Hall on Face the Nation (CBS TV-Radio) July 31: "Today, 165 million people are enjoying great prosperity. They are enjoying it with peace in the world. They have seen, also recently, further proof that we have in the White House the leader of all the free nations in the world. Those nations under his leadership have taken the initiative away from the Soviet and the satellites with relation to the drive for peace. In a climate like that, in my opinion, it looks good for the Republicans. We have had cooperation from the Democrats in Congress on foreign policy. That is nothing new in our history because every Democrat, when he speaks, gives credit to Arthur Vandenberg for his cooperation in foreign policy when Mr. Roosevelt was in power. But . . . we would have had a road program today if we had a Republican Congress . . . we would have a school program today. So I want to repeat: Give them credit for cooperation on the foreign front, but they have, as of the moment, not given us essential parts of the Eisenhower program which I think the people want."—From FACE THE NATION, (currently CBS Network, Sunday, TV 5:30 p.m., Radio 10:05 p.m., Eastern times).

IN THE EYE OF A HURRICANE

by EDWARD R. MURROW

Excerpt from EDWARD R. MURROW AND THE NEWS
CBS Radio Network, Aug. 10, 1955.

So that other people may be warned, a few men in the U. S. air forces make it their business to track approaching hurricanes by riding them out in airplanes. Last year, Edward R. Murrow went along on such a mission with the crew of an Air Force B-29 that flew into the calm dead-center, the "eye," of a hurricane called Edna. His account of the experience was rebroadcast last month on a night when the East Coast, from the Carolinas to Cape Cod, was braced for the approach of a similar storm called Connie.

This is Murrow's description of the flight through Edna, beginning as the plane approached the hurricane:

We went down to 7,500; surface winds now estimated at about 60 miles an hour. Flew right along the top of a flat cloud with the feeling that if the pilot let his wheels down he'd leave a track in it. The next time we saw water, the wind was cutting the top off the white-caps, and there was a thin gauze of spray as far as we could see. Then into the cloud again and that ghostly gray light that seemed to rub off on the faces of the crew members and cause them all to look as though they were ill and hadn't slept for a long time.

The radar kept reaching out, looking for Edna's eye. It showed a high bank of clouds to the right and to the left. We were flying blind in that gray stuff in a sort of valley between. Suddenly there was a hole in the clouds, maybe a quarter of a mile across, and at the bottom there was foam. It was like looking down a deep well with a huge egg-beater churning up milk at the bottom.

We flew on, and then began the real search for the eye of the hurricane. There were sudden changes in temperature, more rain. Radar reported. The engineer reported. The navigator wanted to know if anybody could see surface winds. The radarscope didn't show anything, and we were bounced around a little.

The skipper said, "There's a storm around here somewhere. Let's go find it." The navigator asked for a turn to the left, and in a couple of minutes the B-29 began to shudder. It was a twisting, tortured, ringing sort of motion. The co-pilot said, "I think we're in it." The pilot said, "We're going up," although every control was set to take us down. Something lifted us about 300 feet and the pilot said, "We're going down," although he was doing everything humanly possible to take her up. Edna was in control of the aircraft. We were on an even keel but being staggered by short, sharp blows. Then we hit something with a bang that was audible above the roar of the motors, and more than one man flinched. It was a solid sheet of water. Seconds later, brilliant sunshine hit us like a hammer, and a little rainbow spun off the starboard outboard prop, and someone shouted: "There she is," and we were in the eye.

Calm air, flat calm sea below. A great amphitheater, round as a dollar with white clouds sloping up to 25 or 30 thousand feet. The water down below looked like a blue alpine lake with snow-clad mountains coming right down to the water's edge. It was a great bowl of sunshine. Someone, I think it was the right scanner, shouted: "So help me, there's a ship down there!" And there was, right in the center of the eye. We guessed her to be a 10,000-ton merchant ship, moving very slowly in that calm water with only a thin feather of wake behind her. She appeareed to be in no trouble, but trouble was inevitable sometime because she was surrounded by those cloud mountains and raging water.

The eye was 20 miles in diameter. We went down to 1,500 feet and flew back and forth across it, making shallow penetration to the storm area. The temperature went up 14 degrees. The altimeter said 4,000 feet, but we were actually at 1,500. The civilian weather officer aboard looked at Edna with a clinical eye and said: "She's a copy-book hurricane, beautifully formed." We took her temperature, measured her speed, threw overboard scientific gear which might help to chart her future movement, while we continued to fly around in the calm at the bottom of that funnel of white clouds.

The eye of a hurricane is an excellent place to reflect on the puniness of man and his works. If an adequate definition of humility is ever written, it's likely to be done in the eye of a hurricane.

A Case Against Divorce

By Howard Whitman

WE'RE DIVORCING couples in the United States at the rate of about 400,000 per year. This means that every day, on the average, more than 1,000 couples are seeing their marriages come to an end. Young couples who rush into divorce during the early years of marriage account for the bulk of the increase.

George Barnard Shaw once pointed out: "When two people are under the influence of the most violent, most insane, most illusive and most transient of passions, we cannot expect them to remain in that excited, abnormal and exhausting condition continuously until death do them part. Quite the contrary. We expect them to grow to a mature, deep and meaningful relationship which no longer must feed upon infatuation but rather will thrive upon something called love."

This does not occur by magic. It takes some working; it also takes a whale of a lot of patience, and this is what the modern couple too often lacks.

When we look at divorce statistically we see a graph which is formidably top-heavy in the early years of marriage. Twenty-four percent of all divorces occur in the first five years of marriage, 60 percent in the first seven years. These are the years of adjustment, and the figures show how many couples are walking out on marriage without even waiting to get adjusted.

From a report on NBC Radio's WEEKEND. Mr. Whitman is a nationally prominent authority on social problems, medical broadcaster on NBC Television's HOME SHOW, author of numerous books, magazine articles and syndicated newspaper series. WEEKEND, the Sunday Magazine of the Air, now superseded on NBC Radio by MONITOR, was produced for NBC News by Arthur Wakelee.

By contrast we see that when a couple has been married for ten years the incidence of divorce drops to one-fifth of what it was during the first seven years; and when they have been married 20 years the incidence of divorce drops to one-twelfth. These people sweated out the years of adjustment, and certainly a great many of them are reaping the rewards in happy, enduring marriage.

Many couples, of course, would deny that their divorces are hasty or ill-considered. They simply contend that the marriage didn't work out and that it seemed far better to them to start anew with another mate than to live a lifetime of unhappiness. But what do the facts show? A study of divorce in the states of Iowa and Missouri concluded: remarriages are not as enduring as first marriages, and the probability of divorce rises with each successive marriage. When one has established a pattern of quitting in his first marriage he is likely to quit even sooner on his second, and sooner on his third.

An Ohio judge, recognizing that many couples were about to take a step they would deeply regret, tried an experiment. Ohio law requires that six weeks must elapse between the time a divorce petition is filed and the date on which a decree is signed. The judge arranged his court docket so that this period was stretched from six weeks to six months. Couples simply had to wait. The revealing result was that 20 per cent of the couples who had filed for divorce decided during the six-month waiting period not to go through with it.

Judge Julius H. Miner of Chicago gave the idea an exhaustive test last year. "Some couples think their troubles are insurmountable," he contended, "but they do not realize what great recuperative powers marriage has." And so he experimented with a cooling-off period—a requirement that all couples seeking divorce must cool off for at least 60 days. The result? During the nine months this requirement was in effect divorces dropped from 11,000 to 7,000—a decline of approximately one-third. Legal technicalities prevented the experiment from being made permanent but in many localities new laws are being written and old laws amended to make such cooling—off periods legally enforceable.

Even without legal safeguards, many a marriage could be saved if the couple themselves would recognize a basic fact: The course of true love never does run smooth. Case studies indicate that nine out of ten couples at sometime in marriage reach a point when one of them or both are ready to call it quits. But to the young couple, even though they may be weathering some of the difficulties of marital adjustment, all the signs seem to add up to a clear and simple warning: Stop, look—and stay married.

You mention the wire which was sent to make doubly sure you knew the reaction in Maine. It was excellent.

My best to you all, also the family,

Dear Senator Smith:

Ed and I both want to thank you for your enthusiastic wire about our program on the Vice-Presidency. The results have been very satisfactory, and the company is putting out a small booklet of the script which we will take the liberty of sending to you as soon as it is ready.

We are also sending you a copy of the "See It Now" book which is soon to be released by Simon and Schuster. It includes your interviews with Premier Nu, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and Generalissimo Franco. We are about to send copies of the book to them, too, but if you would rather have them sent with your personal card, we will be happy to take care of the mailing if you will send the necessary cards to us. We are sending a copy of the book to Bill Lewis, also, and we hope you will both enjoy reading it.

See you soon.

Affectionately,

Senator Margaret Chase Smith

Dear Mr. Terry:

Thank you for the impressive file of letters on the SEE IT NOW Vice Presidency broadcast. We are holding them for Dr. Stanton's return to the office.

These letters certainly document your vigorous and effective efforts to add Colorado's most influential citizens to the SEE IT NOW audience October 26. I know Dr. Stanton deeply appreciated your help, and will be grateful to you for letting him read these enthusiastic comments about the program.

Dear Hugh

Thanks for calling our attention to the Ed Murrow "Vice President" show. It was well done and not only was good entertainment but brought home the importance of the Office of Vice President.

History is one of my hobbies and this program pointed up many interesting chapters of American history.

To say I enjoyed it would be an understatement! To say I was fascinated by it would still be an understatement!

There was some distortion naturally and some reflection on the character and personalities of some of the men who held the high office of Vice President but men and history are controversial so disagree with me if you

Dear Hugh:

Thanks for your letter of October 24th calling my attention to your station's show Wednesday evening, October 26th at 6:00 P.M. I tuned in this show last evening and took in every minute of it. I say without hesitation, it was the most interesting show I have seen in many a day. I have always been fond of history so of course, this fact enabled me to enjoy it all the more.

I am sure the rank and file of people appreciate your putting on a show like this. It took a great deal of careful planning and no doubt incurred a lot of expenses.

Again thanking you for your thoughtfulness and with personal regards.

Dear Hugh,

At the latter part of last month you sent me a note regarding the Ed Murrow program on the vice presidency. I did observe that program and then left town.

I could not pass up, however, the opportunity of telling you how much I did enjoy it, how much real good it did, I believe, in focusing attention on a serious problem in our American political life, and in telling you that I feel that CBS has done an outstanding job and a great service to the American public in producing this program.

Dear Hugh:

Thank you for your letter of October 24th calling my attention to the documentary program on the Vice Presidency shown over KLZ-TV last evening. I had the pleasure of watching the program (with only one ten-minute interruption, which is a record!) and certainly enjoyed it. It goes without saying that the production was excellent; we have come to expect that from CBS in general and from Ed Murrow's programs in particular.

I thought the subject matter was most adequately handled. It was an excellent lesson in American political and administrative history.

Please accept my congratulations and those of the University of Denver for making this program available to our community.

Looking In

...ks Like TV Moguls Seeking ...o Make Piker Out of Ol' Santa

By EARL WENNERGREN
Rocky Mountain News Writer

YES, there is a Santa Claus in Virginia—but he's about to lose his saintly solvency if television doesn't cease spiking the spirit of his Christian bounty.

We hear a lot of talk that Christmas should not be an isolated condition at the end of the year. It appears television has taken this literally with such personalities as Warren Hull, Hal March et al in the beard of Santa Claus.

Earl Wennergren

The result has been such abhorrent spectacles as Strke It Rich, where the dignity of individuals and families crumble in ruins before the lust for the dollar bill.

The Big Payoff raised the ante with fur coats and expense-free trips to Paris.

$64,000 Question took the giveaway out of the realm of reason and made an encyclopedic memory of a paying proposition. The nation has pounded down the gates to this show. It has captured a large audience faster than talent or a beauteous woman.

Then NBC tried to top it with The Bg Surprise, where $100,000 is the jackpot. Fortunately, we are spared this travesty in Denver since Channel 4, by good sense or prior contract, doesn't carry it.

Now, ABC-TV, forced into the ring with the maniacal money changers, is toying with a trio of ideas for a giveaway show to take the play away from the other two networks.

1. A gimmick to award contestant as much as $100,000 in cash if the person picks the right one from among 30 or 40 boxes.

2. A stake in a producing oil well.

3. A lifetime income of between $200 or $300 a month.

This has to be the end!

It is argued that the television moguls are giving the public what they want. Perhaps, unfortunately, that is so.

I keep believing, however, that men of attainment who have reached the circles of businessmen-sponsors and TV titans have the inherent realization that they can be sentinels of a nation's moral fiber when touching countless minds through the mass medium of TV.

Grandfather used to tell me that Santa Claus came but once a year; you worked the other days to swell the larder.

This Santa Claus-trend in television may be hatching a generation of vice presidents weaned on the sound of big money, who have no understanding of government.

caster with the insight of a dramatist, moved TV a step closer to adulthood by taking on "The Vice Presidency—the Great American Lottery" in an hour-long documentary study Wednesday night via Channel 7.

Aside from the significance of the subject, he proved TV is a medium for stirring thought on vital topics, not alone a funnel for flim-flam and fluff. It was excellently done.

The program traced the history of the office of Vice President from Colonial times to the Atomic Age, through its many low ebbs when lampooned by public opinion to more current decades when officials and the public began to look seriously upon this man who should be the "second best qualified" man in the federal echelon.

President Eisenhower and former Vice Presidents Alben W. Barkley, Harry S. Truman and Henry Wallace were interviewed for opinions on methods of selection. They differed in points, agreed upon one essential: The President and Vice President must be a harmonious working team.

No longer can such an important office be shrouded with Ben Franklin's comment: "If this office is created, I shall address him as 'Your Superfluous Excellency.'"

The program showed the efforts of months of research on the subject by a staff headed by Murrow and Producer Fred W. Friendly.

GOBEL HIMSELF: Gobel looked more like his old self again Saturday night. He got rid of the "mother" character which cramped his script the opening two weeks and went out to be "just Gobel," the comedian we knew his freshman year of TV.

Radio-TV business has belief that a "jinx" specter hovers over performers their second year. It's been touching Gobel. Maybe the shadow was enough to warn his writers and producers.

S & N Truman, Harry

September 9, 1955

Dear Mr. Truman:

Thank you for talking to me on the phone a few minutes ago. I am delighted that you will add your indispensable comment to our rather ambitious program on the Vice-Presidency.

Briefly, it is our purpose to do a study of the Vice-Presidency from its inception. We will dramatize such incidents as Tyler's first meeting with the Cabinet, but in all cases the dramatizations will be historically accurate based upon existing documents and sound research.

Near the end of this program, which will be presented at peak listening time during the third week in October, we purpose to put the same question to all living former Vice Presidents. The question being, "What change, if any, should be made in the method of selecting a Vice Presidential candidate?" We can film your answer to this question anytime at your convenience during the next two weeks.

I am delighted that this program happens to occur so near the publication date of your book. Your publishers have let me read that portion of it dealing with your selection of a Vice Presidential candidate. You have told the story in a masterful fashion.

Please convey my warmest regards to Mrs. Truman.

Sincerely yours,

Kallir, Dr Otto

June 24, 1955

Dear Dr. Kallir:

This will set forth our understanding, as we have previously discussed it.

1. On or about June 29, 1955, Murrow and Friendly (for CBS-Television) will film, in color and with sound, an interview with Grandma Moses at her home in Eaglebridge, New York.

2. This interview is being filmed for later broadcast on SEE IT NOW, and we would plan on broadcasting the edited film on or near the anniversary of Grandma Moses' birth in the Fall of 1955.

3. A color sound-on-film print, of the film as broadcast, in 16mm, will be furnished to Grandma Moses Properties, Inc. as soon after broadcast as is possible. If there are any film materials filmed but not used on the broadcast, copies of them will similarly be furnished. No charge will be made for the foregoing.

4. In the event that CBS-Television desires to re-run the Grandma Moses film at a later date, it may do so once by making payment to Grandma Moses Properties, Inc. in the amount of $3,000.

5. The Production and editing of the film will be the responsibility of Murrow and Friendly and shall be performed at no cost to Grandma Moses or Grandma Moses Properties, Inc.

6. It is mutually agreed that Murrow, Friendly and Dr. Kallir (representing Grandma Moses Properties, Inc. and Grandma Moses) have as their objective the production of a motion picture film which will sympathetically and best present Grandma Moses in a manner upholding the principles of good taste and professional reporting. In this connection Murrow and Friendly invite the consultant assistance of Dr. Kallir, and Dr. Kallir agrees to render such assistance.

7. CBS-Television and/or Murrow and Friendly may, for a period of six months following the broadcast of the film, seek and arrange for the theatrical and/or 16mm distribution of the "as broadcast" film, or an extended version thereof. If such an arrangement is consummated, the gross producers profits received by CBS-Television and/or Murrow and Friendly shall be divided 50 percent to Grandma Moses Properties, Inc. and 50 percent to CBS-Television and/or Murrow and Friendly.

8. If, after six months from date of broadcast, CBS-Television and/or Murrow and Friendly have not consummated a theatrical and/or 16mm distribution arrangement, Grandma Moses Properties, Inc. and/or Dr. Kallir will be free to negotiate thereforth. Any deal made will involve Grandma Moses Properties, Inc. as the principle entitled to all but ten percent of the gross receipts from any such distribution arrangement, the remaining ten percent accruing to the benefit of CBS-Television and/or Murrow and Friendly. However, no use of Mr. Murrow's name, likeness or voice may be made without his prior written wonconrrence.

9. No use, other than as hereinabove specified, will be made by either Grandma Moses Properties, Inc., Grandma Moses, CBS-Telsvision, Murrow and/or Friendly without specific prior consent of the others.

10. CBS-Television will cause the "as broadcast" and/or any extended versions of the film to be copyright in its name. At the expiration or sooner termination of any theatrical or 16mm distribution arrangement (s) for the film, or failing such arrangements at the close of the six month period referred to in #7 above, CBS-Telsvision will assign the copyright to Grandma Moses Properties, Inc. And in any event thereafter, Grandma Moses Properties, Inc. will be free to dispose of all secondary rights in the material other than those to which contracts have been made hereunder.

If the foregoing correctly reflects our understanding, kindly so indicate by signing and returning to CBS-Television the original and one carbon copy of this agreement, retaining the other copies for your files.

Yours very truly,

TV–Radio TODAY

By MARIE TORRE

Gary Cooper Says "Yup"!

Gary Cooper, the slow-talkin', fast-drawin' hombre of cinemaland, has at last said "Yup" to television men who have been on his trail for months.

The program of Mr. Cooper's choice is "Wide, Wide World," that far-reaching NBC show seen alternate Sundays. On Nov. 27, the cameras will move to the San Fernando Valley to show the actor on location for an Allied Artists' picture called "The Friendly Persuasion." The word from Hollywood is that Mr. Cooper will go to no sm[illegible] bl[illegible] make th[illegible] oc[illegible] p[illegible] Besides conversing with an interviewer, he also will sing—which is a talent he has withheld from his loyal movie fans all these years.

Marie Torre

As if a warbling Cooper isn't enough, "Wide, Wide World" will present on that same day another personality—Mrs. Anna Mary Robertson Moses, better known as Grandma Moses, and certainly one of the great ladies of this country.

The renowned artist will be visited in a private New York art gallery, where she will be surrounded with her paintings.

Cooper, incidentally, is also being sought to join the array of stars on NBC's Nov. 14 spectacular, "Dateline II," a salute to freedom of the press. If he makes up his mind not to do the spectacular, then the "Wide, Wide World" show will be his TV debut.

• • •

Laura LaPlante, who was starring in movies when most of us were tots, makes her first professional appearance in twenty-four years Sunday in "It's a Great Life." Playing an ex-movie star, she'll wear the same hairdo she had in movies, and the same coiffure she's used for thirty-five years. . . . For reasons unknown, Gloria DeHaven has bowed out of tomorrow night's "Milton Berle Show," and in her place goes Kay Thompson, the trim lady who used to cavort in night clubs with a quartet of male dancers. . . . A puzzler to NBC is "Frontier," the Sunday night Western series. A first-rate presentation with good acting and polished direction, it can't seem to draw an appreciable audience. . . . "The Tex and Jinx Show" on radio has been moved out of the afternoon schedule by "Weekday," NBC's daily eight-hour air program which premieres today. Tex and Jinx will occupy the 10:30 p. m. radio spot from today on.

• • •

ABC's long uphill fight to achieve equal status with free-spending CBS and NBC is slowly beginning to show results. According to the latest American Research Bureau report, ABC has moved from third to first place in network ratings for the 7:30 to 8 p. m. period, Mondays through Fridays. While ABC almost doubled its average ratings in the half-hour spot since last year, CBS and NBC ratings declined substantially. Largely responsible for ABC's bright outlook is "Disneyland." "Warner Bros. Presents" also has contributed a fair share of audiences.

SEE IT NOW: 5TH VOL. SHOW #1

CONVENTION CHAIRMAN: (Convention scene, gavel raps)

Delegates will please take their seats.

> CONGRESSMAN CHARLES F. SCOTT: Ladies and gentlemen of the Convention, I believe with the wishes of a vast majority of the Republicans in every State in the Union, I come to place before you—to place in nomination for the office of Vice President of the United States...

> SENATOR LISTER HILL: Mr. Chairman, delegates, alternate delegates, and fellow Americans, as I rise to nominate the next Vice President of the United States...

> SENATOR TOM CONNALLY: We want a man. We want no super man—no miracle man. This supreme hour calls for a man. (Raises hand)

EDWARD R. MURROW: The campaign of 1840 marked the first bandwagon type of convention in American history, and produced the first Vice President to reach the White House by accident of death.

(Convention Hall music in background)

Since then, the United States has been governed twenty-one per cent of the time by men never elected as Presidents. In the twentieth century, almost one out of every three Presidents has died in office, and two have been seriously ill.

Many of the Founding Fathers fought against creating the Vice Presidency in the first place, and since then, party bosses have regarded it as a political graveyard—as a device to appease a special section of the Electorate. We, as a nation, spend the best part of a year selecting our Presidents; conventions have cast as many as 103 ballots before nominating a Presidential candidate. Most Vice Presidential candidates have been nominated on one ballot—often in a matter of minutes—in a half empty hall. The system has produced some worthy Vice Presidents, but at best it's a compromise, and at worst, it's a game of roulette with the nation's destiny. One Vice President served while under indictment for murder, another took bribes, another was drunk at his inauguration. One twentieth century Vice President had never been to Washington until elected. After the conventions of 1952, the Gallup poll reported that not one voter out of four knew the names of both candidates for the Vice Presidency... Richard Nixon of California, Republican... John Sparkman of Alabama, Democrat.

(Music: "Wintergreen for President")

ANNOUNCER: Tonight, SEE IT NOW presents a study of the Vice Presidency; its rights and duties and history, edited and produced by Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly. In the next sixty minutes you will see former Vice Presidents Harry Truman, Alben Barkley, and Henry Wallace testify on the office...A film of President Eisenhower telling a press conference how his running-mate was selected...a re-enactment from the life of President John Tyler that changed the concept of the office...Carl Sandburg on the nomination of Andrew Johnson...Victor Moore as Vice President Throttlebottom in a classic scene from "Of Thee I Sing"...a visit to Independence Hall where the Vice Presidency was created... and the first campaign song in American History...

(Music: "For Tippecanoe and Tyler, too
And with 'em we'll beat little Van, Van, Van.
Van, Van, Van, Van
And with 'em we'll beat little Van." Bell ringing)

ANNOUNCER: Tonight's report begins in Philadelphia where the Vice Presidency began.

MURROW: Good evening. This is Independence Hall in Philadelphia. It was in this room that the Founding Fathers wrote the Constitution of the United States. Here, they created the Presidency, the Vice Presidency, the Legislative and Judicial Branches of the government, a system which has given us greater prosperity and more freedom than has ever before existed in the world.

Here, in this room, the Founding Fathers, fifty-five of them, hammered out the Constitution of the United States. The Presiding Officer, sitting on that dais, was George Washington. He was chosen unanimously for the task, and his views and his prestige contributed much to the discussion of the Presidency and its duties.

They knew the President was to be an important man but they didn't know just how important. In those days, mainly he was important to Americans—only about four million of them. Today, he is of paramount importance to about a hundred and sixty million Americans, in addition to which he is the leader of the coalition of the free nations, something the Founding Fathers never conceived of. The President is now as far from the hydrogen bomb as the telephone on his night table, and if the Presidency is of such great importance, the Vice Presidency must also be, because the two offices are separated one from the other by merely a heartbeat.

We don't know exactly where the various delegates sat during this Convention, but James Madison must perhaps have been sitting just here. In any event, he had to sit up close in order that he could hear, because his diaries represent most of what we know about what went on during that sixteen-week Convention. There was no press gallery—no reporters. They met behind closed doors.

Actually, the Presidency caused more argument at the Convention than anything else. At first, the Founding Fathers couldn't decide whether they wanted an individual or whether they wanted a Council or a Committee of some kind.

The Convention finally decided on a single person and then proceeded to wrangle over the way to elect him. Twice, they voted against his being elected by the people. It seemed to be just about settled that he would be elected by the Congress and that, perhaps, is why no mention was made of the Vice Presidency until much later in the Convention. The proposal for the President to be elected by Congress would have meant, of course, that in case of his death, the Congress could have elected a new President.

Well eventually, in order to wind things up, they referred outstanding matters to a sub-committee, that is, a committee of eleven —one from each State. They met over a long week-end and came up with a surprise. They threw out the election by Congress. They proposed the electoral college, and they proposed the Vice Presidency. Probably Alexander Hamilton was the Father of the Vice Presidency. The Convention debated it for one day. There was very considerable opposition. One, on the grounds that it was a needless office—and the other, there was very much concern about the proposal that the Vice President should preside over the Senate and vote in case of a tie. This was regarded as a dangerous merging of the Executive and Legislative functions of the government.

Ben Franklin is reported to have said, "I am against having a Vice President." He didn't say it in this room or at that Convention, but he went on to say, "If they insist upon having one, I shall address him as 'Your Superfluous Excellency'."

John Adams, when he became the first Vice President, did write to his wife, "My country has in its wisdom, contrived for me the most insignificant office that ever the invention of man contrived or his imagination conceived." One thing is clear. The Founding Fathers intended that the Vice President, after the President, should be the man next best qualified to be President. They provided that the man receiving the second largest number of votes should become Vice President. The exact language is provided in the Constitution. "In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President until the disability be removed, or a President shall be elected." The exact meaning of the Founding Fathers in these sentences was to become the subject of a bitter controversy over the Vice Presidency. Was it the powers and duties or the office that was to devolve upon the Vice President? But the system broke down when the two-party system appeared. This, the Founding Fathers had not planned on. At this point, the Constitution was amended.

The Twelfth Amendment, adopted in 1804, called on the electoral college to vote separately for the Vice President. This was a far reaching change. No longer did the second best qualified man become Vice President but a second string party man was nominated and elected.

ANNOUNCER: This is the Capitol in Washington. The cornerstone was laid by President Washington in 1793, and when Thomas Jefferson was inaugurated in 1800, the building looked like this. The present massive Capitol has been built around it. This report on the Vice Presidency continues with Eric Sevareid at the Capitol.

ERIC SEVAREID: (in Capitol) The Senate originally met in a room in the basement and the House met here. And this plaque commemorates the first crisis in the election of a President and a Vice President. Ironically, Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr, who were supposed to end up as President and Vice President, ended up tied for the Presidency, and the House of Representatives cast thirty-six successive ballots in a bitter struggle before Jefferson could win a majority. In the present Senate Chamber, three-hundred feet north of here, Vice President Aaron Burr's bust is preserved right next to that of his bitter foe, Jefferson. Burr later shot Alexander Hamilton, the man who had conceived the office of Vice President. It was this Jefferson-Burr mix-up that caused Congress to write the Twelfth Amendment changing the electoral system, and it was then that the prestige of the office really went into decline.

For most of the next sixty years, the Senate met in this Chamber across the hall which in 1860 became the home of the Supreme Court. The first Vice President to serve in this room under the new system was George Clinton.

Once an illustrious Governor of New York, he was given the Vice Presidency. Now quite deaf and almost blind, he served out a second term and died in the crisis preceding the War of 1812.

By 1825, the Capitol had been considerably enlarged, and there was a small wooden dome. John C. Calhoun was the first Vice President since Jefferson to meet the original standards set by the Founding Fathers. But Calhoun, a man who knew what was important, was the only Vice President ever to resign. He left the dais of the Senate, under the eagle, to accept a Senatorial vacancy from his home State of South Carolina.

In 1832, Andrew Jackson was elected for a second term as President and Martin Van Buren was his running-mate. Van Buren was the only Vice President who ever presided with a brace of pistols beside him. Four years later, he achieved another distinction. He was the only Vice President since the Twelfth Amendment, to be elected President without first having succeeded on the death of a President—and that record still stands.

Van Buren's Vice President, Richard M. Johnson, is credited with having personally killed the great Indian Chief Tecumseh at the Battle of the Thames. He is credited with little else.

Now it is 1840. Webster, Calhoun, Clay, all sit in this Chamber—all aspire to the Presidency. For the first fifty-one years of the new republic, no President has died in office. Then the rollicking, boisterous campaign of 1840—and for the first time in American history, death was to test the Vice Presidency.

(Music: "Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too")

MURROW: In 1840, the Whigs passed over the obvious choices of Henry Clay and Daniel Webster and nominated General William Henry Harrison and John Tyler, an anti-Jackson Democrat, to run against the incumbent, Van Buren. "Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too" became the first campaign song in political history...

(Song: "Let them talk about hard cider and log cabins, too... It will only speed the ball for Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too"...)

Harrison got the nickname "Tippecanoe" from the battle at Tippecanoe. When the Democrats accused him of being a heavy drinker who would spend his term drinking hard cider in front of a log cabin, the Whigs turned it into their slogan—hard cider and log cabins. The Whig Party boss, Nicholas Biddle, told Candidate Harrison to say nothing at all to anybody and let no committee or town meeting extract from him a single word about what he thought or what he would do as President.

It worked. Tippecanoe and Tyler, too, won handily over Van Buren. At 69, Harrison was sworn in. He caught cold at his inaugural and one month later was on his way back to Ohio for burial.

John Tyler was in Williamsburg when the news came. He managed to borrow money for the trip and headed back to Washington. Tyler's temporary headquarters was at the lavish Brown's Indian Hotel on Pennsylvania Avenue. Here, on April 6th, 1841, John Tyler met the Cabinet for the first time. One Democrat sitting down with five Whigs, dominated by Secretary of State Daniel Webster. This was an artist's conception of the meeting. Now here is a brief dramatic impression of what the record says happened as the entire concept of the Vice Presidency endured its first test.

(In drawing room at Brown's Hotel)

TYLER: My first act upon arriving in Washington was to call on Chief Justice Taney. He is visiting in Baltimore and will not return for several days. Judge Cranch is prepared to administer the oath of office for me, immediately after this meeting.

WEBSTER: Mr. Vice President, I suppose you intend to carry on the ideas and customs of your predecessor, and the administration inaugurated by President Harrison will continue in the same line of policy under which it has begun.

TYLER: Custom, Mr. Webster?

WEBSTER: It was our custom in the Cabinet of the late President to act as a body with majority rule. The President presided over us and the custom and proceeding was that any measures whatsoever relating to the administration were brought before the Cabinet and decided by a majority vote, each member and the President having one vote.

TYLER: I am very glad to have in my Cabinet such able statesmen as you have proved yourselves to be, and I shall be pleased to avail myself of your counsel and advice. But Mr. Webster, I can never consent to being dictated to as to what I shall and shall not do. I, as President, will be responsible for my administration. The final decision will be mine... as President. I hope to have your cooperation in carrying out its measure. So long as you see fit to do this, I shall be glad to have you with me. When you think otherwise, your resignation will be accepted.

GRANGER: But, Mr. Vice President, there is considerable legal opinion...

TYLER: I am the President.

GRANGER: ... Mr. Tyler, there is considerable legal opinion that on the death of a President, the Vice President will act as President,

Washington Friday 16 April 1841 and John Quincy Adams, only yesterday, made reference to you as "Acting President."

TYLER: Mr. Granger, it is...

WEBSTER: Mr. Tyler, on Sunday, the Cabinet reached the conclusion that you would, while performing the functions of the President, bear the title of Vice President or Acting President.

TYLER: It is my conviction that the Constitution intends that the Vice President shall become the President with all of his rights and duties. According to the Constitution, the moment William Henry Harrison died, I became the President.

MURROW: Every Vice President for the next hundred and fifteen years can thank Tyler for his interpretation of the Constitution.

Later, John Quincy Adams, a former President and son of a President and Vice President, took the side of the Cabinet. Writing in his diary of April 16th: "I paid a visit this morning to Mr. Tyler who styles himself President of the United States and not Vice President which would be the correct style. It is a construction in direct violation both of the grammar and context of the Constitution which confers upon the Vice President not the office but the powers and duties of said office."

Tyler served as President for three years and eleven months—one of the stormiest administrations in history. Eventually, the entire Cabinet resigned. All told, Tyler ran through five Secretaries of War, three Attorneys-General, four Secretaries of the Treasury, four Secretaries of State, two Postmasters-General, and five Secretaries of the Navy. Later, there was a resolution in the House attempting to impeach Tyler, calling him "Acting President" only, but it was unsuccessful.

(Music: "For Tippecanoe and Tyler, too
They satisfy me, and they please you,
And with 'em we'll beat little Van, Van, Van.
Van, Van, Van, Van,
And with 'em we'll beat little Van.")

(Music: "Hail To The Chief")

MURROW: Five years after Tyler left the Presidency, a second Vice President was summoned to the highest office in the land by death. Another Whig General, Zachary Taylor, hero of the Mexican war, had won the election of '48. On July 4, 1850, he attended a celebration at the building site of the Washington Monument. Four hours of senatorial speeches in the hot summer sun were too much for him. He went back to the White House and cooled off with two quarts of iced milk and ripe cherries. Five days later, President Taylor was dead of cholera morbus. He was succeeded by Vice President Millard Fillmore, another New Yorker—a pliable politician who ran a caretaker government until 1853, when he won neither re-election nor even nomination. For the next four years the nation was again without a Vice President. In '52, William King, aged 67, won the Vice Presidency on the Democratic ticket with Franklin Pierce. Too old and too sick to come to Washington for the inauguration, King was allowed to take the oath in Cuba, and died a month later without ever presiding as Vice President in the Chamber where his statue now stands.

Next came John Breckinridge of Kentucky, the youngest Vice President in history—35 when elected—and one of the best presiding officers the Senate ever had. He was runner-up to Lincoln in the fateful election of 1860. (They were putting the great iron dome on the Capitol now.)

Lincoln's first Vice President was Hannibal Hamlin, a Senator from Maine, whom Lincoln had never met prior to nomination.

Four years later, Hamlin was dumped from the ticket for political expediency, and Andrew Johnson of Tennessee was the new running-mate. Inebriated at his own inauguration, (his friends said he was getting over a bad case of typhoid) Johnson served forty-one days as Vice President and then by the act of John Wilkes Booth, became President.

This is the tailor shop in Greeneville, Tennessee, from which Andrew Johnson came, and here is historian Carl Sandburg to tell how it was that Johnson became Vice President in the first place.

CARL SANDBURG: (in Johnson's tailor shop) Greeneville, Tennessee, and this is the tailor shop of Andrew Johnson who became the 17th President of the United States. This was his tailor shop. Over a hundred and ten years ago, he sat on this table here — sat cross-legged with his threads and needles. This is the shears he used — the identical shears that Andrew Johnson used. Somehow or other, he learned to read by himself without going to school, and he learned from his 17-year old wife.

Then came June the 7th 1864, the Convention of the National Union Party in Baltimore. And they nominated a ticket—Lincoln for President—Andrew Johnson for Vice President. And why did they nominate Andrew Johnson for Vice President? What were the facts and figures and considerations that led up to the nomination? First of all, he came from a Southern slave state and was a Democrat. From the very beginning of the war, the Lincoln administration had been afraid of the possibility of European intervention.

At something – at some turn of the war, the Union armies, if it looked as though they were going to lose the war, as though the war might go on forever and never end, it might be that there would be recognition by Britain or by France. But if it could be that in the November elections of '64, the news could be sent to Europe that the Vice President of the United States came from a Southern slave state, they could point to Andrew Johnson – and that was what happened. On March 4th, there was the inauguration—Lincoln sworn in for his second term as President, and Andrew Johnson sworn in as Vice President. Forty-one days after those inaugurations, Abraham Lincoln lay dead on a cot in the Petersen house opposite the Ford Theatre, and Andrew Johnson was sworn in as the 17th President of the United States.

What is to be derived from this whole affair of Andrew Johnson? Who would have been the second best man by way of ability? No one knows.The Convention would have had difficulties solving that, but the Convention didn't care particularly about the second best man in ability. They went after the man who had, politically and geographically, qualifications that they wanted.

MURROW: In 1868, the Republicans tried to impeach Andrew Johnson. This is a ticket of admission given out by the Senate for the proceedings – proceedings which resembled a circus. Actually, Johnson was impeached by the House but failed of expulsion by the Senate by a single vote. Generally history has been kinder to Andrew Johnson than to his impeachers, but as Carl Sandburg said, he was never regarded or nominated as the second best qualified man.

In 1869, General Grant became President and Schuyler Colfax of Indiana became the first Vice President to be sworn in in the new Senate Chamber. Colfax also became the only Vice President accused of taking bribes, and he left the office under a cloud of scandal. By 1876 the Washington Monument, after considerable delay, was up to a hundred and fifty-three feet, and the period of the mediocre Presidents was upon us and the Vice Presidents were in tune with the times.

When Rutherford B. Hayes became President in the disputed election of 1876, his Vice President was William A. Wheeler. When informed who his running-mate would be, Hayes said, "And who is William Wheeler?"

In 1880, the winning ticket was James A. Garfield and Chester Arthur, Republicans. Once again the United States was to have a President through assassination. Four months after his inauguration, President Garfield was shot by a frustrated office seeker, as he entered a Washington railroad station. Inventor Alexander Graham Bell was brought in to use his induction balance instrument to locate the bullet lodged in Garfield's spine. For two months while Garfield lay fighting for his life, neither Vice President Chester Arthur nor the country knew whether the President's rights and duties devolved upon the Vice President.

In September, Garfield died and Arthur spent the next three and a half years as President vainly trying to get Congress to clear up the confusion about the Vice Presidency.

President Cleveland's Vice President in 1893 was a politician from Illinois named Adlai Stevenson. The Washington joke was: "There goes the Vice President with nothing on his mind but the state of the President's health."

In 1901, William McKinley rode to the White House for his second term, and for the first time in 40 years there was a Vice President worthy of the office. In the words of William Allen White—they nominated Teddy Roosevelt "not to praise him but to bury him." Theodore Roosevelt, hero of the battle of San Juan Hill, was too unpredictable a Governor of New York for the Party bosses to handle, so they kicked him upstairs and out of Albany by nominating him for the Vice Presidency. Roosevelt, who wanted to abolish the office, fought it, but suddenly changed his mind and became a dynamic campaigner. Six months later, an assassin's bullet again changed the nation's destiny. President McKinley was shot while visiting the Buffalo Exposition, and as Republican Boss Mark Hanna said—"That damned cowboy is in the White House." Roosevelt proved to be an outstanding President and was doubtless an improvement on his predecessor.

Woodrow Wilson had the same Vice President for two terms, Thomas R. Marshall, perhaps best remembered for "What this country needs is a good five-cent cigar."

Later, Marshall's Vice Presidency ceased to be a laughing matter as the office became the center of the worst crisis since Tyler. Woodrow Wilson, a victim of a paralytic stroke, lay physically helpless for six months. The Constitution says that in the event of Presidential disability, his powers and duties devolve on the Vice President. But there was no machinery by which his illness could be certified. There was no Presidential assistant to decide which matters of state should be submitted to the sick President. Pressure was brought on Vice President Marshall to step in. He refused, apprehensive that a recovered President would one day denounce him as a usurper.

In 1920, both Parties put up an Ohio newspaper man for the Presidency. The Republicans chose Warren G. Harding, the Democrats, James M. Cox. Ironically, their Vice Presidential running-mates, Calvin Coolidge and Franklin Roosevelt, selected as afterthoughts, were destined to loom much larger in history. The Republican delegates, revolting against Henry Cabot Lodge's dictation, nominated Governor Coolidge, also of Massachusetts, on the first ballot. When Coolidge went to Washington to preside over the Senate, he had never seen the Senate in action, had, in fact, never even been to Washington, nor even left New England. He became the first Vice President to sit regularly with the Cabinet.

Two years later, Warren Harding passed into contemporary history, with a name so clouded by the treacheries of his friends that none would do it honor. For the second time in five administrations, the American people had a President by lottery.

Coolidge came down from Vermont for the Harding funeral, and was elected two years later for a term of his own. For the country, it was the plateau of roaring prosperity, and a quiescent, bucolic leadership characterized by "Silent Cal."

Coolidge's second-term Vice President was Charles "Hell and Maria" Dawes. He got off to a stormy start by lecturing the Senate on the evils of filibustering, and then turned down all suggestions that he sit with the Coolidge Cabinet.

(1928 Republican Convention)

CHAIRMAN: Charles G. Dawes receives 1 vote (Under Murrow) James W. Wadsworth 1 vote.

MURROW: In 1928 neither Coolidge nor Dawes chose to run, and the Convention took them at their word.

CHAIRMAN: Calvin Coolidge 4 and one-half votes. Joseph I. France 4 votes. Herbert Hoover eleven hundred and twenty-six and one-half votes. (Cheers)

MURROW: When Herbert Hoover was nominated as the Republican candidate for President in 1928, one of his most violent critics was the Senate wheelhorse—Charles Curtis of Kansas. But after Hoover had won the nomination, Curtis was delighted to become his running-mate. Will Rogers wrote: "I knew the Republican Party owed Curtis something, but I didn't think they would be so lowdown as to pay him off this way."

(Music: "Wintergreen for President")

MURROW: Between Charles Curtis and his successor, John Nance Garner, came a Vice President not to be found in the history books.

His name was Alexander Throttlebottom, and he was as much a part of the times as the depression, apple stands, soup kitchens, and the low ebb to which the Vice Presidency had sunk. Satire can be the most biting form of truth, and OF THEE I SING was political satire at its best. It won the Pulitzer Prize for 1931. Produced by Sam Harris—book by George S. Kaufman and Morrie Ryskind—music by George and Ira Gershwin—it is most richly remembered for President Wintergreen's forlorn little running-mate, Alexander Throttlebottom, played by Victor Moore. It opened December 26, 1931, and Victor Moore re-creates for us that scene from Act II, Scene I, when Throttlebottom was a tourist at the White House.

(Scene from "Of Thee I Sing")

GUIDE: This, ladies and gentlemen, is the Executive Office. You will probably find this the most interesting room in your entire tour of the White House. It is in this room that President Wintergreen signs the many laws that govern your everyday life, and from which he controls the various departmental activities. Here come various heads of government for daily consultation with the Executive, and to receive from him the benefit of his wide experience. It is in this room, ladies and—I beg your pardon, sir, but would you please stay over there? You see, we're personally responsible if anything is stolen.

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Oh, yes sir. Well, I wouldn't steal anything.

GUIDE: Thank you. Now, are there any questions?

WOMAN: Does the President reside here all the year round?

GUIDE: All the year round except when Congress is in session.

WOMAN: Where does the Vice President live?

GUIDE: Who?

WOMAN: The Vice President—where does he live?

GUIDE: (Looking in book) Just a minute, please. Vice-Regent, Viceroy, Vice Society. I'm afraid he's not in here.

THROTTLEBOTTOM: I could tell you about that.

GUIDE: What?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: I know where the Vice President lives.

GUIDE: Where?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: On Z Street—7214 Z Street. It's next to the last house on the right hand side of Z—way down to the end of Z Street.

GUIDE: Well, that's very interesting. He has a house there, has he?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Well, he lives there.

GUIDE: All by himself?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: No—with the other boarders. It's a very nice place, too. It's Mrs. Spiegelbaum's. It's a lovely place if you like Kosher cooking.

GUIDE: Think of you knowing all that. Are you a Washingtonian?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Well, I've been here since March 4th. I came down for the inauguration, but I lost my ticket.

GUIDE: You don't say. Is this the first time you've been to the White House?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Yeah. I didn't know people were allowed in here.

GUIDE: You seem to know the Vice President pretty well. What kind of a fellow is he?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Oh, he's a nice enough fellow when you get to know him, but—but nobody seems to want to know him.

GUIDE: What's the matter with him?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Oh, there's nothing the matter with him—just Vice President. He don't talk much about it. I guess he's a little ashamed. You see, he's afraid that his mother will find out about it.

GUIDE: Well, how did he come to be Vice President?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Well, they put a lot of names in a hat, and he lost.

GUIDE: What does he do all the time?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Well, he sits in the park and feeds peanuts to the pigeons and the squirrels, and then he takes walks, and goes to the movies. Last week, he tried to join the library, but he needed to have two references, so he couldn't get in.

GUIDE: But when does he do all his work?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: What work?

WOMAN: Doesn't he preside over the Senate?

GUIDE: Well, sure he does. That's the Vice President's job.

THROTTLEBOTTOM: What is?

GUIDE: To preside over the Senate.

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Over the what?

GUIDE: The Senate. You know what Senators are, don't you?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Yes. I saw them play yesterday.

GUIDE: Oh, no, no, no. I mean the Vice President presides over the Senate. It meets in the Capitol.

THROTTLEBOTTOM: When does it?

GUIDE: Now. It's going on right now.

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Well, how do you get to this place?

GUIDE: Street car at the door—right up Pennsylvania Avenue.

THROTTLEBOTTOM: I guess I'd better get up there right away.

GUIDE: Why?

THROTTLEBOTTOM: Well, you see, my name is Alexander Throttlebottom—and I'm the Vice President. (Throttlebottom runs out of room) 'Bye. Bye.

(Music: "Wintergreen for President")

MURROW: Speaker of the House John Nance Garner was one of the few serious Presidential contenders ever willing to accept a second place on the ticket. In 1932, when it became obvious that he could not beat Roosevelt, Garner, after the third ballot, released his delegates and F.D.R. was nominated.

Garner served two terms, and for the first four years, was a tower of political strength in pushing through the original New Deal legislation. Garner was quite content to be the number two man and promised that as long as he was Vice President he would never make a single speech, and, as this scene indicates, even F.D.R. couldn't coax him into one.

(Speaker's dais, Jackson Day Dinner, 1939—Garner, Roosevelt and others)

VICE PRESIDENT JOHN N. GARNER: Cap'n, I agreed with you when I went into the Cabinet I wouldn't make a speech, and I'm not a-goin' to make one now. (Roosevelt laughs)

MURROW: But later the honeymoon ended when Garner began to oppose the second term program as going too far.

Progressive enough and willing enough for the third term was Secretary of Agriculture, Henry A. Wallace. A future Vice President named Barkley asked a slightly reluctant Convention to make it unanimous.

SENATOR ALBEN W. BARKLEY: (at 1940 Democratic Convention) ...Henry Wallace unanimous—as many as favor the motion, say "aye" (shouts of "aye")—contrary, "no." (shouts of "no.") More than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the Chair declares the motion has been carried.

MURROW: As did Garner, Wallace sat with the Roosevelt Cabinet, and more than that, the President sent him as his eyes and ears abroad, making wartime trips to Latin America and China. He was also Chairman of the Board of Economic Warfare. But by 1944, it was obvious that Wallace was considered too much of a liability for renomination. Harry Truman, the Junior Senator from Missouri, went to that Chicago convention committed to nominate Jimmy Byrnes, and ended up by being told that he was Roosevelt's personal choice for the Vice Presidency.

After the fourth term victory, there was that cold, rainy morning when Roosevelt came back to Washington and rode beside the man who might have been, and the man who did become the next President of the United States.

PRESIDENT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT: (in open car with Truman and Wallace) It's a very wonderful welcome home that you have given me on this rather rainy morning. A welcome home that I shall always remember. And when I say "welcome home," I hope that the —some of the scribes in the papers won't intimate that I expect to make Washington my permanent residence for the rest—residence for the rest of my life. (laughter)

MURROW: But Washington was to be his home for the rest of his life. Eighty-two days after the inauguration, Franklin Roosevelt was dead of a cerebral hemorrhage and Harry Truman was taking the oath of office, totally unaware that he was becoming the first President of the Atomic Age. Later, important critics in the opposition suggested that Mr. Truman was only "Acting President," as Tyler's critics had said in 1841. The issue was finally answered in the 22nd Amendment which confirmed Tyler's interpretation.

In 1948 two Democrats refused to concede that Dewey and Warren were unbeatable. One was Harry Truman who ran for President—the other was Senator Alben W. Barkley, aged 70, who ran for Vice President.

The "Veep," as he liked to be called, not only sat in the Cabinet, but became the first Vice President to be privy to the secret affairs of State as a statutory member of the National Security Council—thus becoming the first really well-informed Vice President in our history.

In 1952, Eisenhower, Taft, Warren and Stassen fought for the Republican Presidential nomination. But there was only one candidate for the Vice Presidency, and it was Senator William Knowland of California who made the nominating speech.

SENATOR WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND: (At 1952 Republican Convention)... to present to this Convention as a candidate for the Vice Presidency of the United States, my junior colleague in the Senate, Senator Richard Nixon of California. (applause)

MURROW: On January 20th, 1953, Richard Nixon became the 36th Vice President of the United States.

VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD M. NIXON: (taking oath) So help me, God.

KNOWLAND: Congratulations, Mr. Vice President.

MURROW: He has been a busy one, and a useful one to the President who has constantly tried to enhance the prestige of the office. Like Barkley, he sits with the National Security Council and he also presides over the Cabinet in the President's absence.

On May 31, 1955, President Eisenhower told a news conference how Richard Nixon had been selected. James Reston of the Times asked the question.

PRESIDENT DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER: (at White House Press Conference) I would be glad to give it to you. As I reminded you people before, my experience in politics has been a little intensive even if short, and the first thing I knew about a President having any great—or Presidential nominee, having any great influence on the Vice Presidential selection was, I think, about the moment that I was nominated, and I wrote down—I said I would not do it, I didn't know enough about the things that had been going on in the United States; I had been gone two years, and so I wrote down five—the names of five or maybe it was six men, younger men, that I admired that seemed to me to have made a name for themselves, and I said, any one of these would be acceptable to me, and he was on the list.

JAMES RESTON: Mr. President, could I pursue that? Could you recall who were the five men (laughter) and secondly, what I was trying to get at was—what—what is your philosophy about the role of the nominee in the selection of the Vice President? Is it your view that the—the Convention is sovereign... it can pick anybody it likes, or should it, in your judgment, follow the recommendation of the Presidential nominee?

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER: Well, I would say this, Mr. Reston. It seems obvious to me that unless the men were—as chosen—were acceptable to the Presidential nominee, the Presidential nominee should immediately step aside, because we have a government in this day and time when teamwork is so important, where abrupt changes could make so much difference, that if a President, later, is suddenly disabled, or killed, or dies, it would be fatal, in my opinion, if you had a tense period on, not only to introduce now a man of an entirely different philosophy of government, but he in turn would necessarily then get an entirely new Cabinet. I think you'd have chaos for a while, so I believe if there wouldn't – if there isn't some kind of general closeness of feeling between these two, it's an impossible situation – at least the way I believe it should be run. I personally believe that Vice President of the United States should never be a nonentity. I believe he should be used—I believe he should be—should have a very useful job, and I think that ours has. Ours has worked as hard as any man I know in this whole Executive Department.

MURROW: Next, we went down to Paducah, Kentucky, to ask former Vice President Alben W. Barkley what changes he would recommend in the manner of selecting Vice Presidents.

SENATOR ALBEN W. BARKLEY: (In Paducah) Well, I think that so long as you have the—the Convention system, and you have hot, warm, bitter contests for the nomination for President of the United States, the probability will be that the nominee for President, consulting his Party leaders after his nomination has been consummated, will continue to choose the Vice President according to geography or expediency or political conditions. Whereas, in a primary election where the people would choose both of the nominees, they would be in a position more deliberately, I think, to look at the qualifications of both the candidate for President and Vice President. Of course, I have long believed that there ought to be a popular nomination of both President and Vice President and his popular election rather than through the outmoded, antiquated electoral college system. I do not know that this reform or revision or change will come about in the near future, but our trend over the years has been gradually to give the people more power in the selection of their governmental officers. The Constitution was amended back in 1912, I think, to provide for the popular election of Senators rather than by the Legislatures.

That has been successful and the people would not think of changing back to the old legislative log rolling process by which Senators were chosen.

Now I've always felt, and I feel very strongly, that the people are just as wise in the selection of a President and Vice President as they are in the selection of a Governor or United States Senator, or their Congressman, or any other public officers whom they have the right to choose, and therefore, I favor and have long favored a nation-wide primary election at which all the people in the given political Party can vote for the man whom they wish to nominate and wish later to elect as President of the United States, and the same rules would be applied to the Vice Presidency, and for the same reason I have long felt that the electoral college was an antiquated, outmoded piece of political machinery.

MURROW: Former Vice President Henry Wallace is now developing a new strain of poultry and experimental strawberries at South Salem, New York. We asked him about the Vice Presidency.

HENRY A. WALLACE: (In South Salem) There have been times in the United States when the Vice President stood for one thing in the Senate and the President stood for another thing—another set of policies in the White House. I can recall, for instance, that Vice President Dawes stood for a very different policy in the Senate than Coolidge stood for in the White House. Dawes had been chosen to placate the farm bloc and he entertained the farm leaders in his office. I was one of those entertained at the time, and Coolidge had no sympathy whatever with what Dawes was doing in the Senate.

In somewhat like manner, Garner stood for quite a different policy in the Senate from that which Roosevelt stood for in the White House. These troublous times won't permit that kind of a situation, in my opinion. This does not call for an amendment but does call for an increasing sense of awareness on the part of both the general public and the delegates to the national conventions.

MURROW: Former President and Vice President Harry Truman lives in Independence, Missouri—has his office in Kansas City. Mr. Truman, do you think the method of selecting Vice Presidents should be changed?

HARRY S. TRUMAN: (In Kansas City) That's a very difficult question for the simple reason it has been studied for a long, long time. It was changed in the beginning by the Twelfth Amendment, if you remember, and we've been studying it both in the Congress and outside the Congress to find a better way to elect a President and a Vice President. No better way has yet come up. I hope one may and will.

MURROW: What about the suggestion of a direct primary?

TRUMAN: The direct primary is an ideal situation for selecting public officials, but there isn't a man in the world with money enough to put on a direct primary for President and then run for President. It would require an immense amount of money in each one of the States, and I am not so sure that it would obtain the results that we think about.

Primaries in some states have been very satisfactory—in others, they have not. I am for the direct primary, however, in the State of Missouri.

MURROW: How do you feel about the Smathers Resolution—that if the President should die during the first two years of his term of office, that a new election should be held coincident with the off-year election for Congress?

TRUMAN: Well, I hadn't given that—I hadn't given that any thought or study, and I can't answer it intelligently. I had been of the opinion that if when the President goes out of office for any cause whatever during his term, and the Vice President takes over, it might be a good thing to call together the electors who were elected in the last Presidential election to elect a Vice President to take the place of the Vice President who had gone to the White House, and in order to do that, you will have to have a—an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Any change affecting any one of those two offices or any one of the top offices of the government would require constitutional amendment, particularly with regard to the President and Vice President.

MURROW: Do you find the language of the Constitution a little obscure now as to whether the duties or the office devolve upon the Vice President in case of death?

TRUMAN: I think it's perfectly plain in the Constitution that the Vice President becomes the President of the United States, and that was established by John Tyler, the first Vice President to take over.

MURROW: One of your ancestors, I believe. Wasn't he?

TRUMAN: Well, he was the uncle of my great-grandmother.

MURROW: Mr. President, you say in your book that when you became President you did not know about the atom bomb. Is it your feeling that the Vice President should always be thoroughly informed of all aspects of the executive functions of the government?

TRUMAN: That's absolutely true—he should be—but the reason I didn't know about the atomic bomb—that was the best kept secret that any government ever had, and it was necessary to keep it secret. I was informed as far as I could be from the time I became Vice President until I became President, but that only lasted 82 days, and I wasn't fully broken in as a Vice President in that time.

When Senator Barkley became Vice President of the United States and when I was President, Senator Barkley was kept completely informed on everything that went on—foreign and domestic—and he was a wonderful Vice President and never violated the confidence. That's one of the difficulties that the President has in talking about his business of the government to anybody outside his immediate circle.

MURROW: I suppose because everyone's looking for a headline.

TRUMAN: That's absolutely true, and of course, the Vice President, as I said in the book, is very much surrounded by the best politicians in the world. I think the United States Senate is the best association of politicians I know of. They're all fine men but when they have a chance to scoop the rest of the Senators, they can't resist the temptation.

MURROW: Since 1841, this nation has been headed twenty-one per cent of the time by men never elected as President. Ten of our thirty-six Vice Presidents have become President. Seven, through the accident of death. In some cases they have surpassed in ability the men they succeeded, but nevertheless, the manner of selecting Vice Presidential candidates remains an after-thought. The Founding Fathers were determined that the Vice President should be the second best qualified man in the country. Under the present system, a man may become President whose qualifications have not been examined fully either by the people of the country or by his own political Party. The importance of the office of Vice President has increased. The care with which the candidate is selected has not increased. The future of Western civilization may be determined by tired politicians, exhausted after a long struggle to nominate a Presidential candidate and then indifferent to the gamble they take when they nominate the man who may succeed him. Many suggestions have been made as to methods of altering the selection of Vice Presidential candidates, but this would seem not to be a matter of machinery but of standards. No law can guarantee that the second best man will hold the second highest office in the land.

We have presented this report on the Vice Presidency in the hope of stimulating discussion of the methods of selection used by both political Parties, and in the hope, perhaps vain, that at the next Conventions, the delegates and the citizens will remember that it is no minor matter to us and to the free world who is selected as Vice Presidential candidates for both Parties.

Good night and good luck.

Dear Fred:

The local dinosaurs relented and allowed us to see your show on education and the school problem. Once again, salutations for a first-rate job. So long as you go unsponsored for work like this it is going to be impossible to avoid a sinking feeling of apprehension about the future of this fantastic medium.

MR. MURROW, I JUST GOT BACK FROM A TRIP IN WHICH I SPENT FIVE DAYS WITH YOUR PHOTOGRAPHIC TEAM, CONSISTING OF ART MORSE, MARTY BARNETT, AND LARRY GIANNESCHI. AND WHAT A GROUP!

IN ORDER TO MEET YOUR TIMETABLE FOR YOUR EDUCATION SHOW, WE HAD TO MAKE ARRANGEMENTS FOR CHILDREN TO BE AT THE SCHOOLS SATURDAY AND SUNDAY. OF COURSE, THEY WERE VERY WILLING, BUT WILD AND WOOLLY. THE THING THAT IMPRESSED ME THE MOST WAS HOW YOUR THREE MEN HANDLED THESE KIDS. THEY DID IT WITH A WARM, FRIENDLY SPIRIT THAT THE KIDS LITERALLY ATE UP.

THANKS FOR SENDING SUCH NICE GUYS DOWN TO PHOTOGRAPH OUR SCHOOL BUILDINGS AND THE CHILDREN WHO USE THEM. YOUR CREW HAS THE SAME HUMANISTIC APPROACH WHICH WE TRY TO ACHIEVE IN THE DESIGN OF OUR SCHOOL BUILDINGS. THESE THREE MEN ARE NOT ONLY HIGHLY COMPETENT PEOPLE IN THEIR RESPECTIVE FIELDS, BUT ARE NICE GUYS BESIDES. IF THEY REPRESENT THE ENTIRE EDWARD R. MURROW ORGANIZATION, YOU SHOULD BE VERY PROUD.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I wish to congratulate you and Mr. Fred Friendly for the excellent work done on "See It Now" on November 27. The show was the best documentary I have seen, and it presented the issue of our Jefferson County school situation honestly and objectively.

It was a real pleasure for our Church to have a part in the program. Actually, the interest the filming aroused in our congregation could not have come at a better time for us. We were just beginning a Building Fund Canvass for new church facilities; and the result has been thrilling: we over-subscribed our initial goal of $ 80,000!

You are to be commended for the fine "field crew" which supervised the filming for the show. All three men were very courteous, efficient and friendly in their work.

Sincerely,

We are grateful that in spite of your busy schedule you took time to visit in our state and spend some time in the Jefferson County area.

Dr. Johnson invited me to attend the meeting, but other commitments prevented my being present. I am sorry I didn't get an opportunity to meet you.

Please accept my sincere thanks and that of my colleagues in the Colorado school system.

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To Ed Murrow

From Arthur Morse

Station

August 22, 1955

Re: Tuesday lunch about education show

Present will be Roy Larsen, President of Time, Inc. and Chairman, National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools; Henry Toy, Director of the Citizens Commission; and Gloria Dapper, one of their assistants.

The Citizens Commission, supported by Carnegie and Rockefeller funds, has done an exceptional job in stimulating lay interest in education on a local level. They have assisted independent citizens committees throughout the country who have been willing to cut across social and economic lines in furthering education. They require cross-sectional participation in each town. About 10,000 such groups are now operating . In addition, they have helped to organize 31 state-wide citizen groups. The Commission has four regional offices keeping fingers on the local pulse.

Larson and Toy have traveled extensively and have been exposed to all types of community situations. They are held in high regard by local layleaders as well as by most of the top professionals. They have kept the Citizens Commission free from any doctrinaire approach, and in fact as well as statement, have not plugged for any philosophy of education. However, their stimulation of local interest and distribution of materials about the heritage of free public education has had an enlightening effect all over the country.

The original intention of the White House Conference on Education (scheduled for November) was to organize state-wide meetings which would examine problems and then send representatives to Washington. But the Citizens Commission and the National School Boards Association have extended this down to the school-district level so that thousands of community conferences will now precede the state meetings. As a result of this, about half a million people will be involved (and my visit to the White House Conference staff leads me to think that this has become somewhat embarassing since Federal Aid Proposals are inescapable).

The Commission and its regional people are giving us invaluable cooperation in digging up local materials. I believe Larson and Toy can be helpful in terms of broad perspective.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

This is the signature of an American original -- Anna Mary Robertson Moses -- born on the Vermont-New York border ninety-five years ago. Have you decided yet what picture you're going to paint next, Grandma Moses?

GRANDMA MOSES:

No, I haven't. I'm going to try to get into something different than what I have been doing.

MURROW:

What -- what sort of thing? Have you decided

MOSES:

Well, more -- more modern. I've been inclined to -- paint old scenes. I suppose 'cause I'm old.

MURROW:

Or old enough to now go modern. (MURROW LAUGHS)

MOSES:

I was born in the days of the hoops.

mm

MURROW:

Well, you weren't sad to see the hoop skirts disappear. Were you?

MOSES:

They're comin' back. (MURROW LAUGHS) Comin' back fast.

LOUIS ARMSTRONG PLAYS TRUMPET

EDWARD R. MURROW:

This is another American original - Louis "Satchmo" Armstrong, born in New Orleans July 4th, 1900.

MURROW: Louis, is there any relationship between boogie woogie and gut bucket?

ARMSTRONG: Oh, I don't think so, Mr. Murrow. They're both rhythematical. Did that come out of me?

MURROW: Yes, that's fine.

ARMSTRONG: Well anyway, you take the boogie woogie. There's a .. (TAPS FEET) -- and the gut bucket, oh wah, wah. They're both swinging, you see, so that's us. You know, you can tap your foot to it. Jazz is a variety of all good music, and the only way to sum up music -- they ain't but two things in music, good and bad. Now, if it sounds good, you don't worry what it is. You're just goin' to enjoy it. See what I mean? And anything you can tap your foot to is good music.

mr

EDWARD R. MURROW:

This might be called SEE IT NOW'S first annual festival of art, presenting some of the works of Grandma Moses and Louis Armstrong, whose triumphs have gone all the way from red calico to blue notes; from oaken buckets to gut buckets; from the Civil War of the 19th Century to the cold war of the 20th.

Grandma Moses is our first effort at color television. She was born two months before Mr. Lincoln took office. She sold her first picture at the age of 72 in Franklin Roosevelt's administration. She has done more than a thousand paintings. They hang in the Metropolitan Museum of Art here in New York, in the White House, and in the modern section of the Louvre in Paris. Her current exhibition here in New York City is attracting some 1200 people a day. We spent some time with Grandma Moses up at Eagle Bridge on the Vermont-New York border. We were impressed with her hands and with her eyes.

MURROW: You had an ancestor who came over on the Mayflower. Didn't you, Grandma Moses?

MOSES: I came on it myself -- (MURROW LAUGHS) -- some of my blood.

MURROW: Tell me, do you ever put yourself in your paintings?

MOSES: No. I never have.

MURROW: You haven't?

MOSES: No.

MURROW: Why have you never done Biblical paintings, Grandma Moses?

mr

MOSES: Well, because you don't know -- it's all guess work, and I don't think that's just right to paint those things. I don't think it's any right to paint things about the Bible that you don't really know well enough to talk about it, but when you don't know for a certainty, I think maybe they're going to find out a great deal later years than they have known. But unless you do know, I don't believe in doing it. Well now, as I say about these paintings, this is imagination.

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: I can see the things, but I can't explain 'em and make 'em just as they were in colors and everything, you know.

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: They wouldn't be very fascinating. So I paint them to make them look pretty. If you look at a picture and you like it, you look back at it. If you don't like it, you pass it on and look at another one. Isn't that so?

MURROW: Yes, that's so. Do you hate to see a painting sold after you've made it and like it, and looked at it a long time.

MOSES: Oh, no. No.

MURROW: No?

MOSES: No. I'd rather see the money.

MURROW: You don't have any attachment to it.

mr

MOSES: No, not at all.

MURROW: Well, Grandma Moses, for people who don't have to work as hard as you did when you were young -- what sort of advice would you give to those people if they had time to try their hand at painting?

MOSES: Well, anybody can paint that wants to paint.

MURROW: Can they?

MOSES: Oh, sure, sure. Anybody can paint.

MURROW: I couldn't I'm sure.

MOSES: Yes you could too. Here. Here now, let's just see if you can't draw a picture.

MURROW: No. I -- I..

MOSES: Right here now. Make a man right there on the -- that.

MURROW: I couldn't make a man.

MOSES: Make a tree then.

MURROW: Well, a tree I can...

MOSES: Sure. Now, you put on branches -- branches. Sure, anybody. You keep on trying and trying. You do better all the while.

MURROW: And so your advice to anyone who would like to learn to paint is to just paint. Is that right?

MOSES: Yes, commence to paint -- not to be taught anything except the mixing colors...

MURROW: Uh, uh.

MOSES: ...because if they have a teacher they will soon paint as the teacher paints, and it's best for them to use their own ideas.

MURROW: Was that what you did when you painted the picture of the Battle of Bennington?

MOSES: No. I tried to follow old sayings about the Battle of Bennington.

MURROW: This is the picture of the Battle of Bennington when Burgoyne came up. Isn't it?

MOSES: Yes. The three armies met there...

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: ...and Burgoyne was whipped out.

MURROW: But you made that a literal painting. Didn't you?

MOSES: As I'd been told - that is Bennington.

fad

MURROW: And how long did it take you to paint that, Grandma Moses?

MOSES: Well, maybe ten days -- something like it -- not so long. Of course, the fine work - the soldiers, were finer work - that takes longer because you got to give them two coats of paint to have them stand out. The Bennington boys were comin' down to head off the army that was comin' up from the south.

MURROW: Why did you put the monument in that picture, Grandma Moses?

MOSES: Well, I didn't know much about that Battle of Bennington. All I know about that is the hearsay, and there's always envy between Vermont and New York -- always had been.

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: So that made it worse -- so they compromised it by one of them taking the park and the other one putting up the battle -- putting up the monument.

MURROW: And so you just decided that you'd put the monument in -- in your picture?

MOSES: Well, I put the monument in 'cause it looked good, I guess.

MURROW: Is this the table where you do your painting?

MOSES: Yes. This is the old table where I always did all my painting on when I was up home. Now, I do it on a smaller stand.

MURROW: That's a very old table. Isn't it?

MOSES: Yes, this is a very old table. It was built for a log cabin away back in seventeen -- 1762, I think it is.

MURROW: 1762 -- and did -- did you paint it?

MOSES: I painted it, yes. It was painted red, you know, like this here -- this shade of red like the old-fashioned things were painted in those days.

MURROW: When did you paint it?

MOSES: Oh, it must be forty-five years ago -- about the very first painting I did. I painted it. Now, see, this is my house -- this is the house that was built afterwards.

MURROW: Uh, uh.

MOSES: But the first -- the first house was a little [illegible] You see it on the other side.

MURROW: Oh yes. You've got a mill wheel here too. Haven't you?

MOSES: Yes there was a mill there. Every stream had mills on it in those days.

fad

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: This was built for a log cabin house.

MURROW: It's a lovely thing, too.

MOSES: Well, t'was the age.

MURROW: Now, let's go back. Do you remember what you were taught about geography when you were in school?

MOSES: No. I had -- I had a geography - I used to stand very high in geography. I wish now I had some of the maps that I drew of the different countries in geography. I excelled in that -- just had that hobby. It's all gone from me. But when my mother was a girl going to school, they had maps strung across the schoolroom, and after dinners they always had -- one map was let down for the geography lesson, and one scholar was chosen to point out and all sing a song as they wrote, as they pointed out like -- like the Lakes.

GRANDMA MOSES SINGING:

"Oh, Winnipeg, dear Winnipeg, if you would been my bride"

MOSES: You know where Winnipeg lives -- is?

MURROW: Yes. Yes.

fed

GRANDMA MOSES SINGING:

"I'd take you down to Alabast and be your slave, he sighed,
This so displeased Miss Winnipeg, she called him a Great Bear"

MOSES: Great Bear Lake - south towards the Rockies.

MURROW: Yes.

GRANDMA MOSES SINGING:

"And at the slave she threw the salt
And tools and all t'was there"

MOSES: Now, you know where those Lakes are.

MURROW: Yes, I do.

MOSES: Well, the scholar would have to point to those Lakes as they sang.

MURROW: What a good way to learn geography, too.

MOSES: It certainly was.

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: It was wonderful for youngsters - all of us. And then the mountains - that was likewise in a sing-song.

fad

GRANDMA MOSES SINGING:

"From Hectic's flaming peak we'd go To the Arctic region heaped of snow"

MOSES: Feet...

SINGING: "Two thousand miles o'er the Rocky chains
To Mount..."

MOSES: What is it? Mount -- what are those mountains up in Alaska there?

MURROW: McKinley?

MOSES: No. No. Not McKinley. I'd have to get my verses and see what it says. It...

GRANDMA MOSES SINGING:

"Three thousand miles o'er the Rocky chains..."

MOSES: Mount somebody. I just can't tell you. I don't know. I can't tell you. I can find it though.

MURROW: It's -- well, the Cascades run up into British Columbia.

MOSES: Yes. These were high mountains. In those days they didn't pay any attention to those low mountains.

(MURROW LAUGHS)

It 'twas the high mountains.

fad

MURROW: You did one painting of a scene down in the Shenandoah Valley. Didn't you?

MOSES: I did. Long, long ago. I painted that for my son. He wanted me to paint the -- his birth-place down South. That's how I come to paint that. Those Blue Ridge up there is the Blue Ridge.

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: And over there goes the Skyline Drive today. Those green trees down this side was what they called the deep woods. They, I expect now, are all gone. There was a peach orchard in one -- one of those places there. We lived in this lavendar house there in the center.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

MOSES: Those are black walnut trees there, in front of it, and they were cut down while we were there, and if we wanted to cross the river, that was the Shenandoah River, we had to cross it either in a buggy or a boat or horseback. That little building down there is where I made the butter for fifty cents a pound...

MURROW: Uh, uh,

MOSES: ...fifty years ago. That was my first making money.

fad

MURROW: So butter is sort of like paintings. If it's a superior quality it brings a better price. Is that right?

MOSES: Well, I don't know. I don't -- I can't say that my butter's any better than anybody's else's.

MURROW: The President sent you one of his pictures. Didn't he?

MOSES: Yes, but that was long before he was going to be President.

MURROW: Yes. Do you think he has much ability as a painter?

MOSES: Yes. I think he's a very nice painter - I should judge from what I've seen of his work.

MURROW: What do you think of Sir Winston Churchill as a painter?

MOSES: Very good. (LAUGHS) I think he's trying to copy me, though. (MURROW LAUGHS) Yes, he does very good, but how does he get time for that work?

MURROW: Well, perhaps he'll have more time now that he's out of office.

MOSES: Maybe. I hope so. He's -- he's done a good job.

fad

MURROW:

Do you ever look at the paintings of foreign artists?

MOSES:

Some. I never have seen so much. You know, I never been away from home much. Most that I've seen is in pictures.

MURROW:

Have your hands always been as steady as that?

MOSES:

Early in the morning, my hands are pretty steady. Of course, to do real fine work like putting in window lights and so forth into a picture, it's --- unless you have an unusually fine brush.

MURROW:

How did you like Washington when you went there, Grandma Moses?

MOSES:

There are some things I liked very much in it, but I see very little of it.

MURROW:

Grandma Moses, why did you go to Washington on that trip?

MOSES:

I was invited down.

MURROW:

By the President? Wasn't it?

MOSES:

Uh, uh.

MURROW:

That was President Truman.

pf

MOSES:

Uh, uh.

MURROW:

What happened when you got there?

MOSES:

Well, we had -- we had tea, and I went in and there came up a severe thunderstorm while I was there, and we went into this house, and he told us not to -- not to be afraid, he says, Grandma -- 'cus it was Grandma I suppose, is the reason because he didn't want Grandma to be afraid, and to sit down on the settee, and my daughter-in-law sat down on the other corner of it, and he came over and sat down between us, and he says, "This house is a very large house," he says, "and there's a lot of lightning rods on it," and he says they were no danger, so then when we talked about farmin'. I thought he was one of my own boys. He seemed so everyday-body-like. And we talked about different things, and across the room was a very nice piano, and I asked him if he ever played, and yes, he did, I says, "Can you play for us?" And sure enough he did. I can't tell you now just what he played. That's the one time I did know what he played.

MURROW:

Tell me, how many grand-children do you have?

MOSES:

I think I have 17. I haven't counted them lately.

MURROW:

And how many great-grand-children?

pf

MOSES:

Great-grand-children -- that's what I speak of.

MURROW:

Oh, the seventeen. I'm sorry.

MOSES:

Oh well, I have 11 -- 11 grandchildren.

MURROW:

Is it true, Grandma Moses, that you remember Mr. Lincoln's death?

MOSES:

Yes, I can remember his death very well. I was going with my mother and aunt from Greenwich, coming down here toward Eagle Bridge to my grandmother's, and as we came along near Coily above Green--Cambridge, my mother says, "Why," she says, "I see everything is wrapped in black. What does this mean? The trees, the doors, and the posts of the houses." She said, "What does this mean?" And she worried and worried. She got down into Cambridge, and then she says, "I'm going into the store," she says, "and find out what it's all about." So she went into the store and they told her that the President had been assassinated the night before. That is the first that I knew of it. And Mother came out and she felt so bad that she--she shed tears, but Aunt Lib said, "Oh well, she says, "We can't help it," and she went on --- we went on. But that is the first I knew of Lincoln. That is the first I knew there was a President, even.

pf

MURROW:

You can remember Mr. Lincoln's administration and now Mr. Eisenhower's. What do you think is the basic difference? I don't mean in terms of political parties.

MOSES:

Well, I don't remember enough about Lincoln's. The first I remember about Lincoln is what my mother would read or tell us, and I don't remember much about his. We were too small, and then you see, he wasn't -- he wasn't long there.

MURROW:

No. Well, looking back a short distance, Grandma Moses, say sixty years, do you think people are more interested in politics now than they used to be?

MOSES:

Well, I can't say as to that. No, I don't think they are any more than were then - but then the community was smaller.

MURROW:

Yes.

MOSES:

There wasn't so many people then as they are right now, and, of course, if they went into a blacksmith's shop or some place like that, they'd beat up an argument and maybe they'd have a fight before they got through.

MURROW:

Uh, uh.

pf

MOSES:

That's the way it 'twas in those days.

MURROW:

They believed more strongly in things then.

MOSES:

Yes. Yes. They were more determined and the only way was to fist fight it out. Now we talk it out.

MURROW:

Yes. Do you ever look at television?

MOSES:

Sure I do.

MURROW:

Do you like it?

MOSES:

Some of it I like -- some of it I don't like. Some of it I think they'd ought to change. I don't think it's so good for young folks.

MURROW:

What sort of thing do you think ought to be changed?

MOSES:

My -- my daughter says it's just because I'm jealous -- but see those girls come out there, their tights on and goin' to dance and carry on. I don't like that.

MURROW:

Grandma Moses, that picture of Halloween - is that painted from the memory of your childhood perhaps?

pf

MOSES:

Well, a good deal, and there's different pranks that I've heard of. Of course, they used to pay more attention to Halloween than they do nowadays for some reason -- say fifty or forty years ago.

MURROW:

Yes. That's cider they're unloading from the wagon there. Isn't it?

MOSES:

That's cider and that will be for - to drink this winter - the coming winter or for vinegar the next year....

MURROW:

Uh, uh.

MOSES:

..if there's any left.

MURROW:

Or to make applejack.

pf

MOSES: Well, they don't know much about applejack up there.

MURROW: Uh, uh. And they've got the wagon up on the roof. Haven't they?

MOSES: Yes. That's customary. The wagon on the roof or the front porch filled with punkins.

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: ...and cabbages. Somebody's cabbage patch will diminish that night. The chimney--theyfre stuffin' it full of hay to smother out the old folks down underneath.

MURROW: Ah, yes.

MOSES: The witches there are people dressed in sheets to scare this younger generation, and the witches are after'em and, of course, they're all a-very afraid of the witches, and here they're dippin' for apples, and if they can take a apple out of that tub of water with their teeth, without touchin' it, they'll have lots of luck for the next year.

MURROW: from p. 22 [Well, Grandma Moses, what do you see as happening in this world in the next 20 years?

mcf

MOSES: Well, if it keeps up on as it has for the last fifty years, I think we're all goin' to be lost. I don't know. Everything is going to be changed--entirely different it has for the last fifty years, you know.

MURROW: How do you mean"Lost"?

MOSES: Like when I was a child, I used to love red calico so much, and they used to have a bright red calico --bright as these colors here...

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: ...with little figures in it, and I did want a red dress like that, but I never got it, and I asked mother why it was they didn't have it any more. They had had dull reds and browns. Well, she said, "that art has been lost. Well, what lost?"-- why did it get lost? How does it get lost?" "Well," she says, "through war." So much fightin' that there was a lot of those arts that were lost. And they have never found them since then, unless they found them in the last few years.

MURROW: Yes.

mcf

MOSES: But they never found them in her day.

MURROW: Were you always fond of bright colors?

MOSES: Yes, in a way I always did like bright colors. I always wanted a red dress, but I never got one.

MURROW: What--what are you going to do for the next 20 years, Grandma Moses?

MOSES: I'm goin' up yonder. (MURROW LAUGHS) Naturally--naturally I should. After you get to be about so old you can't expect to go on much farther.

MURROW: But you don't spend much time thinking about it or worrying about it. Do you?

MOSES: Oh, no! No. You don't worry because you think, well, what a blessin' 'twill be. What a blessin' 'twill be all united again. I'm the last one left of my four sisters and brothers. My father and mother -- and I guess all my aunts are gone. I've got a few cousins left.

MURROW: So this is something that in a sense you -- you have no fear about or no apprehension?

MOSES: Oh, no. No, we go to sleep and wake up in the next world. I think that's the way--did you ever know when you went to sleep?

MURROW: When I went to sleep?

MOSES: Uh, uh.

MURROW: No, I don't think so.

MOSES: You never knew just when the last...

MURROW: No. That's true.

MOSES: ...When the last thought came you didn't know.

MURROW: That's tturue.

MOSES: You might wake up the next morning and think well that's what I was thinking about, but you didn't know when that last thought came. Well, that's the way you'll go to sleep.

MURROW: Well, you will leave more behind you than most of us will, when you go to sleep.

MOSES: (LAUGHING) I don't know about that. I don't know. They're pretty ambitious.

We'll take you to Europe for a glimpse of the triumphal tour of Louis Armstrong immediately after this live commercial by Nelson Case from the Shulton plant in Clifton, New Jersey.

COMMERCIAL..

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Louis Armstrong is the Prime Minister of the world of jazz. He and his trumpet are at the summit. His European concerts have broken all records. Satchmo is one of our more valuable items for export. His recordings are hot on both sides of the Iron Curtain. Here is our report on the current triumph of Louis Armstrong in Europe. Hannibal crosses the Alps in 218 B.C. with thirty-seven elephants and twelve thousand horses. (BAND PLAYS"INDIANA") Louis Armstrong crossed the Alps in November of 1955 with one trumpet, five musicians and the heritage of King Oliver, W.C. Handy and Bunk Johnson. This is Armstrong and company after victories in Berlin, Brussels and Strasbourg en route to Geneva and Zurich.
Louis lives with that horn even at ten thousand feet over the Swiss Alps.

BAND PLAYS "SLEEPY TIME DOWN SOUTH"

ARMSTRONG SINGS:

"Steamboats up the river comin' and goin'..yes
Splashin' the night away ...(SKAT TALK)
Hear those banjos swingin' and the folks are singing',
And they dance til the break of day.
Dear old Southland with it's dreamy song,
Take me back where I belong.
Right here in my mammy's arms...
SKAT....
Howdy do everybody..."

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Switzerland boasts over a hundred amateur jazz bands and more than half of them are of the Dixie Land variety.

ARMSTRONG: (COMING OFF PLANE) Hey -what you say 'gates? How's all you cats there?(APPLAUSE -LAUGHS) Cats everywhere.

LOUIS JOINS SWISS BAND WITH HIS TRUMPET

ARMSTRONG PLAYS HORN: "WHEN THE SAINTS GO MARCHIN' IN"

EDWARD R. MURROW:

As one Swiss journalist put it, Louis Armstrong and "When the Saints Go Marchin' In" almost made up for the American tariff on Swiss watches. In Zurich and in Geneva it was as it had been in Berlin, Hamburg (where there had been riots), in Brussels, Amsterdam and Copenhagen --America's old fashioned weapon was a blue note in a minor key.

ARMSTRONG AND BAND PLAYING "ST. LOUIS BLUES"

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Everywhere that Armstrong and his All Stars traveled there were crowds to greet them. Louis Armstrong, who had helped move jazz outof the New Orleans honky tonks to Chicago and New York, who has pushed it across the oceans to the great capitals of Europe, now was taking it to the Provinces.

LOUIS AND WIFE GET OFF TRAIN.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

It is reported that Armstrong's "Mop Mop" is a big favorite behind the Iron Curtain. It was also solid in Palermo this week.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

But most of all Satchmo loves Paris and Paris loves Satchmo to the extent of three capacity weeks at the Olympia Theater. As one music critic put it, Satchmo's voice has all the smoothness of a tired piece of sand paper calling to its mate.

ARMSTRONG SINGING: "C'EST SI BON"

"Oh, C'est Si Bon -lovers say it in France
As they swing to romance-because it's oh so good
Yes -C'est Si Bon -I'll say to you -nothing else will do
Baby, it's so good!
Yeah, every word, every sound, every kiss, dear
Leads to only one thought-and it's this, dear
Oh, it's so good -nothing else...
Just your..and everyone...
Be my own
'Til the rest of my days...yes...C'est Si Bon"

EDWARD R. MURROW:

(OVER ARMSTRONG IN DRESSING ROOM.)

Armstrong has been doing a minimum of two shows a day for the last two months. It's hard work, rough on the lips and tough on the lungs, but Louis trains like a boxer---well almost -- Often after a tough day, Louis and his wife get away from it all by going to a small night club like the Vieux Colombier on Paris' Left Bank.

Claude Luter, a French disciple of Louis', plays "Struttin' With Some Barbecue" by that well known American composer, Louis Armstrong. Robert Frost has written: "There is a (MUSIC) time when work and need are one...when avocation and vocation are united." Thus, it has been with Louis Armstrong ever since a New Orleans orphanage gave him his first horn.(MUSIC)

The French have a word for what followed ---"jam session."

MURROW

Louis, it's six o'clock in the morning. This basement here in Paris is empty. Don't you ever get tired?

ARMSTRONG

Well daddy, I'm just a little beat for my youth.

MURROW

You had quite a session here tonight. Didn't you?

ARMSTRONG

Yeah -- with Claude Luter and his boys -- them cats, they was really swingin'.

MURROW

You didn't seem to have any trouble with the language at all, although you couldn't understand what they said, and they couldn't understand what you said.

ARMSTRONG

Well, there's one thing about good jazz. You don't have to worry about what they're talking about, but when you pick up those instruments, we all speak the same language.

MURROW

Someone was telling me you had a little trouble with the language in Switzerland the other day. Didn't you?

ARMSTRONG

Well, there - it was a cute little incident there. It was a funny thing. I was sittin' in the cabaret, and this waiter, he seemed to be very fond of me, and every time he passed, he'd give me a big smile, and -- and I'd say, "solid", you know. So he passed about three times and when he passed by the third time, he said -- and I said, "solid, Jack, " and don't you know, he went in the kitchen and came back with a big bowl of salad...(MURROW AND ARMSTRONG LAUGH) ...broke it up, dad.

MURROW

Louis Armstrong, you're sort of an ambassador with the horn. You been having a good time?

ARMSTRONG

Oh, everywhere -- everywhere I'm just telling you -- in all the countries and with all the musicians. After we get off and we go to a party or something where there's a band, all we do is pick up the instrument -- what are you going to play -- just start playing the same as we did in the Tail Gates in New Orleans.

MURROW

Uh, uh.

ARMSTRONG

It's the same music and it's universal, daddy.

rt

MURROW: What do you think your mother would think if she could see you on this triumphal tour of Europe that you're having?

ARMSTRONG: Well, she'd say--- is that my son blowin' on that horn.

MURROW: You going to Russia?

ARMSTRONG: I'd rush in there just as fast as they can send me. I mean, after all, my public is the same all over the world. They play for all the countries and all languages. They know I don't speak but one language, and that's bad English, but still and all they know the music's goin' to be great, so the government is thinking about sending me into Russia, then if we ever get -- let me tell you a incident, Mr. Murrow. In '53, I played Berlin, and I can't count the Russians that came through the Iron Curtain to hear "our Louis", That's the way they expressed it. When we all met at the Hot Club, they stood up and said it was a pleasure to take the chance to hear "Our Louis", and anybody say that the Russians don't love good jazz, oh you send 'em to me. You know?

MURROW: Well now, tell me this--if you went to Russia and had a chance to sit down with Bulganin and Khrushchev, for example, the two top men--the big cats in Russia--what would you say to them?

ARMSTRONG: Well, probably I won't see them cats. I'm lookin' for them Hot Club members, and if they come in and-what you say "gate, tell me, that will be all right with me. I mean, I wouldn't know who they are other than that, and they throw them Hot Club buttons on me I mean-- just sit down, daddy, have a good time. Don't worry about nothin'.

MURROW: Alright now, Louis, I know very little about music--as you know. Would you like to educate me a little?

ARMSTRONG: Well ...

MURROW: For example, what's the meaning of gut bucket?

ARMSTRONG: Gut bucket--that--a low and gutteral music, you know. (LOUIS GROWLS)...You know what I mean-but you don't do that all night.

MURROW: Uh, uh.

ARMSTRONG: You know what I mean? You play that for a tune and then you play a beautiful thing you can swing a such as "La Vie En Rose" "C'est Si Bon," all those tunes are considered under the jazz area. Now, it's the same thing when we played in Milano--- after I finished my concert at the Lyon Concert Hall, I'd rush over to the LaScala and stand by those big cats like Verdi and Wagner and all them and take pictures, (MORE)

ARMSTRONG: (CTD.) {Cause they figure our music's the same--we play 'em both from the heart...

MURROW: Uh, uh.

ARMSTRONG: ...Although they sing opera and they express themselves, but when we play, we express ourselves, and they wanted that picture to put up in the lobby...

MURROW: Uh, uh.

ARMSTRONG: ... me standing by those big boys there.

MURROW: I imagine that you would like to have another big boy with you on this trip---King Oliver. Wouldn't you?

ARMSTRONG: Oh, I love him 'cause after all he's my idol and he did more for the young musicians in my area than anyone that I know of. He would - we'd be walking up Rampart Street and run into Joe Oliver. We might have a lesson or a piece of music that was buggin' us. You dig?

MURROW: Yeah, I dig that.

ARMSTRONG: You dig. Okay Daddy, and I'd say, "PApa Joe, how you divide that? " He'd stop no matter where he was going and show it to us, where the rest of us would say, "Boy, I got no time" breaking our neck to get to the Eagle saloon. See?

mcf

MURROW: Uh uh.

ARMSTRONG: That's why we all love Joe Oliver.

MURROW: Well now, what's cool?

ARMSTRONG: Cool?

MURROW: Yes.

ARMSTRONG: In my estimation, it's a cat that's playing the trumpet and is lazy to hit a high note--he's too lazy ...(INDICATING WITH HAND)...Yeah.

MURROW: Alright. Now, what's Bop?

ARMSTRONG: Bop?

MURROW: Yes.

ARMSTRONG: What is that?

MURROW: I don't know. I'm asking you.

ARM[illegible]: Well, we haven't talked about it in so long, I mean...

MURRO[illegible] Alright. We'll discard it.

ARMSTRONG: I mean, it's been gone out--a passing fancy, dazzy.

MURROW: Alright, I see. Now, what's a cat?

mcf

ARMSTRONG: A cat? A cat can be anybody--from the guy in the gutter to a lawyer, doctor, the biggest man and the lowest man, but if He's in there with a good heart and enjoy the same music together--he's a cat, daddy.

MURROW: Well, you know listening to you tonight, I think I became a "cat" for the first time. (MURROW LAUGHS)

ARMSTRONG: Well, I always thought you were a "cat" when you used to sign off--"Dig Murrow tomorrow." (MURROW AND ARMSTRONG LAUGH)

MURROW: Alright. Let's go on--let's go on with my education.

ARMSTRONG: Yeah.

MURROW: Louis, what's barrel house?

ARMSTRONG: Barrel house--well it's all wrapped up in that-(LOUIS SINGING) "Oh, The Bucket's Got a Hole in It--OH" -- you know what I mean?

MURROW: Yes, I do.. I do.

ARMSTRONG: We played in--we played in Germany one concert the first time we went there, and the people was sitting there with those lorgnettes when they first come in, and we got down to "The Bucket's Got A Hole In It" they put them down, and "yeah daddy", that's -- that's the kind of music we call gut bucket...(MORE)

ARMSTRONG: (CTD.) (MURROW LAUGHS) ...and it's all in the area of jazz.

MURROW: Anybody ever call you Dipper any more the way they used to in New Orleans when you were a kid?

ARMSTRONG: Oh well, how many people know my name was Dipper?

MURROW: I do.

ARMSTRONG: Well--well, you're one of the -- one of the boys way back there, you know how---now dig this---I got the name Satchmo and they took the name from--Dipper from me. When I arrived in London in 1932, I run into the editor of "The Melody Maker" -- Percy Brooks...

MURROW: Yes.

ARMSTRONG: ...and the first thing he said, "Hello Satchmo," so I say, "What you say, daddy?" You know-- but when I ask my trombone player, who [illegible] and I asked him-- I said, "Why did he call me Satchmo? He say, "Beaause the man thought you had more mouth." (MURROW AND ARMSTRONG LAUGH)

MURROW: I never heard that.

ARMSTRONG: Yes - it was Satchelmouth, see but when he called me Satchmo, well he took a look at them crumb brushers and said it's more than that.

MURROW: Well, you know, Satchmo, what are you going to do when you don't any longer put that trumpet to your chops as you said a moment ago?

ARMSTRONG: What am I going to do ?

MURROW: You going to blow that trumpet with your last breath?

ARMSTRONG: Well, why should we talk about that. After all, with my Swiss Kriss I can live a hundred years. Man, are you kidding? (LAUGHS)

MURROW: Louis Armstrong, one final question- you're at the top of your profession. Why do you work so hard?

ARMSTRONG: Well, I love my work and the people think I'm working hard, but it's just a pleasure for me, I'm tellin' you, because I live my horn and I love my audience, and they love me, and we just have one good time every time I get up on the stage-- and it's such a lovely pleasure.

MURROW: Well, Louis, let's cut out of here before we get swept out. Shall we?

ARMSTRONG: Yes. Now take me with you. Take me with you, daddy, 'cause I know you got all that loot in your pocket. Get me one of them B and B's "Meet Millie" and "Red Skelton" were not seen tonight but will return next week as usual over many of these stations.

December 13, 1955

MURROW TALKED ON RADIO AND TELEVISION WITH SOLDIERS, STATESMEN, ACTORS, MUSICIANS, [redacted] OTHER REPORTERS, BUT HIS INTERVIEW ON "SEE IT NOW" WITH GRANDMA MOSES IN HER NINETY-SIXTH YEAR WAS ONE OF A KIND.

MURROW: You had an ancestor who came over on the Mayflower, didn't you, Grandma Moses?

MOSES: I came on it myself. (MURROW LAUGHS) Some of my blood.

MURROW: Tell me, do you ever put yourself in your paintings?

MOSES: No. I never have.

~~MURROW: You have not?~~

~~MOSES: No.~~

MURROW: Do you hate to see a painting sold after you've made it and like it and looked at it a long time?

MOSES: Oh, no. No.

MURROW: No?

MOSES: No, I'd rather see the money.

MURROW: You don't have any attachment to it.

MOSES: No, not at all.

~~MOSES: No, not at all.~~

MURROW: Well, Grandma Moses, for people who don't have to work as hard as you did when you were young, what sort of advice would you give to those people if they had time to try their hand at painting?

MOSES: Well, anybody can paint that wants to paint.

MURROW: Can they?

MOSES: Oh, sure, sure. Anybody can paint.

MURROW: I couldn't, I'm sure.

MOSES: Yes you could, too. Here. Here now, let's just see if you can't draw a picture.

MURROW: No. I -- I...

MOSES: Right here now. Make a man right there on the -- that.

MURROW: I couldn't make a man.

MOSES: Make a tree then.

MURROW: Well, a tree I can...

MOSES: Sure. Now, you put on branches -- branches. Sure, anybody. You keep on trying and trying. You do better all the while.

MURROW: And so your advice to anyone who would like to learn to paint is just to paint. Is that right?

MOSES: Yes, commence to paint, not to be taught anything except mixing colors. Because if they have a teacher, they will soon paint as the teacher paints, and it's best for them to use their own ideas.

MURROW: Is this the table where you do your painting?

mr

MOSES: Yes. This is the old table where I always did all my painting on when I was up home. Now, I do it on a smaller stand.

MURROW: That's a very old table. [redacted]

MOSES: Yes, ~~this is a very old table.~~ It was built for a log cabin away back in seventeen -- 1762, I think it is.

MURROW: [redacted] And did -- did you paint it?

MOSES: I painted it, yes. It was painted red, you know, like this here -- this shade of red like the old-fashioned things were painted in those days.

MURROW: When did you paint it?

MOSES: Oh, it must be forty-five years ago, [redacted] about the very first painting I did. ~~I painted it. Now, here, this is my house. This is the house that was built afterwards.~~

~~MURROW: Uh, uh.~~

~~MOSES: But the first -- the first house was a little log cabin. You see it on the other side.~~

~~MURROW: Oh yes. You've got a mill wheel here too. Haven't you?~~

~~MOSES: Yes, there was a mill there. Every stream had mills on it in those days.~~

fad

MURROW: You did one painting of a scene down in the Shenandoah Valley, didn't you?

MOSES: I did. Long, long ago. I painted that for my son. He wanted me to paint the -- his birth-place down South. That's how I come to paint that. ~~There Blue Ridge~~ Up there is the Blue Ridge.

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: And over there goes the Skyline Drive today. Those green trees down this side was what they called the deep woods. They, I expect now, are all gone. There was a peach orchard in one -- one of those places there. We lived in this lavendar house there in the center.

~~MURROW: Oh, yes.~~

~~MOSES: These are black walnut trees there, in front of it, and they were cut down while we were there, and if we wanted to cross the river, that was the Shenandoah River, we had to cross it either in a buggy or a boat or horseback.~~ That little building down there is where I made the butter for fifty cents a pound...

MURROW: Uh, uh,

MOSES: ...fifty years ago. That was my first making money.

MURROW: So butter is sort of like paintings. If it's a superior quality, it brings a better price. Is that right?

MOSES: Well, I don't know. [redacted] I can't say that my butter's any better than anybody's else's.

MURROW: The President sent you one of his pictures. Didn't he?

MOSES: Yes, but that was long before he was going to be President.

MURROW: [redacted] Do you think he has much ability as a painter?

MOSES: Yes. I think he's a very nice painter — I should judge from what I've seen of his work.

MURROW: What do you think of Sir Winston Churchill as a painter?

MOSES: Very good. (LAUGHS) I think he's trying to copy me, though. [redacted] Yes, he does very good, but how does he get time for that work?

MURROW: Well, perhaps he'll have more time now that he's out of office.

MOSES: Maybe. I hope so. He's -- he's done a good job.

fad

~~MURROW:~~

~~Do you ever look at the paintings of foreign artists?~~

~~MOSES:~~

~~Some. I never have seen so much. You know, I never been away from home much. Most that I've seen is in pictures.~~

MURROW:

Have your hands always been as steady as that?

MOSES:

Early in the morning, my hands are pretty steady. Of course, to do real fine work like putting in window lights and so forth into a picture, it's --- unless you have an unusually fine brush.

MURROW:

How did you like Washington when you went there, Grandma Moses?

MOSES:

There are some things I liked very much in it, but I see very little of it.

MURROW:

Grandma Moses, why did you go to Washington on that trip?

MOSES:

I was invited down.

MURROW:

By the President? Wasn't it?

MOSES:

Uh, uh.

MURROW:

That was President Truman.

MOSES:

Uh, uh.

MURROW:

What happened when you got there?

MOSES:

Well, we had [redacted] tea, and I went in and there came up a severe thunderstorm while I was there, and we went into this house, and he told us not to -- not to be afraid, he says, Grandma -- 'cus it was Grandma I suppose, is the reason because he didn't want Grandma to be afraid, and to sit down on the settee, and my daughter-in-law sat down on the other corner of it, and he came over and sat down between us, and he says, "This house is a very large house," he says, "and there's a lot of lightning rods on it," and he says they were no danger, so then when we talked about farmin'. I thought he was one of my own boys. He seemed so everyday-body-like. And we talked about different things, and across the room was a very nice piano, and I asked him if he ever played, and yes, he did. I says, "Can you play for us?" And sure enough he did. ~~I can't tell you now just what he played. That's the one time I did know what he played.~~

~~MURROW:~~

~~Tell me, how many grand children do you have?~~

~~MOSES:~~

~~I think I have 17. I haven't counted them lately.~~

~~MURROW:~~

~~And how many great grand children?~~

pf

MOSES:

~~Great grand-children -- that's what I speak of.~~

~~MURROW:~~

~~Oh the seventeen. I'm sorry.~~

~~MOSES:~~

~~Oh well, I have 11 11 grandchildren.~~

MURROW:

Is it true, Grandma Moses, that you remember Mr. Lincoln's death?

MOSES:

Yes, I can remember his death very well. I was going with my mother and aunt from Greenwich, coming down here toward Eagle Bridge to my grandmother's, and as we came along near Coily above [redacted] Cambridge, my mother says, "Why," she says, "I see everything is wrapped in black. What does this mean? The trees, the doors, and the posts of the houses." She said, "What does this mean?" And she worried and worried. She got down into Cambridge, and then she says, "I'm going into the store," she says, "and find out what it's all about." So she went into the store and they told her that the President had been assassinated the night before. That is the first that I knew of it. And Mother came out, and she felt so bad that she-- she shed tears, but Aunt Lib said, "Oh well," she says, "We can't help it," and she went on --- we went on. But that is the first I knew of Lincoln. That is the first I knew there was a President, even.

~~MOSES:~~

~~That's the way it was in those days.~~

~~MURROW:~~

~~They believed more strongly in things then.~~

~~MOSES:~~

~~Yes. Yes. They were more determined and the only way was to fist fight it out. Now we talk it out.~~

MURROW:

Do you ever look at television?

MOSES:

Sure I do.

MURROW:

Do you like it?

MOSES:

Some of it I like; some of it I don't like. Some of it I think they'd ought to change. I don't think it's so good for young folks.

MURROW:

What sort of thing do you think ought to be changed?

MOSES:

My daughter says it's just because I'm jealous, but see those girls come out there, their tights on and goin' to dance and carry on. I don't like that.

MURROW: Well, Grandma Moses, what do you see as happening in this world in the next twenty years?

~~MURROW: Now, now, now, now, now, wait a minute. Is that projected from the memory of your childhood perhaps?~~

pf

MOSES: Well, if it keeps up on as it has for the last fifty years, I think we're all goin' to be lost. I don't know. Everything is going to be changed--entirely different it has for the last fifty years, you know.

MURROW: How do you mean"Lost"?

MOSES: Like when I was a child, I used to love red calico so much, and they used to have a bright red calico, bright as these colors here...

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: ...with little figures in it, and I did want a red dress like that, but I never got it, and I asked mother why it was they didn't have it any more. They all had dull reds and browns. She said, "That art has been lost. Well, why did it get lost? How does it get lost?" "Well," she says, "through war." So much fightin' that there was a lot of those arts that were lost. And they have never found them since then, unless they found them in the last few years.

MURROW: Yes.

MOSES: But they never found them in her day.

MURROW: Were you always fond of bright colors?

MOSES: Yes, in a way I always did like bright colors. I always wanted a red dress, but I never got one.

MURROW: What--what are you going to do for the next [redacted] twenty years, Grandma Moses?

MOSES: I'm goin' up yonder. [redacted] Naturally--naturally I should. After you get to be about so old you can't expect to go on much farther.

MURROW: But you don't spend much time thinking about it or worrying about it, do you?

MOSES: Oh, no! No. You don't worry because you think, well, what a blessin' 'twill be. What a blessin' 'twill be all united again. I'm the last one left of my four sisters and brothers. My father and mother -- and I guess all my aunts are gone. I've got a few cousins left.

MURROW: So this is something that in a sense [redacted] you have no fear about or no apprehension?

MOSES: Oh, no. No, we go to sleep and wake up in the next world. I think that's the way. Did you ever know when you went to sleep?

MURROW: When I went to sleep?

MOSES: Uh, uh.

MURROW: No, I don't think so.

MOSES: You never knew just when the last...

MURROW: No. That's true.

MOSES: ...When the last thought came you didn't know.

MURROW: That's true.

MOSES: You might wake up the next morning and think, well, that's what I was thinking about, but you didn't know when that last thought came. Well, that's the way you'll go to sleep.

MURROW: Well, you will leave more behind you than most of us will, when you go to sleep.

MOSES: (LAUGHING) I don't know about that. I don't know. They're pretty ambiticus.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow

New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

This is a belated expression of my sincere appreciation of the way you presented the farm situation to the nation's television audience on January 26.

My impulse at the moment was to write a letter of commendation, but I postponed it in the rush of other matters. As the days have elapsed I have been concerned lest you and the Columbia Broadcasting Company might have some doubts as to whether your presentation was adjudged fair and accurate by persons close to farm conditions. This present concern stems from the fact that you have been subjected to some criticism in Washington.

I have been close to farmers and their problems in the midwest for nearly 40 years. It just happens that I spent some time in Corning, Iowa, last fall. I know some of the men you interviewed. I know the conditions on which they based their comments. I also feel that I have a close acquaintance with farmers of all of the states adjoining Iowa. Finally, I know that it is difficult to depict a national condition in terms of a few local situations. But when your telecast was ended, I could find little criticism of it. It was a fair and objective presentation of the way farmers feel. There is a difference between the way they feel and the way some people think they ought to feel, and you brought that out.

I think you did more to make the nation conscious of the "farm problem" than has been done by any other individual--and that goes for farm leaders as well as reporters and commentators. I hope you and CBS are not in any way discouraged by some of the comments that were directed at you. You have done a national service in the presentation of this problem. May you continue to treat other problems in the same manner. Somebody must do that if our democracy is to remain healthy.

Sincerely,

Howard A. Cowden

Dear Mr. Draper:

First, permit me to apologize for the delay in answering your letter of February 7th. I have just recently returned from two weeks in the Middle East.

I did not ask Mr. Whitmore during the interview to identify the two meat packing companies to which he referred; perhaps I should have. Mr. Whitmore has not been in communication with me since the program, and I do not feel that it would be appropriate for me to suggest to him how or whether he should respond to your communication.

As you are perhaps aware, Secretary Benson is discussing the farm issue over this network for half an hour on February 23rd; and subsequently on March 1st, Senator Anderson will be discussing the same subject.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We have refrained from writing to you with respect to your "See It Now" program on January 26, during which food distributors and the meat packing industry came in for considerable direct or implied criticism. The reason we have refrained from writing you is because we had hoped to be able to find some way of replying to the most unjustified criticism, this having been voiced by Wayne Whitmore, a banker of Corning, Iowa. It seemed to us that the very essence of the criticism of this industry was contained in Mr. Whitmore's remarks.

Mr. Whitmore, being a banker, undoubtedly was acquainted with actual facts but, nevertheless, he took it upon himself to state that he knew two meat packing companies who last year made greater profits than ever before in their history. There is a "trick" in this statement. In the first place, it was made to appear that industry profits were exorbitant, when everybody knows (certainly including bankers) that last year's profits, according to annual reports so far published, averaged less than one cent per dollar of sales; so small as to make no appreciable difference in the price consumers paid for meat and what producers received for their animals. And these profits were on the entire operations, in all fields, of the various packing companies. They did not represent profits on pork operations only. Yet, quite a bit of the program was directed to pork operations. The fact is that most packers of which we have knowledge actually had pens that were running with red ink on pork operations in 1954. Naturally, if a meat packer made a profit in 1955 and he made virtually no profit in 1954, he did much better in 1955. But to state it the way Mr. Whitmore did seems to us to have been entirely misleading.

We have made efforts to have Mr. Whitmore give us the names of the two packing companies to which he referred. He has declined to answer two telegrams, which were entirely courteous and in which we offered to cooperate with him in correcting any misunderstanding his remarks may have left with viewers of your program.

AIR MAIL

We wonder whether Mr. Whitmore consulted you in any way in connection with our request for names. And, if he did not, we wonder whether you would feel free to suggest that he might furnish them, inasmuch as the original arrangements for his appearance on your program were made by you or your associates. We are extremely anxious to have the public understand facts, and these are very different from the way they were made to appear in Mr. Whitmore's remarks.

May we have the pleasure of hearing from you?

Sincerely yours,

Norman Draper

January 26, 1956

Special for FUND FOR THE REPUBLIC, INC.

January 20, 1956

FULTON LEWIS, JR. CRITICAL OF COMING EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM

Fulton Lewis, Jr. at 7:00 P.M. over WOR (N.Y.) & MBS Network:

"Mr. Edward R. Murrow is up to his old political hatchet activities once again, still under the guise of impartial and objective factual reporting. But this time, fortunately, I happen to have caught up with him in advance, and therefore I'm in a position to warn you in advance of what is coming so that you may see the deed as it is committed, which will be next Thursday night from 10:00 to 11:00 P.M., Eastern Standard Time.

"Mr. Murrow came into Washington quite quietly yesterday with the film for the 'See It Now' television program, which is going to be entitled, 'The Farm Problem--A Crisis of Abundance.' He had arranged in advance to have the very respected and reputable editor of an excellent Washington newsletter on farm affairs, Mr. Glenn March (?)--the name of the newsletter is 'The Lowdown on Farm Affairs' --Mr. Glenn March, to gather together some of Mr. March's fellow newsmen and editors here in Washington for a preview of this program and a press conference with Mr. Murrow on the subject.

"As you can well imagine, I was not among those who were honored with an invitation, but I nevertheless found out what was going on. And Mr. Glenn March, when he found out what was going on under his hosting, was entirely horrified.

"The issue of his newsletter, which went to press--to print today, deals with the subject of Mr. Murrow's proposed program most effectively. And inasmuch as this was Mr. March's party, I think the best thing to do by way of reporting the event to you is to read you his version of it as printed in today's newsletter. It is entitled, quote, 'A Clever Hatchet Job,' unquote, and it reads as follows, quote:

"'Edward R. Murrow, whose trademark of CBS television shows, "Person to Person" and "See It Now", is a halo of cigarette smoke, this week will deviate from his usual practice of interviewing national celebrities in their homes to do what purports to be a pictorial review of the nation's farm problem. The editor of this newsletter, one of a group of Washington newsmen who saw a limited preview, would advise that the CBS commentator stick to his celebrities.'

"He then gives the time, the date and the title of the show, and says it, quote, 'gives one of the most distorted pictures of the so-called farm problem this columnist has ever witnessed. To be charitable, someone sold Mr. Murrow a bill of goods.'

"Then it continues, 'When his camera crew and script writers went into the field to gather data, pictorial and otherwise, they were steered into a sector of Iowa where a straight two-year drought has cut deeply into farm income. The inference, of course, is that the plight of farmers in the area stems from a callous, indifferent Administration, which, through its policies, is forcing farmers to the wall and sounding the death knell of the family-sized farm.

"'It is significant that Mr. Murrow selected the little town of Corning, Iowa, for this heart-rendering sequence. Corning, Iowa, is the birthplace and the headquarters of the new National Farm Organization started several months ago by ex-feed salesman, J. Lowre (?), now ostensibly operating as a political front to discredit Secretary Benson and the Administration's farm program. Not only does Mr. Murrow's program turn the spotlight on the home town of the NFO--that is, the National Farm Organization--but gives generous time to NFO's most ardent mouthpiece, the aging ex-Governor, Dan Turner of Iowa. Not a single sequence in which spokesmen for the three major farm organizations are permitted to express their views.'

"Now a subtitle: 'Word Picture of Woe:--The selection of drought-stricken Corning, Iowa, to depict the plight of 5,000,000 farmers could not have played into the hands of the left-wing rabble with more effectiveness if it had been planned deliberately. In this sequence, the picture of the Corning railroad depot was flashed on the screen, with Mr. Murrow's resonant voice painting a word picture of economic woe: "An auction sale on the farm home of Korean veteran, Dale Anderson, forced to sell everything under the hammer because he couldn't make a go of it." Even the heart tugging sale of the baby's crib, which the Anderson baby, for your information, long since has outgrown.

"'Mr. Murrow's voice dripped sympathy over the sale of a second-hand scoop shovel for $2.50, which he says cost Mr. Anderson $7.00 new, and a plow knocked off for $70 which originally cost 250. It was evident that Mr. Murrow has never attended many auction sales, where second-hand machinery and equipment, like used cars, sell well below their original cost, even in good times.

"'In the background, Mr. Murrow wonders out loud at this and like situations in sounding the death knell to the family farm in America, as if the Corning situation is typical of rural America.'

"Subtitle: 'Political significance:--Why did Mr. Murrow pick Corning to portray the plight of farmers everywhere? A newsman asking that question. His reply was that it was recommended by his advisers, but he did not say who his advisers were. Another newsman asked whether Mr. Murrow had considered the fact that his program and its influence might be used politically during the current presidential campaign. Mr. Murrow admitted that the film would be made available for distribution for so-called educational purposes, but said that it would make no attempt to advocate farm policy. Instead, he said, it would merely point up the problems and leave it to the politicians to work out the solution. Which is exactly what the NFO, to which Mr. Murrow apparently has fallen prey, says.'

"The article then goes on to say that Mr. Murrow must be naive, indeed, if he doesn't believe that his program will be used as an authoritative document by the left-wingers bent on socializing American agriculture. And he picks up, quote, 'The Murrow show follows the usual Morrow pattern when he does a hatchet job. After cutting Mr. Benson's throat from ear to ear politically, it proposes to let Mr. Benson have five minutes out of the hour to defend himself, all of which is designed to leave the Secretary dangling with a lame rebuttal which could hardly offset 55 minutes of severe indictment. We note that Murrow used the same pattern on Representative Francis Walter of Pennsylvania and a chief investigator for the Senate Internal Security Committee.'

"And he closes: 'Mr. Murrow can't say that he wasn't told the facts of life about the farm situation. Critics who attended his press conference and preview told him where it erred and pointed out the dangers of misrepresentations to those who will view it and who are not familiar with agriculture and its problems. His reply was that if the show did not do anything more than make farmers itch it would serve his purpose, which indicates that the script will not be changed.'

"And remember, the report you have just heard is by Mr. Murrow's host at the preview.

"So Mr. Murrow is back at his old tricks again, and I suppose the Fund for the Republic will finance distribution of this film as it has done for him on two prior occasions. But at least you know in advance what is coming--what is coming up and how phony it is, and will not be taken in by it."

Dear Ed:

It has been a good many years since I last talked with you in the days when Chet Williams and I were working with John Studebaker on the Federal Forum Program, but I have followed your many activities with admiration and gratitude. It is, perhaps, of some significance that the program last Sunday, on the Jefferson County Schools, made such an impact on this particular viewer that I feel compelled to write and express congratulations and appreciation. I think it is about the best program you have ever done, and that is saying a lot because there have been many outstanding ones in the past few years. In trying to analyse why this came over so much better than your treatment of Dick Poston's program in southern Illinois, for example, I have come to the conclusion that one major reason was the unhurried nature of it. You really gave us time to get to know these people well enough to understand their point of view, and the contrast with the typical twenty-second man-on-the-street interview was overwhelming. Incidentally, that sequence up in the mountain village is a classic contribution to the American heritage. For heaven's sake, do not let this authentic bit of Americana get lost! Pro or con, the people on this show were so wonderful that I will be surprised if there isn't a new migration of settlers to Jefferson County. I felt like moving up there myself.

Anyhow, keep up the good work. Even those of us who only write letters every twenty years are deeply in your debt.

We thought you made a very fair presentation as shown by Senator Symington's comments the following day.

was the key to progress and prosperity, just as commercial war was the enemy.

As a representative of the United States overseas, Gallatin served on a commission that negotiated the Treaty of Ghent with England that concluded the War of 1812. In 1818, he assisted United States Minister Richard Rush in London in concluding a commercial convention. In 1827, at the behest of John Quincy Adams, Gallatin as Minister to England, sent the problems of the delicate northeast boundary dispute with Britain to the King of Holland for arbitration. Had the Senate not rejected Gallatin's efforts in this arbitration, Maine would today be larger by several thousand square miles, for this issue was not to be settled—adversely for the United States—until 15 years later.

In New York City, from 1831 to 1839, Gallatin was president of the national bank which was to bear his name until 1912 when it was absorbed by the Hanover Bank.

Switzerland, the land of his birth, gave the illustrious immigrant the training in fundamentals (he distinguished himself as a scholar at Geneva Academy); while the young republic of America provided him with the opportunity to employ his vast talents in her development.

From time to time in the history of our country's commercial relations with other nations, sight is lost of the wise precepts of Gallatin. Errors in judgment, politically motivated, are often made. One such step backward was committed not long ago when a higher tariff was imposed on Swiss watch imports. This error was more recently compounded by the increased bicycle tariff. Our country's position as a reliable commercial partner has been senselessly and seriously weakened in the eyes of other nations.

But today, since Gallatin was born a Swiss, I would like to mention briefly the problem of trade as it concerns both his adopted and native lands. Since the bulk of the American watch importing industry is centered in my home State, I have a special interest in this matter.

The tariff increase not only hurts the Swiss, but, because of reduced imports, levies a serious threat to the livelihood off American importers, as well as the skilled assemblers who work for them and the wholesale and retail jewelers who sell the watches. The American consumer, whose interest Gallatin had always in mind, and for whom he worked to reduce taxes, is also adversely affected. We must pay more for our watches. Also, with fewer watches being brought in, revenues from import duties are not increased, but rather may actually decrease.

Both within and without my State, the manufacturers and farmers who send goods—for which they are paid in cash—to Switzerland, must view with alarm any attempt to weaken the purchasing power of America's best cash customer in Europe. For it is only reasonable that the Swiss, in shifting markets for their products to other areas, will buy their necessities increasingly from other nations.

Wise tariff policies in Gallatin's time proved to pay substantial dividends. There is to me no doubt that they will today. Let us honor the memory of a great American by looking again at his farsighted policies and adapting them to our present needs in a vastly shrunk and interdependent world.

EZRA T. BENSON, SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the privilege of addressing the Senate for not more than 10 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

The Chair hears none, and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am sure that many of my colleagues will be interested in what I have to say, and I would appreciate their attention, if I may have it.

Some of my colleagues are aware of the fact that in past weeks I have been spending a little time reading publications. For instance, I read the January 16 issue of Life magazine with considerable interest. I am a subscriber to Harper's magazine, and I read with considerable interest an article appearing in the December issue. It was delayed reading, for I have been behind in my reading because of pressing duties in the Senate. However, I did read an article by John Fischer, entitled "The Country Slickers Take Us Again."

Listen, Mr. President, to what Mr. Fischer had to say, and then listen to what someone else had to say about it. I shall quote only a few sentences, and then ask unanimous consent to have the entire article printed in the RECORD.

I read from the article:

Our pampered tyrant, the American farmer, is about to get his boots licked again by both political parties.

I read further from the article:

The record of recent elections indicates that the farmer is generally eager to sell his vote to the highest bidder, and that city people are too indifferent (or benumbed) to resent this legalized corruption, even when the bribe is lifted right out of their own pockets.

Another quotation:

When any hog keeps his jowls in the trough long enough, he gets to thinking he owns the trough.

Listen to this:

The ordinary Iowa farmer has a minimum of two new cars and they are usually brand new Buicks or Oldsmobiles or Cadillacs. These Iowa swinegrowers and steer fatteners are of course better off than many of their brethren in other States.

Listen to this quotation:

As a result, the individual farmer isn't much worse off—only about 5 percent—than he was at the peak of his scandalous wartime prosperity.

Listen to this:

The article says that Assistant Secretary Earl L. Butz contends that "too many people are trying to stay in agriculture."

Reading further:

That is the nub of the whole story—and politicians of both parties have been avoiding it for years. At least 40 million of our 350 million acres of cropland ought to be taken out of production. At least 1 million out of our 5½ million farm families ought to be nudged gradually off the land, and helped to find some useful occupation.

And, Mr. President, he gets better—or worse, I should say. The article goes on to say:

A grand-scale reshuffling of districts, both for Congress and the legislatures, seems to be the only long-range remedy. That will require something akin to an insurrection by the long-swindled city voters—followed by years of patient log-rolling and political maneuver. We can make a start next November, however, by throwing eggs at every candidate who poses as the Farmer's Friend. That will help get rid of one surplus, and a lot of political hypocrisy at the same time.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this nefarious—no, I withdraw the word "nefarious," and will say this injudicious article—be printed in its full text in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COUNTRY SLICKERS TAKE US AGAIN

(By John Fischer)

Our pampered tyrant, the American farmer, is about to get his boots licked again by both political parties.

Before next November's elections, Democrats and Republicans alike will be groveling all over the barnyard as they court the country vote—but the Democratic antics will be the most embarrassing. Nearly all Democratic politicians are now convinced that the farmers offer the largest single block of detachable votes—and many seem willing to use almost any tool of demagoguery which promises to pry it loose from the Republican grasp.

So when Congress opens up for business next month, the Democrats will set up a pious, baritone moan about the wretched plight of American agriculture. They will pass a farm-relief bill, loaded till its axles creak with rigid price supports, loans, conservation payments, and other shabbily disguised subsidies. Then they will pray for the President to veto it. Quite possibly he will have the courage and honesty to do just that—and Democratic Congressmen will then be sure that they have the farm vote in a gunny sack.

This cynicism is probably justified. The record of recent elections indicates that the farmer is generally eager to sell his vote to the highest bidder, and that city people are too indifferent (or benumbed) to resent this legalized corruption, even when the bribe is lifted right out of their own pockets. But don't blame the politicians for this record. They didn't make it. We did—all of us.

Our only excuse is that for 20 years—from 1920 until 1940—the farmers were in pretty bad shape. During these decades, city people got in the habit of giving them handouts, and haven't yet discovered that times have changed. The farmer not only got in the habit of accepting his dole; he came to believe that it belonged to him permanently, as a matter of right. When any hog keeps his jowls in the trough long enough, he gets to thinking he owns the trough.

Just how rugged is the farmer's plight today?

You should have such a plight.

When Harrison Salisbury, of the New York Times, traveled through the Middle West last summer, he reported that "the ordinary Iowa farmer * * * has a minimum of two new cars and they are usually brand new Buicks or Oldsmobiles or Cadillacs." These Iowa swine growers and steer fatteners are of course better off than many of their brethren in other States. Still, the average farm family, taken the country over, has assets totaling about $22,000.

It is true that the slice of the national income which goes to agriculture has shrunk in the last 4 years—that is what the moaning is all about—but the farm population has dwindled too. As a result, the individual farmer isn't much worse off—only about 5 percent—than he was at the peak of his scandalous wartime prosperity.

Everybody knows that it is the taxpayer who keeps the farmers (or rather, a favored group of them) living in clover and Cadillacs; but even the taxpayer seldom realizes how much it is costing him. The Treasury spent nearly $3 billion during the last fiscal year to support farm prices—but that was just the beginning. The scheme is rigged to nick the taxpayer twice; once when he pays to take surplus crops off the market, thus propping up prices; and again when he has to pay these artificial prices at the grocery store.

If you complain, the farmer—or rather the highly skilled lobbyists who front for him in Washington—have a plausible answer:

"Why shouldn't I get a subsidy, when nearly everybody else does? Look at the airlines, the steamship companies, the manufacturers with their tariffs—all getting fat at the taxpayer's expense. That has become the American way of life."

But there is a catch to this argument. The other subsidized industries are producing something that we need or, at least, can use. The farmers are being subsidized to produce millions of tons of things—cotton, wheat, rice, butter, and so on—which we don't need, can't possibly use, and can't even give away.

The Government has "invested" $7 billion to hide these useless crops away in dead storage. Wheat, for example, almost a billion bushels of it, is now overflowing from every grain elevator in the country—stored in old Liberty ships tied up as floating warehouses, heaped in long yellow mounds on the bare ground all through the Southwest. Nobody wants it, because wheat is in mountainous surplus the world over. Yet Washington is encouraging the farmers to plant still more, and promising to take it off their hands at a guaranteed high price.

Who gets the money?

Not the needy farmers. There are some of them—about 1½ million families whose acreage produces less than $1,000 a year. If the Federal bounty went to them, maybe it could be justified as sheer charity. In fact, relatively little of this river of greenbacks ever trickles in their direction.

The big subsidies go to the big farmers, such as the Delta Pine & Land Co., of Scott, Miss. It has $1,292,472 worth of cotton "under loan" to the Government. ("Loan" is part of the elaborate semantics used by the farm lobbyists to conceal the real nature of these subsidies. "Pawn" would be more accurate, since the Government is going to keep the cotton and the farmer the money. Nobody even pretends that these "loans" will ever be paid off.)

The Chandler Co., of Saragosa, Tex., is into the Treasury for $814,000 worth of cotton. Senator HOMER E. CAPEHART, farmer, of Indiana, is on the records for a $21,742 wheat loan. Adams Bros. & Co., of Odebolt, Iowa, got $179,127. The Louisiana Irrigation & Mill Co., of Crowley, La., turned its surplus rice over to the taxpayer for $486,727.

The list runs on for page after alarming page. What it shows is that the big helpings of Government gravy are going to about 2 million farmers—many of them corporations—who grow 85 percent of the total farm output. They operate a little more than a third of the farms. Yet they form the most powerful vested interest in the American economy. Since they dug into their positions of special privilege during Democratic administrations, Mr. Truman does not sound entirely convincing when he describes the Eisenhower regime as "a special privilege government."

In fact, Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson has made a few gingerly efforts to bring a little sense back into our farm economy. Whereupon Democratic Congressmen, and some Republicans, promptly denounced him as a callous-hearted ogre. They pounced with even more indecent glee on one of his understrappers, Assistant Secretary Earl L. Butz, who was indiscreet enough to blurt out the truth.

"Too many people are trying to stay in agriculture," Butz said.

That is the nub of the whole story—and politicians of both parties have been avoiding it for years. At least 40 million of our 350 million acres of cropland ought to be taken out of production. At least 1 million out of our 5½ million farm families ought to be nudged gradually off the land, and helped to find some useful occupation.

One respected economist, Ross D. Robertson, of the St. Louis Federal Reserve Bank, goes much further. He suggests that "it is not inconceivable that 5 percent of the work force could produce all the farm products which the United States and a part of the rest of the world would take at profitable prices." If he is right, we could get along with less than half of the people we are now supporting in agriculture.

The explanation is that during the past 20 years farming has undergone a more sweeping technological revolution than anything industry has yet seen. New machinery, new fertilizers, new varieties of hybrid seed, new pest killers, new techniques have caused an astronomical rise in output, per man and per acre. Elementary commonsense, then, would suggest that the unneeded people ought to be shifted into other job, and the unneeded acres into better uses—notably timber and grass.

Our present farm policy, of course, works in precisely the opposite direction. It tends to freeze both manpower and resources into their present obsolete and wasteful patterns. Moreover, the nostrum favored by most Democratic Congressmen—higher and even less flexible farm supports—would merely freeze these patterns higher still.

Why is it that any word of commonsense about farm problems is such political dynamite? Fundamentally, because our whole political structure, on every level, is stacked in favor of the farmer. North Dakota with its 680,000 people (mostly farmers) elects just as many Senators as New York with its 12 million (mostly city folks). Many a rural Congressman represents only one-half to one-fourth as many voters as his colleagues from city districts. In like fashion, nearly every State legislature is rigged to give an outrageously oversized representation to the country districts. (The political boundaries were drawn years ago, before the cities grew up; they can be changed only by legislative action; and the cornfed statesmen don't like to vote themselves out.)

A grand-scale reshuffling of districts, both for Congress and the legislatures, seems to be the only long-range remedy. That will require something akin to an insurrection by the long-swindled city voters—followed by years of patient log-rolling and political maneuver. We can make a start next November, however, by throwing eggs at every candidate who poses as the farmer's friend. That will help get rid of one surplus, and a lot of political hypocrisy at the same time.

By way of footnote, it might be well to add that the writer of these churlish lines is not merely an exasperated city taxpayer. He is that, all right. But he also comes from a farming family, grew up in farming communities, did a certain amount of farm work himself, owns an interest in farm property, and benefits from farm subsidies which he has done nothing to deserve. This is worth mentioning only because it suggests that there may be other people with a financial stake in our present ridiculous farming system—perhaps more than anybody suspects—who are ready for a change in the direction of sanity.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I would substitute for "injudicious" the word "nefarious."

Mr. HUMPHREY. The article is outrageous. It is designed to set city worker and city dweller against country worker and country dweller. But the author has a right to state his own views, and is entitled to a full expression of his views, wrong though they may be—and those views are, to my mind, unbelievably and incredibly wrong.

Mr. President, in the February issue of Harper's magazine which I hold in my hand, among letters to the editor appears a letter which I now read. Listen to this:

> I have read the article by John Fischer in the December issue of Harpers, with a great deal of interest. It is excellent.

It is signed "Ezra T. Benson, Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C."

Now, Mr. President, Mr. Benson's letter to the editor is not only injudicious; it is another example of the Eisenhower Cabinet getting into print when it ought not to be, but, worse than that, this letter is an insult to every farmer in America. This man should be fired—now—this afternoon.

Mr. President, when the Secretary of Agriculture, as the farmers' spokesman, can endorse statements such as "scandalous wartime prosperity"; when he can endorse statements about farmers such as this: "When any hog keeps his jowls in the trough long enough, he gets to thinking he owns the trough"; when any Secretary of Agriculture can call the farm program "legalized corruption"; when a Secretary of Agriculture can recommend and endorse—not just endorse, but say that such a statement as that the people should stand and throw eggs at Members of Congress, is excellent——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise in defense of Secretary Benson.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I appreciate that.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not true that Mr. Benson, in adopting the policy he has espoused, is merely voicing the opinions and policies of the present administration?

Mr. HUMPHREY. That happens to be my conviction.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then why not center the responsibility where it belongs, and not make Mr. Benson the whipping boy?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I said, first of all, that the administration should fire Mr. Benson, but I did not get around to the latter part of my thought, which is that what we need is a new administration.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator have any suspicion or reason to believe that the letter attributed to the Secretary of Agriculture, which he has just read, may be a forgery? Does the Senator believe it is an authentic letter? I cannot believe it could be authentic.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I would not imagine that Harpers magazine would print a letter with the name of Ezra T. Benson, Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., signed, without being sure it had a genuine letter.

Mr. MORSE. I think that is a reasonable presumption, but I wish to say, frankly, that I am at a loss to understand how the Secretary of Agriculture could write that letter, if he did write it. I have always considered him a very shortsighted reactionary, but I never believed he would supply us with evidence that he would be just a plain fool.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, if the Secretary of Agriculture did not write that letter, I shall be the first to stand on this floor and apologize. I want the Secretary to know that. But I shall not accept the excuse that "someone in my office wrote it, and I signed it, but I did not know about it."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Benson has been Secretary of Agriculture for 3 years, has he not?

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct.

Mr. MANSFIELD. How much have agricultural prices declined during his stewardship?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Approximately 20 percent.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Does he believe in parity?

Mr. HUMPHREY. His chief said he did.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Benson has become quite proficient in speaking out of both sides of his mouth, with one exception, and that is that he is obdurate so far as flexible price supports are concerned. I hope he will come out soon with at least a 90 percent parity bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Let me state my exact purpose, in making these remarks. I did not come to the floor in a trick play with these magazine articles. I read them to members of the committee before I came here, and I was not exactly in a kindly attitude when I read them. My friends on the other side will undoubtedly speak for themselves, but I will say in their behalf that they were indignant and upset. They could not believe that this had happened, but it has happened. It explains what I have repeatedly said is the attitude of the Secretary toward the farm programs. He has made statement after statement in behalf of the administration which indicated that he was not going to administer the programs as they should be administered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the Senator from Minnesota may be extended 5 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Minnesota is recognized for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I wish particularly to thank the junior Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL], who is seeking the floor. He is always courteous and considerate. I shall be glad to reciprocate his kindness.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Did the Senator from Minnesota happen to see the television program last night on which the Secretary of Agriculture appeared?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I regret that I did not. I was at a dinner last night, given in behalf of our colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], where I heard delivered by our friend, Senator MORSE, one of the most brilliant addresses I have ever heard. Therefore, I was unable to see the television broadcast. I should also say that the senior Senator from Oregon was the recipient of the Sidney Hillman award, a singular honor.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I am certain it was a notable occasion, one worthy of the great senior Senator from Oregon.

In the broadcast to which I referred, the Secretary of Agriculture mentioned that at the time he took office, he was much worried about the fall in farm prices which had been in progress during the years prior to his taking office. Does the Senator from Minnesota know that in July 1955 the Secretary of Agriculture said in my State he was happy with the prosperity of the American farmer?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I was not aware of that statement. I am very glad to get this information. I am aware that an economist of the Department of Agriculture, speaking in one of the New England States, I believe it was Massachusetts, reminded the American people, particularly the farmers, that the farmers had been living in a dream world in 1951, and could never expect to return to it.

Of course, other people were living in a nice dream world in 1951. This administration does not want farmers to have dreams; it wants them to have nightmares.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. SYMINGTON. How can the people of the cities be swindled when, according to a group of figures I have seen, labor has increased its return 14 percent; corporations have increased their earnings 18 percent before taxes, and 32 percent after taxes; while the income of the farmer in the same 3-year period has been reduced around 20 percent? How can it be said that the town and city people, laboring people, or business people, are being swindled? I am glad the latter groups received increased incomes. Incidentally, the stock-market values have increased some 50 percent in the last 3-year period. Some of those people say, "How can Mr. Benson approve anyone saying these people have been swindled by American farmers."

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator's figures are self-revealing in terms of what the truth is.

I disagree completely with the article by Mr. Fischer. I do not intend to attack Mr. Fischer. He has a right to his point of view. I will debate the farm question with Mr. Fischer as an individual. But I think it is fair to expect that a man who is the head of a department and who was appointed by a President who said he wanted to see the farmers get 100 percent of parity—I think it is fair to expect that such a Secretary would not endorse this article, and certainly would not say that it was excellent.

It seems to me that what the Secretary should have done was to have demanded equal space in Harpers and to have answered the article, as he did on Ed Murrow's show last night.

Is it not interesting that when there was something favorable for the farmer, as has been reported to me from Mr. Murrow's show, Mr. Benson wants to answer it? I did not hear that Mr. Benson wanted to answer the article in Harpers magazine. If Mr. Benson does not have time to answer it, perhaps it can be answered by the White House.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I am asking for information. As the Senator from Minnesota knows, one of the alibis of Secretary Benson has been that he has been unable to place the flexible Benson price-support program into operation as yet because he inherited a high-support program. Am I correct in my understanding that, since Benson has been Secretary of Agriculture, in the case of every commodity over which the Department of Agriculture has had jurisdiction, it has lowered the parity price, with the exception of the price of wool; and that in the case of wool, Congress passed a wool bill? Then, just 2 days before the President's state of the Union message, in which the President made his comment about agriculture, the Department of Agriculture lowered the parity price on rice? Is that true or false?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from Oregon is correct.

Mr. MORSE. It is to be noted that the wool bill adopted in principle for wool the Brannan plan.

I think the time has come to make clear to the people of the country that Benson does not tell them the facts about whether or not he has been putting the flexible price-support program into effect. He has been putting it into effect on every commodity over which he has had jurisdiction, and the purchasing power of the American farmer has been going down ever since he took office as a result of his program. His policies have been to the detriment of the American farmer.

I think the time has come to go after Secretary Benson for what he has done to American agriculture, and to make clear to Americans that he is America's No. 1 economic enemy, both to the farmers and to the economy as a whole.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I was interested in the comments of the minority leader, when he said he was deeply shocked by the comments of the junior Senator from Oregon. I wonder if the minority leader is deeply shocked by the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture.

I observe that a very good friend of agriculture has just come to the floor, the distinguished junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG]. The Senator from North Dakota and I had an opportunity to look at this article together. I shall not speak for the Senator from North Dakota, but I may say that as I read the article, I wished that I had followed his lead when he voted against the confirmation of Benson's nomination. The junior Senator from North Dakota is one of the Senators in the chamber today having good sense about agriculture.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized, under the rule, for 2 minutes.

Mr. YOUNG. I think the article which appeared in Harper's magazine is one of the most untrue, unfair, and dastardly articles ever written against the farmers of the United States. If it is true that Secretary of Agriculture Benson signed the letter, in which he said he read the article and approved it, I think he ought to resign immediately and to apologize to the farmers of America.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I, too, read the article bearing the initials of Mr. Fischer in the December issue of Harper's. I, also, was among those who were angered by it. I think it was entirely uncalled for.

I am shocked, if what now purports to be a letter praising the article by the Secretary of Agriculture was written by him, and if it is the entire letter as signed by him. I have some doubts on that score.

Mr. YOUNG. I may say that I have, too.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. At present I have a call in for the Secretary at his office. A search is being made to determine whether or not this is an authentic letter, whether or not the Secretary signed it, and whether or not the letter was printed in full. If the facts are as Harper's would make them appear to be, Mr. Benson has ended his usefulness as Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Would it be appropriate if the junior Senator from Minnesota should communicate with Harper's to see if they have the letter?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes; it would be.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I shall do so immediately.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I think the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] has raised an important point, one which I raised in a question in my earlier remarks. We ought to know whether or not Benson signed the letter. The presumption is that he did, but certainly we should know whether it is a forgery.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair reminds the Senator from California that the Senate is operating under the 2-minute rule.

Mr. KUCHEL. I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for not to exceed 10 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from California is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KUCHEL. My only purpose in rising to speak very briefly is to refute some of the statements which have been made by a few of my brethren on the other side of the aisle with respect to agricultural legislation. I do not speak as an expert on that subject. Indeed, on the one, single occasion during my short tenure in the Senate when a major piece of agriculture legislation was before the Senate, I cast my vote as an American rather than as a partisan. So did the Senate of the United States. That one, single occasion was when the Senate had before it the question whether the Senate should continue rigid price supports or should adopt flexible price supports.

To those of my brethren who have spoken during the last few minutes, and who have denounced the administration because it has followed a policy of urging flexibile price support legislation, I wish to recall now, that in 1948 the Democratic Party publicly promised the people of America that it would advocate flexible price support legislation in the next session of Congress.

It did that, and, to the credit of then President Truman, he followed his platform and he urged flexible price support legislation. But the Congress of the United States, which convened after the 1948 election, turned it down.

Two years later the incoming President of the United States asked Congress to adopt flexible price support legislation. During debate in the Senate, I sat, and listened to flexible price support legislation being persuasively advocated, not alone by Senate Republicans, but also by Senate Democrats, and particularly by one individual on the Democratic side of the aisle who is highly qualified to speak on agriculture. I refer to the distinguished junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], who was Secretary of Agriculture in the Cabinet of President Truman. CLINTON ANDERSON, Democrat, and GEORGE AIKEN, Republican, led the fight for the Eisenhower proposal.

When I voted in favor of flexible price support legislation, I did it as an American. I think it ill becomes some few Members of the Senate to denounce the Secretary of Agriculture.

I believe the senior Senator from Oregon called Mr. Benson "a fool" during his comments of a few moments ago. I deny that. Whatever else can be said, I am sure the Secretary of Agriculture is a man of honor and integrity, and is a man who is doing his level best to give assistance in the acknowledged plight of the farmer in the American economy today. And he is doing it under a law which Democrats helped to pass and which they used as a national pledge a few years ago.

That is all I have to say, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 5 minutes on the subject of agriculture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none. The Senator is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I should like to address myself to the same subject which has been so vehemently discussed here in the last few minutes. I should like to call the attention of my colleagues on the Senate floor to a few inescapable facts which cannot be avoided in a discussion of this controversy.

Let us take a look at the record of farm prices in this country. Under President Roosevelt, from March 1937 to August 1939, farm prices fell 35 percent in 29 months.

Under President Truman, from January 1948 to January 1950, they fell 22 percent in 24 months.

Under President Truman, from March 1951 to December 1952, they fell 16 percent in 21 months.

In other words, under those 3 Democrat Presidents farm prices fell 35, 22, and 16 percent, or a total of 73 percent, in that period of time.

Last summer, in a discussion of the matter on the floor of the Senate, the very distinguished Senator who is chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry talked about approaching the agricultural problem from a nonpolitical viewpoint. At that time, as the junior Senator from Colorado, I seconded that thought. And I say to my colleagues in the Senate today that the sooner some of the intemperate remarks being broadcast over the country cease the sooner will we be able to take care of this great minority of our citizens, who now total only 13 percent of our population, but whose welfare is so vital to the welfare of the whole country.

Last spring 16 Senators joined with me in the introduction of a bill affecting farm credit. From all over the country, letters have come into my office pointing out the necessity of an expanded form of farm credit. Never have I taken a position with respect to this matter that was arbitrary. Every week last year I importuned the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and the chairman of the subcommittee concerned, for a hearing upon the bill to which I referred.

Other bills for credit to the farmer are now pending in this body. They should be considered. They need to be considered. They have a right to be considered.

Now is the time when we, in this agricultural situation, may show the difference between having a partisan interest in what happens and having a true interest in the welfare of the farmer.

The few statistics which I have quoted could be backed up with many others. The statement has been made that the wool bill is the Brannan plan. I disagree. It is the pattern of the Sugar Act. It is patterned after the Sugar Act, and it was so intended.

So it seems to me that today we who really have an interest in the welfare of the farmer should devote ourselves to a judicial hearing and consideration of how we are going to help the farmer, rather than indulge in name calling and blame placing.

Mr. AIKEN subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that early in the session this afternoon, while I was still in a session of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, there was considerable discussion with respect to a letter which the Secretary of Agriculture is purported to have written to Harper's magazine, relative to an article which appeared in the December issue of that magazine.

When I learned that the discussion had taken place I promptly communicated with the Secretary's office. I found that such a letter does exist; and that the Secretary assumes full responsibility for the letter and its contents.

This is thoroughly in keeping with the customary honesty of the man. However, I insisted upon learning the facts relative to the communication.

I find that the publisher of Harper's magazine did send an article to the Secretary, with an accompanying letter stating that he thought that he would like to have it.

The letter from the publisher was handled in a routine manner, like thousands of others which come to the Secretary's desk every week.

It appears that the reply in acknowledgment was prepared by one of the girl secretaries of one of the agencies connected with the Secretary's office.

It appears that then, in routine manner, the Secretary's signature was affixed by another clerk, and away went the letter, with the consequent uproar.

I know for a fact—and I obtained this information after insistence—that the Secretary did not see the article. He did not see the letter accompanying it. He did not see or sign the letter which has caused all the commotion here.

However, as I have said, he does assume responsibility for it, just as, in previous cases, he has assumed responsibility when employees of the Department have made mistakes.

Technically he is responsible for the thousands of letters which go out of the Department over his signature just as the head of every other department is responsible for what goes out of his department.

The article in Harper's magazine was entirely out of keeping with the character of the Secretary. I know positively that if he had had any inkling that such an article existed, or that such a commendatory letter was being sent out over his signature, he would never have permitted it to be done.

Mr. HUMPHREY subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that during my absence from the Chamber this afternoon, while I was attending to other matters, the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] made comment regarding the letter which was sent by the Secretary of Argiculture to Harper's magazine, such letter having been published in the February issue of Harper's magazine.

The letter, of course, refers to the article in Harper's magazine for December entitled "The Country Slickers Take Us Again." I notice that the comment of the distinguished Senator from Vermont indicates that he has been in touch with the Secretary's office. I also note that the Secretary assumes full responsibility for the letter and its contents. The Senator from Vermont further stated that "this is thoroughly in keeping with the customary honesty of the man."

I notice that the Senator from Vermont stated the letter was a reply in the form of an acknowledgment, allegedly prepared by one of the girl secretaries of one of the agencies connected with the Secretary's office. The Senator from Vermont further stated that after the letter was prepared, the Secretary's signature was affixed by another clerk in a rather routine manner, "and away went the letter, with the consequent uproar."

I accept the explanation of the Senator from Vermont, because I have a high regard for him. However, I wish to say that when the Secretary of Agriculture permits his signature to be affixed to a document, he ought to have the people who prepare such letters and documents state what the views of the Secretary are. I gather that that is the kind of people he has in his office. That is the kind of people I have in my office. It is that caliber of people every Senator has in his office.

I have noticed a tendency in the administration, when anything goes wrong, to say it is someone else who is responsible. Well, Mr. President, that may be fine. However, if a person wants to take credit for the rain, he must also take the blame for the drought.

I notice that when I commented on the Life magazine article, the President of the United States said he had not read the article. At first Mr. Dulles said he had not read it. Now we find that the Secretary of Agriculture had not read this article.

However, I would have the Senate note that in the Secretary's reply—and he assumes full responsibility for the reply—he says, "I have read the article." I would gather that that means what I was taught those words to mean, namely, that he had read the article.

Furthermore, Harper's magazine informs us, through the press services this afternoon, that all of the letter was not quoted, and that there was yet another paragraph, which reads:

> Please accept my thanks for sending the article to me, and please convey my thanks to Mr. Fischer for a job well done.

That second paragraph indicates that the article was not sent to a secretary in Mr. Benson's office, but to Mr. Benson himself. It is not unusual for those of us who are in public life to have members of our staff prepare our replies, but it is generally assumed—and I would hope this assumption had validity—that those replies carry out the wishes and feelings and convictions and policies of the people for whom the letters are prepared for signature, namely, the principals involved.

The principal in this instance is the Secretary of Agriculture.

In order that the RECORD may be complete at this point, at least, I should like to say that there is another press service dispatch, apparently out of New York, deaing with this subject. I should like to read it now. It was taken from the ticker in the lobby of the Senate. It reads:

> In New York, Fischer—
> He is the editor of Harper's magazine—
> said the letter was written on a Department of Agriculture letterhead and he had no reason to doubt the authenticity of the signature.
> Fischer said that before publication of the article, "I sent a copy to the Information Office of the Department of Agriculture and asked them to check the accuracy of the statistics." He said, the Information Office "told me the statistics were correct, without assuming responsibility for any expressions of opinion."

I digress to point out, first of all, that the article was sent to the Office of Information of the Department of Agriculture. That Office is under the direction of the Secretary, and under the immediate direction of a person appointed by the Secretary. It is to be assumed that the Office is responsible to the Secretary of Agriculture. I continue to quote from the press release:

> He—
>
> Meaning Mr. Fischer—
> said that, as a purely routine matter, a page proof of the article was sent to Benson, a day or two before publication, by H. A. Knowles, of Philadelphia, who handles publicity for Harper's. The Benson letter, published among the Letters to the Editor in the magazine, was Benson's acknowledgment to Knowles.

Mr. President, I know there will be those who will say that we are making a rather big issue out of what somebody might call, in rationalization, a minor matter.

I submit to my colleagues that the article to which the letter was directed in terms of compliment and approval, and even to the point where it was called a job well done, is an article that condemns in the most vigorous terms our agricultural policies.

It is an article which is anything but complimentary to our farmers. It is an article which portrays the farmers of America as ingrates, or people on a perpetual dole. It is an article designed to set city people against country people. I have been of the opinion for some time that there was far too much of that kind of propaganda emanating out of the Department of Agriculture.

It is for those reasons that I take sharp exception.

It is reassuring, of course, to have the Secretary of Agriculture say that he takes full responsibility for the article. That is what a man would say. Mr. Benson is a man of courage. I happen to believe that he is a man of poor judgment in matters of agricultural policy, and, in this instance, of poor judgment in terms of correspondence.

Mr. President, I should like to say one final word. I had expected that there would be some effort made to rationalize this unfortunate and, I am sure, not in-advertent act on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture. I indicated as much at the time of my original presentation in the Senate.

I must say that there have been other speeches made in the past 3 years which gave inspiration and, I imagine, some encouragement to the publication of the article in Harper's magazine to which I referred. Too many letters come to Members of Congress which carry the same kind of what I would call prejudicial information and messages. I do not believe any Member of Congress on either side of the aisle will wish to endorse the Secretary's letter to Harper's.

I invite my friends on the other side of the aisle to testify to whether they approve of the Secretary's letter, which approved of the article as being an excellent one and as a job well done.

I believe the American people have a right to know whether their representatives in Congress—Senators and Representatives—feel that the article was worthy of this kind of attention. It appears to me that what the Secretary should have done was to write to the editor and challenge the article. If there were the right kind of philosophy in the Department of Agriculture, from the top down, his secretarial staff, who are his appointees, would have intercepted the article and proceeded at once to write a vigorous reply.

As I said earlier, the Secretary has demanded equal time to answer Mr. Murrow for what was said on Mr. Murrow's TV show last evening, even though the Secretary was permitted to speak for 5 minutes on that show.

I wonder why the Secretary should become so excited about a television show which did not seem to please him, and yet should wait 2 months before he even indicated anything about the Harper's magazine article.

There would not have been any indication of interest in the Harper's article if I had not stood on the floor this afternoon and challenged it, or challenged the Secretary for what he did. I suggest that, if Mr. Benson gets an hour on TV, instead of trying to answer the splendid portrayal, according to those who saw it, by Mr. Murrow, he answer the Harper's article. I am confident that Mr. Fischer, who is a competent journalist, will give him plenty of space to answer the article if such space is requested. Harper's believes in freedom of the press.

I wish the RECORD to be clear that, while I disagree with the content of the article and with the intent and the general philosophy of Mr. Fischer, I do not disagree with his right to write it or to state it. Do not tell me that the Department of Agriculture did not know that the publication contained this article. Do not tell me that the Secretary of Agriculture did not read the article in Life magazine some time ago which indicated the same kind of thinking. Yet, when someone goes on the radio or on television and points out what is really happening to our farm families, the Secretary wants to have time to reply. But if someone writes an article that distorts and paints an improper picture of the situation, the Secretary does not reply.

It is rather difficult to write an article about agriculture from 49th Street in New York. The largest patch of ground in New York is Central Park, and that is not cultivated for commercial purposes.

So, Mr. President, I say very frankly that the Secretary should set this matter right first and let Mr. Murrow's program continue on in the interest of the people.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Do I correctly understand that the article which the Senator is discussing cast a very unfavorable reflection upon the farmers?

Mr. HUMPHREY. If the people of Louisiana read this article and know that Mr. Benson said it was an excellent one, and a job well done, I think the Senator from Louisiana will have trouble restraining them from marching on Washington.

I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks, from reading this particular article, that it correctly portrays what is happening to the farm people in Louisiana. Listen to this:

> Our pampered tyrant, the American farmer, is about to get his boots licked again by both political parties.

Does the Senator think the farmers are pampered?

Mr. LONG. Many of them are going broke, if they are pampered tyrants. I imagine they are willing to give up their farming activities, because they cannot make a living, or at least many of them cannot.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The article also states that the farmer has come to believe that the dole belongs to him permanently, as a matter of right, and it also says:

> When any hog keeps his jowls in the trough long enough, he gets to thinking he owns the trough.

Is that a correct characterization of the farmer?

Mr. LONG. So far from defending himself against a statement by Mr. Murrow, the Secretary should be defending the farm families and not be congratulating Mr. Fischer upon the good job that had been done.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator is correct. If someone will go out and get a copy of the United States Code he will find the public law which established the Department of Agriculture, and it will be found that it provides that the Secretary shall protect and promote the interests of agriculture.

We have had plenty of periodicals lately. I do not know which department will take on the next magazine article, but I suggest that there is nothing in any public law which I can recall, or in any constitutional provision, that says we are supposed to increase the circulation of magazines or approve of their articles, particularly when they are derogatory.

I think my colleagues will be interested to know why the Secretary thought it was an excellent piece and a job well done, when the article further says:

> A grand-scale reshuffling of districts, both for Congress and the legislatures, seems to be the only long-range remedy.

And it goes on to suggest the throwing of eggs at every candidate who poses as the farmer's friend.

I am sure there will be a few eggs that will spatter on some of our Republican colleagues.

The article goes on to say:

> That will help get rid of one surplus, and a lot of political hypocrisy at the same time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is that a quotation from the article?

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct. There does not appear to be any depressing surplus of eggs right now. The price went down 6 cents a dozen a short time ago, and when the budget message came through the price went down 3 cents a dozen.

Mr. President, I have no more to say on this matter. I gather it will be something which will be discussed from time to time. I think the Senator from South Dakota made a very appropriate observation today when he said he was of the opinion that the Secretary of Agriculture had outlived his usefulness. There are those who thought possibly he had had a longer extension of life on the job than the circumstances merited.

Mr. President, I shall await any further comment which others may have on this particular question, and I shall be prepared Monday to place in the RECORD a photostatic copy of the letter which we are discussing. I called Harpers today to check it, to make sure that the letter was in their possession, and I am happy to note that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] also knows that a copy of the letter is in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, with his customary candor the Secretary of Agriculture authorized the following statement this afternoon:

> The article was sent into my office, but in the rush of my duties I did not see it. The letter was signed with my name by an assistant, Miller Shurtleff, who has this authority for occasional routine acknowledgments. But, as Secretary of Agriculture, I must take the responsibility for this and I so do. Of course, the contents of the article as reported to me by my staff does not in the slightest reflect my views. We pulled a boner on this one. I am sorry.

That is the end of the quotation from the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture. I think it is the type of statement which would naturally be made by a man of integrity and candor, who admits that he made a mistake and acknowledges it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to say that I feel the Secretary has done right in his apology. I hope my colleagues will not think I am too unkind or too unfair when I say that the article has been published since December. There was no apology about the article or the letter until it became a matter of controversy on the Senate floor.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. ALLOTT. Did the Senator read the article when it was published?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I regret to say that I was behind in my reading.

Mr. ALLOTT. I have not seen the article yet, but I intend to read it. Perhaps it did not come to the attention of the Secretary, either.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Secretary was sent a page proof of the article. I was not sent a page proof, but may I say, Mr. President, that a Member of the House of Representatives placed it in the RECORD 2 days ago. There was no argument about it, and it did not hit the news. The Secretary did not apologize about it then.

Oh, Mr. President, I will rub it off the board in the sense that the Secretary in a manly way had accepted his responsibility.

I say very frankly that it is peculiar that the Department of Agriculture was willing to endorse an article like that. Are they writing letters, willy-nilly, endorsing articles which appear in periodicals? I have been told that there is a group in the Department which looks through the publications to find what are called pro-Benson articles. Then they write letters of congratulation. I am certain that that is what has happened to the Secretary. All pro-Benson articles are not necessarily excellent. They are not necessarily well done.

What I am discussing is a matter of public policy. Agriculture legislation is one of the most important public policies before Congress today.

It is unpleasant for me to state that I have a difficult time getting replies from the Secretary of Agriculture. I may not be the most influential Senator, but I am 1 of 2 Senators from Minnesota. I write to the Secretary repeatedly. About all I have received from him in reply has been a letter in the form of an offset, inviting me to see a wheat exhibit.

When I write to the Secretary of Agriculture, I would like to hear from the Secretary in return. I am tempted to send letters back to the persons who replied, and say: "I did not write to you." I know the Secretary has to have a staff to answer letters, but he might find time to answer some of my communications.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. SYMINGTON. It is a fact that I have written 17 times from my office to the Secretary of Agriculture reporting specific complaints by Missouri farmers of maladministration of the ASC program in Missouri. In reply to them I have received only one answer from the Secretary.

Is it not true that when the distinguished junior Senator from Minnesota conducted a hearing in Missouri, he requested, a month beforehand, that a representative of the Department of Agriculture be present at the hearing, and that, although apparently there is much time available for the Department to write letters to magazines, no one representing the Department of Agriculture came to the hearing?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from Missouri is correct. I wrote in September, but I did not receive a reply until the first week in November. Then the answer was not by the Secretary. I have forgotten now who replied. I believe it was an assistant to an Assistant Secretary. As the Senator from Missouri knows, no officer, no observer, or no counselor from the Department of Agriculture was made available.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Is it not true that many times questions came up during the hearing which could have been solved without difficulty to the interest of everyone concerned if there had been someone present from the Department to interpret the regulations incident to the office management of county committees?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Such a person could have been exceedingly helpful.

From page 282 of volume II of the United States Code, 1952 edition, I read the following:

> There shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants.

The code then continues to enumerate the duties of the Department. I read:

> The Department of Agriculture shall be an executive department, under the supervision and control of a Secretary of Agriculture, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Moreover—

> The Secretary of Agriculture shall procure and preserve all information concerning agriculture which he can obtain by means of books and correspondence, and by practical and scientific experiments, accurate records of which experiments shall be kept in his office, by the collection of statistics, and by any other appropriate means within his power.

It appears that one of the duties of the Secretary is that he "shall procure and preserve all information"; furthermore, that he shall, according to the code, "acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture."

There are a considerable number of other duties prescribed in the code, but I think we all know what the duties are.

I repeat that it would be a little different if this were an article written for the February issue, of which a galley proof had gone to the Secretary, and then, as a routine matter, a letter had been written commending it. I happen to believe there are enough people in the information service of the Department who have had sufficient time to send around the country all kinds of information about the farm program. They had time to put out in November a regular campaign document, to the effect that the farm program which really is not working, does work. But they apparently did not have time to inform the Secretary about the article in Harpers, even though the facts are so well organized.

It will have to be said that there was efficiency. There was sufficient efficiency for the letter to be sent, and the letter speaks for itself, all the apologies to the contrary. I think we would all be better off if every Senator made up his mind, and so stated frankly, that this kind of doctrine in an article, which apparently was endorsed advertently or inadvertently, is something which is not a reflection of the views of Congress.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I have no desire to continue the controversy about the article in Harper's magazine. The Secretary has said it does not in the slightest degree reflect his views. I think that statement is truthful.

I should like to say a word about the television program produced by Mr. Ed Murrow last night. It was an hour-long program, 55 minutes of it devoted to a showing of the plight of the farmers at their worst. At the end of 55 minutes the Secretary was given 4 minutes—I think a commercial cut off 1 minute—in which to present the other side of the story. I think there was a good audience viewing the program last night. I think the public relations department of the Farmers Union had built up the audience as much as they could. I feel certain it must have been very disappointing to them to have had Mr. Benson, in 4 minutes, give such an adequate rebuttal to the 55 minutes of propaganda which Mr. Murrow put on. However, as I understand it, the Columbia Broadcasting System has agreed to give time sufficient so that at least one fairly well-to-do farmer may come before the television audience of America. Of course, some farmers are in good shape; others are not.

I believe that for the month of November, 25 States showed larger agricultural incomes than in the last year, and 23 showed less. Those which showed a greater income were largely the hog States.

It is very difficult to understand some persons. I had a letter only this afternoon from a farmer in Iowa. He is as mad as hops because the price of hogs went up 5 cents. He said last week he got 10 cents; this week he received 15 cents. I do not know what can be done to please him.

There is one suggestion I should like to make. For almost a year there has been a very intensified, organized campaign, attacking the Secretary of Agriculture, attacking everything he does, attacking the President, and constantly predicting that agriculture has gone to pieces; or if it has not gone to pieces, that it is going to pieces. This has been a well-organized propaganda effort to drive down the farm prices. To a certain extent, it has succeeded. But farm prices seem to be turning upward again.

I know this is very disappointing to those who have put on such an intensive propaganda campaign to drive prices down.

We know that farm prices are made partly by the law of supply and demand and partly by psychology. Sometimes it is difficult to determine which percentage can be credited to which influence. But I well recall the year 1947 and early 1948, when all the farm organizations of America were working together, and when a Republican Congress was working with a Democratic administration constructively to improve farm conditions in the United States. Those were the highest net income years this country has ever known. That was not due to legislation; it was not due to the application of laws at that time. It was due to the fact that the people who claimed to be interested in agriculture—and most of us were—were working together for a common purpose.

Now we seem to have lost that common purpose. There seem to be some whose sole aim in life is to embarrass the Secretary in every effort he makes to improve agricultural conditions in this cuntry; who have dedicated themselves to doing all they can to impede him in his work and to discredit him. That does not make for a prosperous agriculture.

Instead of attack after attack on the Secretary, on the President, and on all those whose responsibility it is to keep the country prosperous, including its prosperous agriculture, I should like to see people come forward with constructive suggestions, stop being abusive, and really lend themselves to the good of American agriculture so that it may be stronger and may continue to be free.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNAMARA in the chair). Is there further business to come before the Senate?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I should like to make a comment. I surely concur with the Senator's remark that constructive suggestions should be made and constructive attitudes should be taken. Constructive attitudes, however, do not necessarily mean we should just be mute rubberstamps and just accept any program and philosophy as laid down from on high.

I hope some of our friends will not be too unkind with us if we say we may have gotten a little confused in the beginning, when in 1952 this great agricultural policy of ours was thrown into the maelstrom of politics. I think I know a little bit about that. I attended the first meeting where it happened, out in Minnesota, near Kasson and Plowville. I do not think any Member in the Chamber will deny that statements were made as to what the future agricultural policy was going to be.

I can recall the statement "not less than 90 percent of parity."

I can recall that the Minneapolis Star carried headlines, which I displayed in the Senate, and which are matters of official record: "Eisenhower pledges 100 percent of parity."

I can recall pledges that there would be equal price supports on feed grains and perishables as there were on basics. I stand here waiting for anyone to prove to the contrary. That was the pledge.

Not only was that pledge made, but my distinguished colleagues on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry know that those pledges have been talked about by members of the Department of Agriculture themselves. It happened in the campaign at Brookings, S. Dak., at Fargo, N. Dak., and I imagine elsewhere.

Furthermore, Mr. President, this administration has gotten every tool it has wanted for its farm program. The administration was able to defeat those of us who believed in higher support levels. It has been able to get a foreign aid program, under the Mutual Security Act, to dispose of surpluses, for the relief of famine. I was one of the original proponents of such a program. To show my colleagues the partisanship involved, when I proposed the program, there was opposition by the administration. The same proposal, word for word, was opposed in the committee by representatives of the administration. The administration sent down the second proposal. I happened to have the original; the administration sent down the carbon copy. That is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Public Law 480 was put on the books, so we could sell our surplus commodities for soft currencies.

A flexible price-support program was put on the books. The expanded special milk program was put on the books. The Secretary got his way on lower price supports for dairy products. The school lunch program was expanded.

Farm research programs were expanded.

Despite the feet dragging of the administration, we increased soil conservation and research. This administration has had everything to work with except the will and the right spirit.

I know that spokesmen for the administration like to attribute all their ills to those who preceded them. That was a good argument the first year. They could get by with it the second year. They could even stretch it a bit for the third year. But it appears to me that in the fourth year they are really running out of arguments. Let us not have any more of this rationalizing about the miserable failure of the administration in the field of agriculture.

I was interested in what the President had to say in his message, when he again embraced the family farm. But the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Butz, said agriculture was big business, and that if those in that business were not efficient, they had to get out. And the Under Secretary has, time after time, talked about so-called marginal farms, and the fact that they are going to have to disappear.

The President came back again to us with the philosophy about the family farm. In his message he talked about limiting price supports in quantity. I had a bill on that subject turned down by the same administration. I do not say my bill was perfect. I do not say it was even close to being perfect. But I say it was a germ of an idea, and the idea was rejected—not merely the mechanics of it, but the idea was rejected.

Members in the Senate and the House—and I was one of them—made soil-bank proposals, which could have gone into effect last year. This administration now loves the soil bank. I guess it is loved because the word "bank" is in it.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Not at the moment. This administration rejected the soil-bank idea. Now it is the "new, bold, imaginative" farm program.

Mr. President, we are going to give the administration a better farm program than it has asked for. The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has been trying to work on a farm bill in a nonpartisan spirit. Yet the Secretary of Agriculture says, "Let us not play politics with agriculture." May I say to my friends on the other side of the aisle that even as late as last night the Secretary of Agriculture was bowing to the administration. He ought to look at the mirror. Then he ought to go to the White House and look at its occupants, from the top on down. He might find out what is wrong with the agricultural program.

No one says these problems are simple, but I want to say for the RECORD, imagine what Mr. Khrushchev and Mr. Bulganin would be doing if they had the surpluses of food and fiber that we have. The trip through Burma and India which they recently took would look like slow motion compared to the next one they would take.

Here is a Government which cannot figure out what to do with abundance. Imagine what would happen if it were faced with scarcities. We would be singing God Bless America, in a spirit of prayers for help, and not merely as a song.

Imagine an administration stymied by the facts of agricultural economics, when it can get almost unlimited appropriations, and when it can get almost wholehearted cooperation from Congress. Everything the administration asks for, it gets. Yet officials in the administration are so busy writing letters of congratulation to Harper's that they cannot find time to have bills introduced to raise the price of hogs or livestock. They cannot do anything to help the agricultural economy until it is too late.

As I said a while ago, up to date the hog-purchase program has been a failure. I say officials of the Department cannot prove to the contrary, because they have been asked to submit evidence to the contrary.

Every day one can read in the columns of newspapers, "Republican Congressmen Go to White House on Hog Problems," "Republican Leaders Go to White House About Hog Prices," or "Go to Department of Agriculture About Hog Prices." There still is not an effective program to do something about hog and livestock prices paid to the producer.

We have made a suggestion. Sixteen Senators signed a letter to the Secretary of Agriculture on January 1, suggesting that certain programs be adopted, and certain things be done. I regret to say I have not had a reply to that letter as yet. Today is the 27th of January. I know it is a long way from the Department of Agriculture up to Capitol Hill, but if the mail service is not running, let us get one of the ponies out of the stables, and maybe a reply can be carried to Capitol Hill. If they have enough time to prepare the speeches they give, and enough time to prepare the letters they write, certainly they have enough time to answer 16 Members of the United States Senate.

Frankly, Mr. President, I am not happy about the kind of official treatment that is given to some of us just because we disagree with them. In this country is there any law against disagreeing, Mr. President?

I can recall when Members on the other side of the aisle were disagreeing to a point almost beyond description with the Brannan plan. If one wishes to talk about politics in the farm program that is when politics came in—and it was not brought in by Democrats.

I did not happen to subscribe to all the features of the Brannan plan, and I am not now subscribing to all of them. But I wish to make it crystal clear that all the explanations to the contrary are not going to erase from the memory of the American people the fact that when the Republicans are in power, the stock market prices go up, and farm commodity prices go down. If a man had been in hibernation for 20 years, like Rip Van Winkle, or if a man had been isolated in the Arctic or Antarctic regions for 20 years or more, and if thereafter, upon his return to the United States, he happened to hear it said, "The prices on the stock market are at an alltime high, but hog prices are $10 a hundred," that man would know at once that the Republicans were in power. [Laughter.] He would not have to listen to any radio broadcast or look at any television program, in order to know that.

Mr. President, I have expressed my view. I shall be back again.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, during the afternoon I saw on the news ticker a report on some remarks I made earlier in the afternoon. I think there was one misinterpretation in the report I saw as to what I had said. That misinterpretation was in associating me with a demand on the President for dismissal of the Secretary of Agriculture. I made no such demand, nor did I join in that.

I now have before me the transcription of what I said; I have obtained it from the Official Reporter for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am reported as saying—and this is as I recall it, and as it will appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow:

> Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I, too, read the article bearing the initials of Mr. Fischer in the December issue of Harper's. I, also, was among those who were angered by it. I think it was entirely uncalled for.
> I am shocked, if what now purports to be a letter praising the article by the Secretary of Agriculture was written by him, and if it is the entire letter as signed by him. I have some doubts on that score.
>
> Mr. YOUNG. I may say that I have, too.
> Mr. CASE of South Dakota. At present I have a call in for the Secretary at his office. A search is being made to determine whether or not this is an authentic letter, whether or not the Secretary signed it, and whether or not the letter was printed in full. If the facts are as Harper's would make them appear to be, Mr. Benson has ended his usefulness as Secretary of Agriculture.

I said that. The account I saw on the news ticker indicated that I had joined with the remarks made by someone else in demanding that the President discharge Mr. Benson forthwith.

Mr. President, I did not call for that. I do think, though, that, on the record as it stands, the usefulness of Mr. Benson as Secretary of Agriculture has been compromised to the point where Mr. Benson on his own initiative should very seriously consider whether he wishes to lay on the President the additional burden that is his as a result of this unfortunate incident. In other words, I think the initiative should come from Mr. Benson himself.

I understand that the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from California, has already presented to the Senate the following forthright statement by Secretary Benson:

> The article was sent into my office, but in the rush of my duties I did not see it. The letter was signed with my name by an assistant, Miller Shurtleff, who has this authority for occasional routine acknowledgments. But, as Secretary of Agriculture, I must take the responsibility for this and I so do. Of course, the contents of the article as reported to me by my staff does not in the slightest reflect my views. We pulled a boner on this one. I am sorry.

Of course, that is a very forthright statement by the Secretary of Agriculture and a generous one in its acceptance of responsibility for a "boner" that he did not personally commit.

However, Mr. President, the difficulty is that of trying to get a constructive agricultural program passed by the Congress, when the organization of the Department of Agriculture is such that a letter can go out from the Secretary's office, over his authorized signature, saying, "I have read the article by John Fischer, in the December issue of Harper's, with a great deal of interest. It is excellent" when as a matter of fact the Secretary had not read the article, and when it did not represent his beliefs. It will be very difficult for the President of the United States, or for anyone who wishes to help the President get his program enacted, to get word to enough people of the country so as to disavow effectively a letter going out from the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, and bearing his signature—although it was signed by someone who is authorized to make such signatures—and including the words:

> I have read the article * * * it is excellent.

It will be difficult to erase the impression that has been created of an endorsement for a very great slander on the American farmer.

That is the great burden that has been placed upon the President and upon those who would like to see the President's program for agriculture enacted. That is why I feel that the usefulness of the Secretary of Agriculture has been compromised by this unfortunate incident.

It is made all the worse, Mr. President, because a different example of Cabinet action was reflected in the papers this morning. In this morning's newspapers I read that the Secretary of Labor had some differences with Representative BARDEN, a Member of the House of Representatives, regarding the handling of certain labor legislation in the House of Represenatives. The Associated Press report, appearing in this morning's Washington Post and Times Herald, reads in part as follows:

> A long-developing feud over the way the House Labor Committee has handled administration proposals broke into the open yesterday.
> Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell told a news conference that Chairman GRAHAM A. BARDEN, Democrat, of North Carolina, has been bottling up many legislative plans of President Eisenhower without letting them go to hearings.
> BARDEN laughed when he heard of Mitchell's remarks and said: "Somebody should have whispered to the gentleman that I did not come up here to be dictated to by him or any other administrator."
>
> "If he would spend more time administering the laws he already has instead of trying to run Congress, we would be better off," BARDEN added.

The Associated Press article, by Norman Walker, proceeds:

> This prompted a further statement from Mitchell that he was glad to be able to report to Congressman BARDEN that labor standards laws have been more vigorously enforced by this administration than ever before.

Then the article continues with a quotation from Secretary Mitchell, as follows:

> "It is my job to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of wage earners and I will continue to do so."
> Mitchell got into the subject when newsmen asked what he thought of the chances of administration labor plans being approved by Congress this session.

And so forth. The great difficulty which Mr. Benson has had all along has been to persuade the farmers that he has been on their side. They have wanted a Secretary who was outspoken in his efforts to foster their welfare, and not to liquidate them.

A very great problem in getting sound agricultural legislation at this time is the difficulty of persuading the farmers that the program which has been advocated by the administration, and for which now the Secretary of Agriculture comes up to plead, is being advanced by a man who is seeking "to foster, promote, and develop the welfare" of the people in the industry whose Cabinet Department he heads.

The Secretary of Labor gets credit for working for laws more favorable to labor. He flatly says:

> It is my job to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of wage earners, and I will continue to do so.

For months the major problem of Mr. Benson has been that too many farmers have not felt he is on their side. They think he wants to penalize them for overproduction and perhaps to liquidate many of them. They have become suspicious of what he espouses and do not give him the hearing they would give to one they looked upon as their champion.

It is incredible that a complimentary letter could go from the office of the Secretary of Agriculture on any article published under the headline "The Country Slickers Take Us Again," and with the opening sentence:

> Our pampered tyrant, the American farmer, is about to get his boots licked again by both political parties.

The letter coming from the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, and stating that the article is excellent, that it had been read by the Secretary of Agriculture, places a tremendous burden on the President and upon the administration. Disavow it, the Secretary of Agriculture has clearly and forthrightly done. He has manfully said he is sorry it happened.

But I know, and everyone else who has been active in the field of congressional politics for any period of time must realize, the difficulty, in the face of the records, of persuading the farmer, for whom the Secretary of Agriculture is supposed to be seeking constructive legislation, that anything that happens in that Department is really in the interest of the farmer, if things such as the writing of this letter can happen.

Whoever actually did read the article for the Department should be exposed, and whoever wrote the letter knowingly should be suspended as disloyal to agriculture and disloyal to the Secretary.

I think it is regrettable and unfortunate, but the usefulness of the Secretary has certainly been compromised. I sincerely trust that he will give consideration to whatever steps may be necessary to let the administration's program receive fair and constructive consideration in the Congress.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I can imagine that some of the headlines tomorrow may read "Legislators Clamor for Benson's Scalp." I merely point out that those who clamor for Benson's scalp today clamored for it in January of 1953, and have been continuously clamoring for Benson's scalp ever since. If they had spent half as much time in helping to carry on good, constructive agriculture programs as they have spent in clamoring for Benson's scalp, I am sure the prices of agricultural commodities today would be higher than they are.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, I listened to the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] with respect to the broadcast last night, every word of which I heard. I have great admiration for Mr. Edward Murrow, and I thought he was most fair. At least 1, if not 2, of the farmers who spoke on the broadcast expressed a philosophy which I felt was quite close to the philosophy expressed many times by the Secretary of Agriculture, in his statements on the problems of the farmer, if not that exact philosophy.

As I understand, although he talked at the end of the program, Mr. Benson now wants to have more time from the Columbia Broadcasting System to answer a broadcast which I thought was quite fair in its original presentation.

It is my suggestion that some Member of the Senate—perhaps the distinguished senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], who has just spoken on the subject—should also ask for time, in order that there may be a debate before the American people with respect to just what is the problem which has resulted in the steady decrease in farm prices.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me, so that nominations on the Executive Calendar may be considered? It will not take more than 10 minutes.

Dear Hugh:

The night you went to the hospital Mr. Murrow was on CBS-TV and you probably did not see the program. I saw practically all of it and am enclosing an article by Glenn Martz of Washington which covers the subject more effectively than I could. It was certainly distorted in every way as Mr. Martz states.

The big argument, as you know, is 90 per cent rigid supports versus flexible supports. Under rigid supports corn in Iowa was at $1.62 per bushel. Currently, this support is at $1.58. Certainly that four cents per bushel, where they have a cost of production of about $1.00 per bushel if it rains, is not the cause of the farmer's plight.

Sincerely,

Dear Ed:

Let me add my congratulations for the excellent television show on Farming.

A friend of mine, Dave Livingstone, Washington, Iowa farmer and thinker, has expressed hope that some future program might be devoted to the "positive" approach. The troubles of agriculture are pretty well known. Sound thinking on how to solve these problems is needed.

If you have any occasion to get into this and need some help, just whistle.

BENSON, APPEARING BRIEFLY NEAR THE END OF THE HOUR-LONG DOCUMENTARY PROGRAM, SAID HE FEARED THE PROGRAM MIGHT GIVE THE IDEA THAT THE SMALL AMERICAN FARMER IS ON HIS WAY OUT. ANY SUCH CONTENTION, HE SAID, IS "DEMAGOGUERY AT ITS WORST."

MURROW PUT TOGETHER A SERIES OF FILMS TO PORTRARY THE FARM SITUATION. GOVERNMENT-HELD SURPLUSES WERE SHOWN IN LIBERTY SHIPS, WAREHOUSES AND TENTS. FARMERS ARGUED OVER THE JOB BENSON HAS DONE. ONE ACCUSED HIM OF DOING A "ROTTEN JOB," WHILE ANOTHER CALLED HIM A CAPABLE MAN BESET BY TOUGH PROBLEMS AND PRESSURE FROM POLITICIANS.

THE PROGRAM OPENED WITH A FARM AUCTION SALE NEAR CORNING, IOWA, WHERE THE FARMER SAID HE WAS BEING FORCED OUT OF BUSINESS BY LOW PRICES. MURROW COMMENTED THAT MANY SMALL FARMERS WERE BEING DRIVEN OFF THE LAND, AND SAID THE CORNING AUCTION SCENE MIGHT BE CALLED "THE DEATH OF A SMALL FARM."

BENSON SAID THE AUCTION WAS NOT A FORECLOSURE. HE SAID HE HAD LEARNED THAT THE FARMER, DALE E.PETERSON, HAD VOLUNTARILY SOLD HIS PROPERTY WITH THE IDEA OF GOING TO CALIFORNIA, THINKING HE COULD DO BETTER THERE.

BENSON SAID IT "IS JUST NOT TRUE" THAT LARGE NUMBERS OF FARMERS ARE BEING DRIVEN FROM THEIR FARMS. FEWER HAVE LEFT FARMING IN THE LAST THREE YEARS THAN IN THE PRECEDING THREE YEARS, HE SAID.

TAKING THE STAND THAT HE COULD NOT REPLY IN FIVE MINUTES TO THE QUESTIONS RAISED ON THE PROGRAM, BENSON WAS ABOUT TO ASK FOR A LATER CHANCE TO "PRESENT ALL THE FACTS" WHEN TIME RAN OUT ON THE PROGRAM.

February 5, 1956

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Note to Editors: Attached is exchange of correspondence between Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson and Dr. Frank Stanton, President of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

In a letter dated January 30, 1956, Secretary Benson requested a half-hour of time "to clear up what I distinctly feel was a distorted impression of farm conditions given by sections of Mr. Murrow's presentation." ("See It Now" produced by Edward R. Murrow and Fred Friendly presented "The Farm Problem - A Crisis of Abundance" over the CBS Television network on January 26 from 10 to 11 PM, EST.)

In his reply, dated February 4, 1956, Dr. Stanton stated that "the farm issues are many and complex and the views concerning their solution are conflicting and strongly held. In view of your request and in view of the broad public importance of the farm issues, we are offering you 10:30 to 11 PM, EST February 9 on the CBS Television network."

Senator Clinton P. Anderson, former Secretary of Agriculture, by telegram January 27, and Senator Hubert H. Humphrey by telegram January 28, also requested time to present their viewpoints to answer Secretary Benson in the event that CBS Television granted his petition for time. Accordingly, CBS Television has offered the corresponding half-hour (10:30 to 11 PM, EST) on February 16 to Senators Anderson and Humphrey for this purpose.

January 30, 1956

Dear Mr. Stanton:

A few days ago I appeared briefly on Mr. Edward R. Murrow's "See It Now" program. I felt that the few minutes alloted to me for comment were inadequate to clear up what I distinctly feel was a distorted impression of farm conditions given by sections of Mr. Murrow's presentation.

In fairness to farmers, to your metropolitan audiences and to the Department of Agriculture which I have the honor to serve, I respectfully request an early opportunity to set the record straight on several important points.

Although the Murrow show occupied a full hour, I believe half of that time would be sufficient for the presentation I have in mind. I would hope that time could be allotted at approximately the same hour as the Murrow show was staged and on the same day of the week - Thursday. I believe you would agree this would best permit me to reach the same audience.

I would be most happy to discuss further details with you or other members of your staff if you are agreeable to this request.

Sincerely yours,

E. T. Benson (signed)

The Secretary of Agriculture
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Secretary:

I have your January 30 letter, mailed from Portland, Oregon, in which you state that the time allotted to you on the SEE IT NOW program dealing with farm problems was insufficient to permit you adequately to present your views. Accordingly, you request a half-hour at approximately the same time (10-11 PM EST Thursday) as that in which SEE IT NOW was broadcast.

As you know, and as the SEE IT NOW program itself reflected, the farm issues are many and complex and the views concerning their solution are conflicting and strongly held. In view of your request and in view of the broad public importance of the farm issues, we are offering you 10:30-11 PM EST February 9 on the CBS Television network.

Senator Clinton P. Anderson, former Secretary of Agriculture, by telegram January 27, and Senator Hubert H. Humphrey by telegram January 28, requested time to present their viewpoints and to answer you, in the event that we should grant your petition. We are offering the corresponding half-hour February 16 to Senators Anderson and Humphrey jointly for this purpose.

If the time period we have offered is agreeable to you, it would be helpful if you would have someone on your staff get in touch with Mr. Ted Koop, Director of CBS News and Public Affairs, Washington (EMerson 2-9300) so that arrangements can be worked out for the broadcast.

Sincerely yours,

PROPOSED STATEMENT AFTER BENSON'S APPEARANCE

Not to be issued as a release, but in response to inquiries and attributed to Murrow

Secretary Benson is to be congratulated. He wanted a half-hour of television time to extol the virtues of the Administration's farm program and he got it through the device of claiming he wanted to answer a SEE IT NOW program on the farm problem. The Secretary did not contradict any of the figures used on that program, which would have been difficult since most of them came from his own Department, and he did not succeed in discrediting any of the farmers who spoke for or against his agricultural program.

Senator Martin was in Corning, Iowa with a sound camera, interviewing some of the same people who appeared on the original SEE IT NOW program. On the film used tonight, their voices and views were not heard; we wonder why.

On the original program, Secretary Benson's representative saw the entire film five days before it was presented; the Secretary was provided with complete script equally far in advance. He made no complaint, did not ask for additional time, chose to use the six and a half minutes allotted to him to talk about demagoguery, and to say that the farm sale we filmed was a foreclosure, which it was not and which we never intended it was.

"SEE IT NOW"

EGYPT - ISRAEL

March 13, 1956

5b—See It Now—"Egypt—Israel"

The first of the See It Now broadcasts on the Middle East this year was an hour-and-a-half long political documentary entitled, "Egypt—Israel," (presented from 8:30-10:00 pm on March 13) which covered the origins and issues of the bitter dispute between both countries. The program featured probing, newsmaking interviews with General Abdul Gamal Nasser of Egypt and Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion of Israel by veteran correspondents Edward R. Murrow and Howard K. Smith respectively.

To give Americans a first hand view of the character and nature of the two countries, See It Now's cameras traveled extensively through both of them, revealing their people and their attitudes, proving their strength and weaknesses, describing their lands and their history.

Variety said, "Last Tuesday's hour-and-a-half, on-the-spot report on the Arab-Israel tensions was 'electronic journalism' at its best, at once frightening and fascinating."

Harriet Van Horne wrote in the New York World-Telegram and Sun, "Television, in essaying such documentaries as this one makes our homework as citizens of the world ever so much easier. ...This was a splendid moment in television."

For its outstanding effort to bring the people and problems of a far off, but vital area into the homes of American television viewers, CBS Television submits See It Now—"Egypt—Israel" for consideration by the Board of Judges of the George Foster Peabody Awards.

5b—See It Now—"Coverage of The Middle East Crisis"

The problems of the Middle East are among the most important and complex of any area in the world. They stem from the fact that the Middle East, with its rich oil deposits and its Suez Canal lifeline, is inextricably bound to the economy of Western Europe. Its problems are complicated by the rising tides of nationalism in the area and by the counterbalancing forces of colonialism. They are made still more complex by the growing demands for racial equality among the Middle East's emerging black and brown peoples. And the confusion is further compounded by the existence of bitter animosity between Israel and her Arab neighbors and almost as deep rivalries among the Arab countries themselves.

Each of these vital and continually changing aspects of the Middle East situation has been covered clearly, thoroughly and with great insight by a series of See It Now programs presented on CBS Television during the past year.

See It Now's remarkable coverage of the Middle East crisis includes the following specific broadcasts:

"Egypt—Israel"—an hour-and-a-half long program about the conflict of those two nations presented on March 13.

"Report from Africa"—a two part program about the rising tides of nationalism and racial equality, presented on April 23 and May 17.

"Suez"—an hour-long program about the significance of Egypt's seizure of the canal, presented on October 7.

"Special Reports from Israel"—two 15 minute broadcasts by Edward R. Murrow about the Israeli invasion of the Sinai Peninsula, presented on November 13 and 14.

Each of these See It Now programs is submitted by CBS Television in the conviction that it is a worthy candidate for a George Foster Peabody Award. Taken together, these broadcasts represent an unmatched achievement in the coverage of an extremely difficult and continually developing international situation of crucial importance to the entire world.

The See It Now series on the Middle East presented during the past year has given the American people an excellent over-all view of the problems of that vital area. Separately, each of the programs stands on its own merits for its outstanding contribution to our understanding of specific phases of the Middle East crisis.

For this reason CBS Television has grouped all of the See It Now broadcasts from the Middle East into one entry for consideration by the Board of Judges of the George Foster Peabody Awards, and at the same time presents each of the programs for separate consideration by the Board for an individual award. A more detailed description of the programs follows.

Dear Ed,

The results of your most recent "See It Now" program on the Isreli - Arab conflict was television as television was meant to be.

It was indeed interesting to have discussed with you at length your plans for the production and then to see the remarkable results that you achieved.

I hope that you will always be able to continue doing this type of informative program for the American audience.

With sincerest regards,

Dear Ed,

All I seem to do is send you mash notes as I never seem to see you Person to Person to tell you what a sustained terrific- noble job you are doing oh TV. I sat enthralled for what seemed five minutes, of your Middle East show. It was a perfect performance in ever respect- so very natural and flowing and decent and how revealing! After listening to Moshe Sharrot- I kept wishing we could trade him for JFD whom Scotty Reston refered to so truly as our " most potent unguided missle!" But on second thought- would we want to inflict him on the new State?

Your favorite Englishman Ramdolph Chuchill stopped with me over the Eden talks which he was covering and though you would'nt have condoned it you would have enjoyed his attacks on Hank Byroade in my house when he addressed him as "the Egptian Ambassador to the United States".

I really do believe that I have never heard any single TV show so praised as your Middle East analysis. It must be rewarding.

I hope something will be bringing you here soon so you can come in for a drink or dine. I am in a new house.

Bless you, Kay.

My dear Mr. Ambassador:

SEE IT NOW is preparing to do an hour or a ninety-minute television program on some of the problems in the Middle East. It is our purpose to send Howard K. Smith, CBS' Chief European correspondent, to Cairo on or about the 25th of January to prepare the Egyptian coverage of this story. Accompanying Mr. Smith will be reporter and production man Edmund Scott, of SEE IT NOW's New York office, cameraman Charles Mack and soundman Robert Huttenloch.

I have asked Mr. Scott to go to the Egyptian Embassy in Washington to make the original contact and to make whatever arrangements are required preparatory to the departure of our reporters and cameramen. Mr. Scott will tell you about our hopes and plans. It is our intention, as journalists, to take our television audience to Egypt and present an honest report on what is going on in this important area and what are some of the issues which have made trouble between the Arab nations and Israel. It is hoped that your Embassy will have some ideas about how we should do this story, and we are looking forward to suggestions from your information people in Cairo. We are sending a similar crew and camera team into Israel.

Thank you very much for seeing Mr. Scott. We are prepared to discuss any further arrangements with you should any other questions arise.

I have the honor to remain,

Respectfully yours,

Dear Ed:

I thought you did a magnificent job in explaining the facts of life in the far East to the American people. I suggest you show this film to Dulles. He could use a little enlightening on the subject. There is a minimum of courage left in this country and that's why I'm so grateful to you. Yours is one of the few voices that still sounds as if it's even slightly left of dead center.

Item #2: A friend of mine, named Norman Krasna, (you may vaguely remember him as the author of "Dear Ruth", "John Loves Mary" and many movies), has just returned from Paris where he completed "The Ambassador's Daughter", a comedy with Olivia deHavilland, Adolph Menjou and a host of others. He has a beautiful home here - magnificently furnished - and he, himself, is a very witty and interesting converstionalist. He has four children, a lovely wife (the ex Mrs. Al Jolson) and some fascinating tales to tell of his experiences in French movie making; the differences in technique, attitude, etc. I only suggest this because it might be a departure from any of the "Person to Person" converstional gambits you have had. If you are not interested, forget the whole thing. And, remember - you're still my hero.

Regards,

Groucho

P.S. If you missed "The Last Hurrah" by Edwin O'Connor, you're missing the book of the year. Despite the fact that it was plucked by the Book of the Month, it's still quite a story.

"Egypt-Israel"
3/13/56

5b—See It Now—"Egypt—Israel"

The first of the See It Now broadcasts on the Middle East this year was an hour-and-a-half long political documentary entitled, "Egypt—Israel," (presented from 8:30-10:00 pm on March 13) which covered the origins and issues of the bitter dispute between both countries. The program featured probing, newsmaking interviews with General Abdul Gamal Nasser of Egypt and Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion of Israel by veteran correspondents Edward R. Murrow and Howard K. Smith respectively.

To give Americans a first hand view of the character and nature of the two countries, See It Now's cameras traveled extensively through both of them, revealing their people and their attitudes, proving their strength and weaknesses, describing their lands and their history.

Variety said, "Last Tuesday's hour-and-a-half, on-the-spot report on the Arab-Israel tensions was 'electronic journalism' at its best, at once frightening and fascinating."

Harriet Van Horne wrote in the New York World-Telegram and Sun, "Television, in essaying such documentaries as this one makes our homework as citizens of the world ever so much easier. ...This was a splendid moment in television."

For its outstanding effort to bring the people and problems of a far off, but vital area into the homes of American television viewers, CBS Television submits See It Now—"Egypt—Israel" for consideration by the Board of Judges of the George Foster Peabody Awards.

5b—See It Now—"Coverage of The Middle East Crisis"

The problems of the Middle East are among the most important and complex of any area in the world. They stem from the fact that the Middle East, with its rich oil deposits and its Suez Canal lifeline, is inextricably bound to the economy of Western Europe. Its problems are complicated by the rising tides of nationalism in the area and by the counterbalancing forces of colonialism. They are made still more complex by the growing demands for racial equality among the Middle East's emerging black and brown peoples. And the confusion is further compounded by the existence of bitter animosity between Israel and her Arab neighbors and almost as deep rivalries among the Arab countries themselves.

Each of these vital and continually changing aspects of the Middle East situation has been covered clearly, thoroughly and with great insight by a series of See It Now programs presented on CBS Television during the past year.

See It Now's remarkable coverage of the Middle East crisis includes the following specific broadcasts:

"Egypt—Israel"—an hour-and-a-half long program about the conflict of those two nations presented on March 13.

"Report from Africa"—a two part program about the rising tides of nationalism and racial equality, presented on April 23 and May 17.

"Suez"—an hour-long program about the significance of Egypt's seizure of the canal, presented on October 7.

"Special Reports from Israel"—two 15 minute broadcasts by Edward R. Murrow about the Israeli invasion of the Sinai Peninsula, presented on November 13 and 14.

Each of these See It Now programs is submitted by CBS Television in the conviction that it is a worthy candidate for a George Foster Peabody Award. Taken together, these broadcasts represent an unmatched achievement in the coverage of an extremely difficult and continually developing international situation of crucial importance to the entire world.

The See It Now series on the Middle East presented during the past year has given the American people an excellent over-all view of the problems of that vital area. Separately, each of the programs stands on its own merits for its outstanding contribution to our understanding of specific phases of the Middle East crisis.

For this reason CBS Television has grouped all of the See It Now broadcasts from the Middle East into one entry for consideration by the Board of Judges of the George Foster Peabody Awards, and at the same time presents each of the programs for separate consideration by the Board for an individual award. A more detailed description of the programs follows.

Murrow's Mideast Coverage Is Another TV Milestone

There is nothing on radio or TV which can compare with Edward R. Murrow, news-wise.

His coverage of the Middle East crisis last night was a milestone in TV. This was powerful, this was informative, this was a TV prize-winning show.

Sometime during the night it was announced that Sid Caesar and Nanette Fabray had parted company. This was supposedly a world-shaking report. Actually, this is really quite secondary to the real news of the day—that Murrow again had made a terrific news coverage.

Caesar had dumped his Nanette, or Nanette had dumped Sid. This seemed quite insignificant when the impact of Murrow's Egypt-Israel program was considered.

Today we see headlines about Cyprus and Algeria. Today we read that Israel has offered a "direct peace offensive" to make an agreement with the Arab states.

Today we read that 18 U. S. senators have urged that Great Britain give political voice to those who are championing Cyprus.

So along comes Murrow to point up the great rebellion between the Arab states and Israel. It is TV at its most powerful. It is the sort of TV we may expect to see regularly in the very near future.

Murrow simply has learned to use microphones and cameras to their best advantage. He has learned to prepare for a big international news story months before the real story occurs. Let's give the fellow credit. He does not wait for the story to break. He anticipates it.

What is there in our future, as far as TV international coverage is concerned? We soon will see personalities and plain people from all over the world. Soon TV will show us the people who may determine whether we can remain at peace, or whether we must go to war.

Murrow's Israel-Egypt coverage gives us an idea of how world news will be covered in future. A fine hope for peace probably exists in the fact that we will meet peoples of other lands via the TV cameras.

It must have occurred to many that this Murrow show signaled a new era in world relationships. Here was an objective, first-hand report on one of the biggest stories of the century. The big difference between this and stories of other centuries was that the people of the U. S. were quickly informed. They did not have to wait for the pony express or the Indian runner.

I cannot wait for Murrow and CBS to perform new miracles. TV comes of age with shows like this one.

MUSICAL PRODUCTION, "It's A Most Unusual Day" stars Marilyn Erskine and Fred MacMurray on the Screen Directors Playhouse tonight (KYW-TV, 8).

Dear Louie:

I sure do thank you for the kind words about the Egypt-Israel effort. It was the most difficult thing we have ever undertaken; and the response has been the most encouraging thing I have encountered in twenty years, not because it was overwhelmingly favorable but because it reflects the thinking of people deeply and emotionally committed to look facts squarely in the face and to recognize what was, in fact, a painful excercise in objectivity.

Please convey my best wishes to your entire family.

Dear Howard -

Thank you for your good letter of March 1st. I am delighted to know that everything worked out so well with Scott and Mack and I hope the opportunity of your working with them again will be part of SEE IT NOW's future.

With eight days to go before the show, we are in the final stages of distilling about 170,000 feet of film into less than 9,000. We are all convinces it's a balanced job. Fortunately for all, Ben Gurion and Nasser are equally eloquent which prevents the unhappy situation of having a spokesman for one side outshine the other and possibly warp the respective values of the argument. As you might imagine, the pressure on us from all sides has been considerable. We have told all of them that this is a program by and about Egypt and Israel - all of the opinions expressed will be by citizens of these two countries. Ed and I decided that the confines of ninety minutes and so much film made it impossible for us to use his conclusion or yours. They complement each other rather well without arguing the point, but we just couldn't use them without dropping two or three other very usable sequences.

The interview with Nasser is a ten strike and I rather expect it will be in the news by Wednesday, the 14th. I'm sending you, via separate cover, a full transcript of what Ben Gurion said which you can keep for your files. As Ed cabled you, I think, a Ben Gurion album and a Nasser album is to be published immediately after the broadcast. You can have as many of each as you desire. Scott has arranged to send the whole show via the Egyptian diplomatic pouch and we'll get one to you as soon as possible.

Cordially,

Fred W. Friendly

P.S. The script you wrote was most [redacted]ful. The Smith opening is a combination of your narration at Gaza and in Cairo and makes rather an eloquent beginning. You may be interested to know we have lost much sleep over whether to open with Israel or Egypt. (Still undecided).

After seeing your magnificient television review of the Arab-Israel problem Monday night I could not resist the impulse to write you to send my hearty congratulations. This is one of the most eloquent proofs I have ever seen of the documentary value of television when its possibilities are really realized. As a student of international relations I was amazed to perceive what an invaluable contribution to our understanding of that perplexing problem your program has made. We have always thought that in order really to comprehend such difficult issues of international politics it was necessary to make an on-the-spot inquiry. I do not know whether this will be true from now on; you succeed in bringing the situation right into our homes.

I should like to add that during the years you appear to have done more for radio and television than any other person. In fact the only weakness you ever showed was when you hired me to do those broadcasts to France in 1935!

Dear Ed:

While the reactions of myself and guests to your Arab-Israel program are still fresh, let me give you the highlights - such as they may be worth.

Our guests included: two specialists in the Middle East from the UN Secretariat, an Egyptian Secretariat Member who was associated with Nasser on his welfare program, George Denny, an Air Force officer, and an editor who served USIS in the Middle East during and shortly after the war.

As you can guess, the reactions were quite varied. Those who had no particular background or experience in the area felt that your program was very fairly balanced and surprisingly "pro-Egyptian". Those who looked at it through first-hand knowledge of the area and the Palestine problem felt in varrying degrees that it was "loaded" in favor of Israel.

This struck me as an interesting contrast - one that emphasizes that everyone reads into what he sees or hears what he already knows and feels about the subject. To those who felt very pro-Israel every second devoted to Egypt seemed like a minute and every minute allocated to Israel seemed like a second. Those who knew the most about the situation were most keenly aware of things left out - and considered the selectivity a deliberate distortion.

For example, the Egyptian and two or three of the "old hands" in our living room felt that the selection of refugees who vented their antagonism toward the U.S. was designed to prejudice Americans against them. Others didn't take it that way. Everybody seemed to agree that the Israeli side was invested with emotional content while the Egyptian side was rather coldly intellectual and factual.

The discussion went on vigorously for two hours after the program. I would summarize it like this: in terms of the realities and facts known to people who have experienced and studied them, the editing was quite "loaded" on the Israeli side; while in terms of this program in comparison with other TV and mass media treatment of the issues was strikingly balanced and in effect challenging to many Zionist claims. We felt that Nasser made a good impression compared to Ben Gurion - created an image that would be hard to distort into "devil".

I had expected to see and hear an interesting series of contrasting answers by Nasser and Ben Gurion on the same questions - after what you had told me. So I was somewhat surprised that Ben Gurion didn't deal with some of the crucial questions which were put so bluntly to Nasser. I dare say that an even more exciting and enlightening program could me made from the scraps on the cutting-room floor than was made with the material you selected. But on balance it was a very interesting and useful performance. I had the feeling that Smith's bold reporting and editorializing on Sunday, March 4, put you under heavy pressures.

I would appreciate the return of the papers I lent you - if it is not too much trouble. Best to you and yours.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Just a note to say thank you for your magnificent journalistic examination of the Israel-Egypt dispute.

I consider your program last night Television's finest moment - you would do your country a great service if you would consider entering a political career.

Very sincerely,

The Murrow invasion - and capture - of Israel

D-Day for the Murrow invasion of Israel was set for Monday 30th January; H-Hour was 22:00 hours when he stepped off the plane at Lydda Airport. Within fifteen minutes, he was on his way to Jerusalem and, after a clean-up at the King David Hotel, he was off to a midnight meeting with some of Israel's top officials to ask the kind of tough questions that would get him quickly to the core of the current Israel-Arab problem. At 2:30 a.m. he was deposited at the door of his hotel, and five and a half hours later, he was standing in front of two cameras with U.N. Truce Chief of Staff General Burns, on the bleak, sun-less strip of no-man's land between Israel and Jordan, just beyond the Mandelbaum Gate, a familiar mike in his hand, uttering the opening line of his next "See It Now" television programme "This is Ed Murrow, talking to you from a no-man's land in the Middle East"....

That's how it began - and that's how it went on for the next ten days, a thorough coverage at breakneck speed of the life and mood, the fears and hopes of the people of Israel. The result will form half of the ninety minute show which CBS will present at 8:30 p.m. on March 13th, an unprecedented length for a television documentary. The other forty-five minutes will be devoted to Egypt. Howard K. Smith, CBS Bureau Chief in Europe, headed the team that covered the Egyptian side.

"An essay in transportation" is how Ed Murrow put the purpose of his programme, designed to point up for American viewers the current pattern of Israel-Egyptian tension. "I'd like to use cameras and microphoes to show intelligent Americans what they would see for themselves given the opportunity of this trip to the Middle East. And perhaps a little more, enabling them to meet some folk, both high and humble, they might not themselves have had a chance of seeing...."

But he was talking in understatement. For the real standard he set himself was the capture of an intangible - how to transmit to the American public the delicate intricacy of the strands that make up the design for living of another people - for the simple truth, like life, is never simple; and how to get all the colours of the rainbow on his palette - for black and white are hardly the sole ingredients of the middle Eastern - or any other -picture. No one whom he met in Israel can be sure that he succeeded. But all are quite certain that no one has ever tried so hard, or taken such pains, to discover truth.

To be fair, Murrow's physical invasion of Israel was something of a walk-over. His name was not strange to Israeli ears. Not that the country enjoys - if that is the word -television as yet. But newsstands brim with American papers and periodicals, and much was therefore known of some of his more outstanding "See It Now" programmes, notably the Oppenheimer and Nehru interviews, and the documentaries on McCarthy, South Africa and Farm Surplus. And there are thousands of today's Israelis, who emigrated from Europe, who recall Ed Murrow's broadcasts from blitz-torn London during the war, with their familiar "This Is London...".

And so the welcome he got as he stepped from the plane was not the frigid, impersonal, diplomatic reception accorded to the general run of V.I.P's but the warm greeting of a people who admire competence and honesty.

His technical team, serving as a kind of advance landing party, had hit the Israel beach-head five days earlier and managed to land equipment. Marty Barnett and Leo Rossi each headed a film unit, aided by Dave Blumgart, Larry Gianneschi and Robert Clemens. Marty operated a Wall single system camera and Leo an Akely. Cameras and sound and lighting equipment weighed one ton.

The more important sequences and all the major interviews were filmed with both cameras, so as not to disturb the interview by stopping to reload. And both teams shot a ratio of nearly twenty to one to ensure perfection. For the forty-five minute Israel part of the programme, the teams filmed 80,000 feet - nearly fifteen hours of screening time. Neither Hollywood nor newsreel nor any other television programme reaches so high a ratio of shooting. It is costly but it gives results.

The seventh member of the party reached Israel two days before Murrow. This was Fred Friendly, burly co-editor of the "See It Now" programme, who bustled through the next forty-eight hours on a personal reconaissance of people and places to devise, as Chief of Operations, a feasible plan for his General. It is true to say that Israel isn't quite the same after Fred's visit. With his departure, Israelis aver that Israel is the most peaceful place in the world.

First hint of the Friendly touch came with his plan of a skirmish before the arrival of the Chief - an attack on Israel's parliament, called the Knesset, since there was unlikely to be an opportunity of tackling this body during Murrow's crowded schedule. Fred remained unbothered by the fact that no comprehensive film coverage had ever been made of the Knesset in session. On the contrary, this served as a sharpened spur. And while frantic Government officials were despatched to placate the Speaker, trucks rolled up with cameras, sound and lighting equipment. These were installed shortly before the session opened, with disturbance only to two opposition members who entered the Chamber to find their seats occupied by Leo Rossi's Akley. Fears harboured during the filming operation that this may well mean the end of parliamentary democracy in Israel proved groundless. Question time passed off without a hitch, discussion flowed smoothly, and members emerged from the ordeal with sufficient strength to celebrate, that very evening, the Knesset's seventh birthday. By this time, Fred was on his way to the airport to meet Ed. Janet Murrow followed shortly after.

Ed's interview with General Burns at 8 o'clock next morning took place in no-man's land exactly mid-way between Jordan-held Old Jerusalem and Israel-held New Jerusalem. Rain which had greeted Fred's arrival stopped when Ed reached town, and kept off throughout his entire stay. The cameras were in position when Ed and the General reached Mandelbaum Gate - Leo and Marty had started setting up at 6 a.m.. Mandelbaum Gate, the frontier post on Israel's side of Jerusalem, is an adventure in semantics. It has been so widely mentioned in the world press that popular imagination conceives it as something at least as majestic as Berlin;s Brandenburg Tor. It is in fact a tumble-down ruin, shattered by Arab Legion twenty-five pounders during Israel's War of Independence. It belonged, before hostilities, to a Dr. Mandelbaum.

With cameras whirring while Ed talked to the General, Arab Legionaires popped their heads out of one building while Israeli soldiers watched from another. Marty's camera did a pan shot which took in the guards from both sides - surely the first time that rival troops, in their own positions, have been captured in the same shot.

Next assignment was the campus of the new Hebrew University that is being built at the western outskirts of the city. The original buildings of the University are on Mount Scopus. This is in Israel hands. But access to it lies through Jordan held territory, and this is denied to students. They study at present in improvised lecture rooms, but a new University is now being constructed in a beautiful valley near the western entrance to the city. It is characteristic of the Murrow technique that coverage of this cultural institution was achieved not through the President or one of the professors but by interviewing one of the building workers on the site. He was a Russian immigrant who had fled from Moscow shortly after the revolution. Today he is one of Israel's aristocrats - a man who works with his hands. He speaks with pride of the numerous buildings of Israel he has helped to construct. He spoke not only of the architectural grandeur of the new edifice but of the spirit of this centre of learning. "Here is the new physics laboratory, and here the department of history. The buildings are used as fast as eanh is completed. You can't go in there - that's the new botanical hall, and there's a lecture on at the moment. Finished only last week, it's now in full working use, from 8 in the morning to 8 at night." Ed got a glimpse before he left of a model of what the completed university will look like in five years time. He promised to come back and see it on the ground.....

Next stop was the south. A border settlement near the Gaza strip. Word had come through that rain had turned the fields there into hip-high mud, and rubber boots were desirable. And so the convoy, two trucks and three cars, parked outside Jerusalem's most elegant shoe-store while one by one the teams filed in, and emerged looking like sons of the soil.

"Go South" say the words of a popular Israeli song, and south went Murrow, leaving the winding Wadi Sureik where Samson courted Delilah, and heading for the barren desert lands of the Negev. But land that was barren five years ago was now green with barley and clover, fruit of Israel's giant irrigation plan to bring water from the abundant north to nourish the arid south.

At the northernmost point of the Gaza strip, an Israel Defence Forces escort awaited the Murrow party to take them to the border settlement. For the track then leaves the tarmacadamed road and runs parallel, and close to, the border, and while Murrow sought no protection, the Israel Government was taking no chances. Men and vehicles have been mined and shop up on this very track with grim frequency during the last two years.

Half an hour later the teams arrived at Nahal Oz, without incident. Nahal Oz is the Hebrew for Stream of Strength. It is an agricultural cooperative farm, called a Kibbutz, in which an entire community own and work the land in common, putting into the common pool their labour power and their idealism - and there's a good deal of that - and receiving from the community the satisfaction of their basic wants - food, clothing, shelter, group social living, and the right to serve. It is exactly five hundred yards from the Egyptian border, opposite the Egyptian held town of Gaza. The frontier is a furrow. The kibbutz is surrounded by a barbed wire fence, ringed with floodlights that expose would-be infiltrators at night, and dotted with entrenched look-out positions and watchtowers which are manned day and night. The young Israeli farmers, men and women, move around with rifle slung automatically over their shoulder, followers of the biblical injunction in this land of the Bible "With one hand on the plough, the other on the sword."

It was to Nahal Oz that Ed Murrow came to capture the mood of life on the frontier. While the crews were busy transferring equipment from truck to tractor, to navigate the mud - the report had been no overstatement - Ed and Fred floundered towards the most forward look-out post, and just beyond the frontier espied the Egyptian positions facing them. They returned gingerly to the settlement as dusk fell and the lights came on. Waiting for them was Uri - a twenty-year old Israeli born golden-haired farmer. Like most of his fellow members of the kibbutz, Uri had been born and brought up in urban surroudings - his father is a successful merchant in Tel-Aviv - who had responded to the call of pioneering and come south to farm and defend the frontier. His English was not polished but understandable. Ed decided to interview him on camera. But he was on duty that night, on guard in one of the watchtowers. "Very well," said Ed, "we'll interview you at your post - if you won't mind." And that's where the interview took place.

Setting up the equipment was not so easy. Powerful lights were needed for this night exterior. The only electricity available was that run off the kibbutz generator, and it wasn't certain whether it would carry the required load. At one point Fred was murmuring about cutting off the kibbutz lights for the duration of the interview, but the combined skills of Dave Blumgart and Larry Gianneschi and the kibbutz electrician succeeded in extracting enough power to illumine both Ed and Uri without plunging the rest of the community in darkness.

Ploughing through mud, they ran a cable several hundred yards from the nearest point to the tower, adding lamp to lamp while Leo Rossi, (looking incidentally like Harry Truman), stood poised on the tower, checking his light meter, eyes screwed like some modern Diogenes in myopic search for truth, exclaiming at intervals "more light, more light."

Cameras and lamps in position, Ed, trailing his microphone, scrambled up the rickety stairs to the platform of the tower where Uri stood on guard. Another watchman took over duty while Uri answered Ed's questions - ranging from life in the kibbutz to what Uri thinks about when he keeps watch on the frontier. The interview lasted an hour. After five minutes, despite the lights and the lenses, it was clear that Uri had forgotten that he was on camera, and without self-consciousness, with frankness and freedom, chatted to the American commentator. At times, this fresh, happy-faced twenty-year-old Jewish farmer sounded like an ancient monk talking to a novice, as he tried to explain why he and his fellow members had spurned the cafes, movies and lights of the city to come and farm in this lonely and dangerous outpost. This is what gave them a basic sense of satisfaction - reviving an ancient but neglected land and defending it against attack. This is what enabled him to stare back, unflinching, at what he saw in his shaving mirror each morning. Not that there was melodrama in the way he spoke. Only in the implications in what he said. He was as free from emotional overtones as an All-American on the practice field. "What do I think about when I'm on guard? I think "Why do I have to do this? I'd much rather be in bed. And I'm sure that the Egyptian on guard on the other side of the frontier feels the same. I wish we could talk it over together. But so long as there's political tension, and so long as we're attacked, someone's got to guard the frontier, and I and my young friends feel that those 'someones' ought to be us. That's why we're here."

It was long past midnight when the party left to sleep what remained of the night at a new bungalow hotel near the Mediterranean at Ashkalon, of the biblical "Tell it not in Gath, tell it not in the streets of Ashkalon, lest the daughters of the Phillistines rejoice...". But the party was back the next morning, to cover the daily living sequences in a border settlement, the armed tractor driver who has to be careful, when ploughing near the frontier, to turn inside and not across the line; the young men and women at work and at rest; the children playing near the concrete anti-sniping wall that shields their kindergarten; the bomb-proof shelters; the peaceful cattle oblivious of their proximity to danger....

At midday, Ed broke off with one of the camera units to cover a border patrol. Listening in to a pre-patrol briefing, Ed asked these Israeli soldiers where they had come from. Replies ranged from Iraq to Yugoslavia, Morocco to Rumania, Poland to Israel born. All of course spoke Hebrew. Vehicles got stuck in the mud and they dismounted, continuing their patrol on foot. Ed followed as they moved along the border and then had to leave. There was much to be covered. While Fred stayed with the team that was continuing the coverage of Nahal Oz, Ed proceeded northwards to Heletz, scene of Israel's cuccessful oil strike some months ago. He managed, in his disarming way, to elicit from the standard clam-like lips of the local oil experts, facts about current production and future prospects which are not normally divulged. He left impressed with Israel's future oil hopes.

Rendezvous point for the two teams that evening was Beersheba, capital of the Negev. The party had an hour in which to wash and eat and they were whisked off to a new rural farming village three quarters of an hour away, which had recently been settled by new immigrants from Kurdistan. They were being taught music and dancing. Their instructor was the young Israeli composer who had authored "Tzena, Tzena." In a wooden hut in the heart of the desert, the young boys and girls sang the new songs of Israel and the old songs of their old country, and danced the folk dances of their new land.

It was a tired party that slept that night in the unseasonably frigid rooms of the Beersheba hotel.

And early next morning they were on the job, covering this desert town which had developed in seven years from a population of 300 to 23,000, with modern apartment houses, buildings, factories, a large hospital, schools and the largest cinema-cum-congress hall in the country. It was a Thursday morning, weekly market day for the surrounding Arab bedouin, who flocked to the city with their camels and donkeys to enjoy the finest sport in the Middle East -- bargaining. For sale were carpets and saddle bags, chicken and eggs, hand-woven fabrics and ornamented belts, silver-mounted daggers and Negev herbs - and even their camels if the price was right. Leo was lucky enough to get a shot of a couple of camel-mounted bedouin riding across a nearby crest with a large newly constructed flour mill in the background.

At midday the party left to cover the potash works at the Dead Sea. They took the new road, a remarkable piece of engineering, which winds and descends in gentle curves from 1200 feet above to 1200 feet below sea level. Here, at the southern end of the sultry lake, lies Sdom - of the illfated biblical Sodom and Gemorrah. It is marked today by a huge plant engaged in extracting potash from what is probably the richest treasure of salts in the world. For the Jordan flows into the Dead Sea and there is no outlet. Evaporation is so rapid in the heat that the salt content of what remains continually rises. No swimmer can drown in this inland sea, for it takes more than a single person's power to thrust his head under water. You just float. The surrounding terrain looks like moon country, rough, bleak mounds and crags, the colour of parchment, still and lifeless in the winter heat. But there is about it a rugged beauty and a grandeur made majestic by the background blue of the calm water. For some miles along the edge of the lake the cliffs are of pure salt. It is a tribute to Ed's reputation of honesty that no one described a salt-block near the track at 'Lot's wife.' From a high platform of the plant, near the giant separators, overlooking the salt-pans in the sea, Ed did a general commentary on the modern extraction of potash, magnesium and other chemicals which are exported to earn precious foreign exchange for the young State.

That night, too, was spent in Beersheba, for next morning, Murrow was to interview Israel's Prime Minister, David Ben Gurion, in his desert pioneer settlement, Sde Boker, to which he had retreated two years ago and where he still likes to spend his weekends and free moments.

The two crews left at 6 a.m. and when Ed arrived, cameras were already set up outside the Prime Minister's three-room wooden hut. Nature was kind. The sun shone and the desert wind had not yet begun to howl. (It started five minutes after the interview ended). Ed was introduced to Ben Gurion, they chatted for a few moments just to get accustomed to each other, sat down, and within a minute, the cameras started rolling. Murrow makes it a point not to discuss or rehearse his questions before the interview. Everything is done "on camera." The result is spontaneity on the television screen. And the nature and manner of the questioning are such as to put the interviewee at ease. The Ben Gurion interview lasted an hour. Observers present who have listened in to numerous interviews with the Prime Minister affirm that never before has he offered so rich a fare of fact and philosophy. He spoke freely and with great candour about the problems that beset the State, what he is doing, what he proposes to do and what he feels others should do. He told Ed, on camera and very much on the record, that he was prepared to sit down with Nasser and any other Arab leader "tomorrow, any place, at any time, to discuss peace and negotiate a peace treaty." He burked no question, evaded no issue. He replied fully to everything he was asked. The result must surely be the most comprehensive film record to date of the feelings, thoughts and ideas of the Prime Minister of Israel.

The interview over, Ben Gurion returned to his hut, while Ed and Fred wandered round the settlement securing additional background shots. This completed, Ed thought he would just slip over to the hut to say a final goodbye to the Premier. He knocked. There was no reply. He knocked again. Again no reply. He then opened the door, and walked in. Opposite the outer door was the kitchen. It was open. Standing by the sink stood the Prime Minister of Israel, engaged in washing a plate beneath a thin trickle of water that flowed reluctantly from the faucet. They bade each other 'Shalom' - the Hebrew greeting that means "peace" - and Ed returned to the car. He told Fred what he had just seen. Someone nearby suggested filming the scene of Ben Gurion in the kitchen. "Not on your life" said Ed, "no-one would believe it. They'd think it had been staged."

The party headed northwards to spend the night in Tel Aviv, the teeming, lively city on the Mediterranean and the largest city in Israel. It was their first evening of relaxation, and they spent it at a party given by young members of the Chamber theatre, a bright and talented group, whose outstanding recent successes have been Shaw's St. Joan and Shakespeare's As You Like It. Highspots of the evening were Israeli folk songs and Negro spirituals sung by a trio to a guitar accompaniment, a puppet show, and some highly diverting theatrical caricatures by a brilliantly talented pantomimist, Shai Ofir. It was 2:30 a.m. when the party got to bed. And by eight, they were on the road to an Arab village near the Jordan border.

This was Tira, a few hundred yards from the frontier and opposite the Jordan held city of Qalqiliah. It lies about 25 miles northeast of Tel Aviv. The party was received by the Arab mayor, in flowing robes and head-dress, and the Arab superintendent of schools who served as interpreter. They were taken up a hill to inspect the new reservoir which the Government had built and which meant, for the first time, a faucet in every Arab kitchen. Someone observed that this meant the passing of that centuries-old gracious sight - Arab women walking with slender grace from the well, a pitcher on their heads. But the women themselves who did the carrying were not at all reluctant to exchange the arduous romanticism for the boon of water on tap inside the house. The piping in of water to this village also meant green fields and abundant crops. Their standard of life had never been higher.

From coverage of water, Ed was taken to see the schools - including a high school built in the last couple of years. It was the first time the Arabs were receiving higher education. Some of the brighter pupils of this village have graduated to and are now students at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and at the Haifa Technion - Israel's M.I.T.

The Mayor then proudly led the party to the new hospital which is in course of construction. And they then wandered round the village.

In his interview, Ed asked the mayor what conditions were like for the Arabs of Israel. The mayor replied that he could speak only for his village, and he had the highest praise for the way the Government had helped to raise living standards beyond anything they had enjoyed under the British mandate and beyond those of villages in the Arab lands. None had such high educational and health services, instruction in the use of modern agricultural techniques, water. "How about political freedom" asked Ed. "We have it," said the mayor. He had been elected by popular vote at the last election. "How many parties do you have in your village?" "Two" said the mayor. "What's the difference between them?" Here the mayor was somewhat nonplussed. He shrugged a shoulder, laughed, and then said that in fact there was little difference between the two. "In that case," said Ed, "whom do I vote for if I ever come back here and settle?" "Oh, me of course" beamed the mayor. He had one complaint against the Government. Araba living in the border area had to have a permit to move about the country. This was irksome, though he added that in the last two years permits were given freely and for six months or yearly periods, rather than for each trip. He understood the reason as an anti-infiltration device, but still it was tiresome and he looked forward to the day when permits would be unnecessary.

The only casualty on this visit was Janet Murrow. While the units were busy filming, Janet wandered through the dirt-track alleyways of the village on her own. An Arab lady standing near the door of her house invited her in for tea. Janet was delighted at the chance of seeing how they live. In she went, through the courtyard and into a large room rich with rugs and tapestries. Tea was brought. Janet put the cup to her lips. She tasted a thick, syrup-sweet liquid, and was about to spit it out when she remembered youthful tales about Arab hospitality, and the importance of not offending by a refusal. With great stoicism, she drained the cup. It was a green looking Janet who joined up with the party an hour later....

From Tira the convoy headed north, to the Sea of Galilee (also known as Lake Kinnereth), through the Valley of Esdraelon and down to the Jordan plain. Ed wanted to interview the men who fish in this Lake and find out from them, rather than from the politicians, what they felt about the Israel punitive action against the Syrians some months ago. The party made for Ein Gev, also a kibbutz, on the eastern edge of the Lake, close to the Syrian border and two and a half miles south of the scene of the fighting. The sun was waning as the party arrived, but by a record - and back - breaking transfer of equipment from truck to jetty and the speediest possible setting up of cameras admittedly under the goaded barbs of Fred's tongue - Leo and Marty managed a glorious dusk shot of fishing vessels moving out into the sea.

Then came an example of Ed's and Fred's insistence on what they call "things being kosher." Nothing faked; nothing posed; nothing staged. Whatever is the normal activity - that is what the cameras must capture. Simulated activity - even if the result on the screen is the same or better - is spurned.

Ed wanted to interview the fishermen while they were engaged in actual fishing. For a night shot, much light was needed. The easiest way to get this shot was to set up cameras on the jetty, run a power line from the settlement, and have the fishermen in their boats just a few yards away. In this way the cameras would be steady, the lights right, there would be no vibration from the engines to disturb the microphone, no need for intricate haulage of equipment, and the whole job could be wrapped up in an hour. It all seemed feasible, particularly as the shots would be close and none would know that it was being filmed near the jetty rather than in the open sea. There was only one thing wrong. It wasn't 'kosher.' "Do you ever fish near the jetty?" Ed asked the fishermen. "Never," they replied. "Where do you fish - where are you fishing tonight?" "About a mile and a half out, in the heart of the Lake." "Okay," said Ed, "that's where we'll do the interview."

Then Fred got busy, ably assisted by some of the bright Israel Government Press Office boys who had come along to help. They got a couple of Israel police launches to supply power for the lighting, camera crew, kibbutznicks and police hauled equipment from jetty to launch, and cameras were set up on either side of the bridge of one of the police boats from which the filming was to take place. Ed stepped into a light motor boat, used by the kibbutz for echo soundings, and the nautical party moved off into the night, extreme care being taken not to disturb the fish.

This is how they fish in the Sea of Galilee - probably the most noted ancient fishing spot in the world. The boat with the echo sounder does a reconaissance in the late afternoon to detect the fishing ground. The area is marked with buoys. At dusk, small vessels proceed to the grounds, equipped with large LUX lamps at their stern. On arrival they drop anchor and wait. The light from the lamps attract the fish. An hour and a half later, other boats go out, drop nets around the area of light, and then haul in their catch. Sometimes they are lucky. Sometimes they draw a blank. The night the Murrow party went out, they were lucky to haul in four tons of fish. The interview took place while the catch was actually being brought in over the side.

As the party neared the fishermen, they were suddenly apprised of two problems. Fred told the captain of the launch that the cameras had to get to within ten feet of the fishing boats. But this endangered the nets, which would probably be torn by the propellers. And the engine had to be cut off, so as not to disturb the microphone. But this meant no control in case of drift. The problems were solved by the kibbutznick in charge of the light motor boat which was carrying Ed to the location. Fifty yards from the fishing ground, the launches cut their motors. They were tied to the light motor boat and brought gently in to the fishing area. Ed stepped in to one of the fishing vessels and began chatting to the men as they hauled the fish over the side, singing as they worked.

Fred barked orders to the cameramen, the soundmen, and the sundry kibbutznicks and police who were each holding a lamp to light up the men. The spotlights of the launches had proved unsatisfactory - they threw a powerful beam but the area of illumination was small. Improvised lighting had been hurriedly secured by removing the headlamps of every truck in the settlement and running them off the launch generators. Every spare man aboard held a lamp.

And then Fred gave the order for the cameras to roll. The sight was incredible. Ed standing immaculate in the fishing vessel as wet nets were hauled in at his feet, fish jumping and glistening in the bright light as they came over the side, a prevailing hush - even the fishermen stopped singing at the sound of Fred's roar "QUIET NOW" - and overhead, the star-studded sky covering the S a of Galilee as serene as it must have been two thousand years ago when other, more noted, fishermen cast their nets on this very spot. On the prow of the police launch, having a whale of a time, legs dangling over the side, and flanked by Leo and Marty behind their cameras, sat Fred, like some biblical Bligh, running this amphibious show, and barking clipped orders to the cameramen as if they were marine gunners firing salvos. One youngster holding a lamp slipped on the wet deck in the middle of the shooting. He was saved only because Fred didn't know the Hebrew for "fifty lashes."

With the limitless possibilities for everything going wrong, it is amazing that everything went right. Technically, the sequences and the interviews were perfect. Again, there was an absence of self-consciousness as these young Jewish fishermen answered Ed's questions. "What do you think" asked Ed, "about the action against the Syrians for which your government was censured by the Security Council - the actinn which took place just off the Lake, a couple of miles over in that direction, I understand?" "Well," said one lad, "I'm not a politician, just a fisherman. This is our lake. No one disputes it. It's entirely in Israel territory. The Syrians put up positions on the lakeside and fire at us. You see how we fish. We go out in boats with lamps. The light attracts the fish. But it also attracts the Syrians. It isn't pleasant to sit out here in these boats, and have pot shots taken at us. Something has to be done. If members of the Security Council could be here and see what happens, I don't think we'd have been censured. I think they'd have had something to say to the Syrians. Incidentally, since the action, there's been no incident, and we've been able to fish without disturbance ever since."

The party left the fishermen singing songs from the Bible and songs of Israel pioneers, and returned to the jetty. As they landed they heard strains of Mozart coming from the settlement dining room. The crews broke their earlier record of transferring equipment and raced to set up cameras to capture for the screen the Saturday night concert in this border village.

It was being held in the dining room. Tables had been cleared, and room made near the kitchen for the celebrated Israel Quartet - Fenyvesz violin, his sister, viola; Thelma Yellin, cello; and Tal, piano - who played chamber works ranging from Mozart to Prokofieff, Beethoven to Dvorzak. The farmers and fishermen of this settlement, their wives and children, sat on bare forms in this stark room, entranced by music some of which had been composed for and first played in more courtly and ornate surroundings. But no eighteenth century ducal salon could have been more appreciative. And the audience was delighted when Fred requested some encores to shoot close-ups of the players. It was late when the party got to bed in the kibbutz guest rooms.

And they rose early next morning to make a precarious climb in a command car to the top of Sussita, the hill captured by the kibbutznicks from the Syrians during the War of Independence which the Arabs had used to pour shells on to the settlement. They descended to breakfast at the small rotunda-like open cafe at the lakeside, off grilled freshly caught catfish steaks. Ed, in biblical mood, chose instead grilled St. Peter's fish, the speciality of the Sea of Galilee.

Tragedy hit the party on their way to the next stop. At the kibbutz the previous evening, a bowlful of radishes had been put on the table. There was something special about them for the American visitors. They were the size of grenades, and they were delicious. It took three powerful men to remove Fred from the table so that the teams could get on with the shooting. Before retiring, Fred had been heard to murmur something about getting a supply of the radishes taken to the cars, to spice the journey. Halfway round the Lake, just as they were nearing the Mount of Beatitudes, Fred suddenly exclaimed, "where are the radishes?" A white faced Government press liaison officer had to confess that he thought Fred had been joking and apologised for this grave logistic snarl-up. Only Ed's persuasive insistence prevented Fred from ordering the convoy to turn round and get back to the kibbutz. Radishes in Israel are now known as Friendly's Delight. Any connection with Sherwood is furiously denied.

Waiting for the party on a hill to the north of the Lake stood Bud Mollahan, an American agricultural expert who is in Israel under the U. S. technical assistance programme to teach Israel farmers new techniques. Ed interviewed him as they faced the Sea of Galilee. To their left was the Mount of Beatitudes, scene of the Sermon on the Mount. A little to the right was Migdal, birthplace of Mary Magdalene. Bud spoke of "Operation Cowboy," under which land unfit for cultivation was being reseeded for range farming, for the raising of beef cattle. As they spoke, Israel cowboys, one riding a short tough quarter horse which had been flown out from Texas a few months before, weaved in and out of the fine herd, for all the world as if they had been born in a corral rather than a European ghetto. "How do the Jews take to farming," Ed asked Bud. "Like a duck to water," said Bud. And he added in a rich and fluent drawl "it"s funny, the Jews have been away from the land for two thousand years. They've come here and started up again. And they make fine farmers. Look at what they've done in the desert down south." And he went on to describe farming in modern Israel and how eager these farmers have been to learn new methods which experts have come in to teach.

It was time to leave. Next appointment was with a jet-fighter squadron midway between the Jordan Valley and Haifa, taking in Nazareth on the way. The party was taken on a tour of this Arab Christian city, visiting the Church of the Annunciation, and the caves nearby where Mary is believed to have heard the news from the Angel Gabriel, where the family of Jesus lived, the stone table on the floor where they ate, the workbench of Joseph the Carpenter. A new modern church is now being built on the site of the Annunciation.

Four jet Meteors were just taking off when the party moved through the gate of this Air Force base in northern Israel. Colonel Ezer Weismann, nephew of Israel's First President, and commander of the unit was waiting to greet Ed. He was one of the two officers on the field who had been trained by the RAF during the war. The rest were all Israel trained flyers. As they crossed one tarmac, Ed asked if it was long enough to take a Meteor. "Long enough to take a Sabre jet" was the Colonel's quick reply. This is a sore point with the Israelis. The Egyptians are now receiving big shipments of Russian MIG fighters. Israel has nothing to match them for speed. She has asked the USA for F 86s - which are by now too slow for the American Air Force but fast enough for Israel. So far the answer has been NO.

Not that the disappointment was discernible on Weizmann's face. It was as fresh and cherry as the text-book version of the face of a fighter ace. From his lips, when he talks to his men, comes a rapid fire of Hebrew interspersed with RAF witticisms. Ed interviewed him against a background of obsolete P 51s - the only planes Israel has received - on payment - from the United States.

When they shot a pilot entering a Meteor, they noticed that his forearm had a tattooed number. It transpired that he had been a refugee in a Hitler concentration camp. "Which one," asked Ed. "Buchenwald" was the reply. Ed Murrow happens to have been the first American correspondent to enter Buchenwald on the day of its liberation. They had been in the same camp at the same time. But the robust young flier of today had then weighed 75 pounds. He had been in the hospital, suffering from frozen legs. The Germans inoculated most of the patients with a death needle - but hadn't managed to reach his cot before the death camp was liberated. Today, an experienced fighter pilot, he serves as flying instructor to young Israeli cadets.

Lunch time next day found the party out at an Israel army parachute base to cover a drop. Marty and Larry set up their camera inside one of the planes near the despatcher to cover the jump while Leo and Dave and the rest of the party drove out to the dropping area. Marty was put out by the refusal to give him a parachute. He wanted to follow the boys after filming them. And Ed was only restrained from jumping by Fred's ingenuity in having him driven to the dropping area straight from Tel Aviv. While waiting for the planes to come over, Israel's Chief of Staff, Major-General Moshe Dayan arrived. The interview had been arranged there to save time. But as luck had it - Friendly luck it was called - the paratroopers came over in the middle of the interview, forming an appropriate back-drop to the sequence. Dayan, like Ben Gurion, was utterly frank. The Americans, he said, were making the British mistake of jettisoning friendly Israel and trying to buy Arab support. History had shown that Arab so called friendship was worthless. It was built on shifting sands. Despite all the aid the Arab States had received from America and Britain, Egypt had just done a deal with the Russians, opening her doors to vast shipments of arms - and to Russian influence. The obvious logic would be for America to supply defensive weapons to Israel, matching the Czech supply to Egypt tank for tank, plane for plane, gun for gun. Instead the American logic seems to be "The Egyptians are getting arms from the Soviets; they must therefore keep getting arms from us." Egypt, having learnt the virtue of diplomatic blackmail, gets arms and aid from both sides, making her strong enough to carry out her threat of attacking Israel, while Israel's arms position remains static. This is the certain road to war in the Middle East.

Dayan, who lost an eye while serving in the British forces during the Syrian campaign, is a farmer. He was born in a kibbutz and brought up in a cooperative small-holding village which his father founded. He has a fine war record and is proud of the fact that the Israel Army devotes as much time and energy to the education of the soldier as it does to his military training. "We seek," says he "to make the Israel soldier a public-spirted citizen in time of peace and an effective fighter in time of war." He considers the army to be the greatest adult educational force in the country for the integration of the immigrants. He is certainly an unusual brass-hat. Asked what he'd most like to do, he says - and he means it: "Get out of the army and back to farming."

From paratroopers to protocol. It was getting late and Ed and Fred had a dinner date with Foreign Minister Moshe Sharret in Jerusalem. They made it just in time. Dress was informal, though the dinner party was large. Janet learned some new recipes from Zippora Sharett, notably the grated beetroot, banana and nut. Ed couldn't eat too much as he had an interview immediately after. And Fred was delightfully unprotocolish by jumping up between courses to find out how Leo and Marty were getting along with the setting up of cameras and lights in the Foreign Minister's study. It was, however, a pretty well-fed lot that moved in front of the lenses for the television interview. The cameras started rolling at 11 and went on to just past midnight. Again, the Murrow method of putting interviewee at ease worked - and paid off, in spontaneity of reply, frankness and candour. Sharett talked to Ed, in answer to crucial questions, as he would to a fellow member of the Cabinet. An evening both enjoyable and profitable in terms of footage.

Fred left for New York next morning, and Israel began to breathe again. Characteristically, Fred took one of the camera teams with him to the airport. He had heard that a plane was arriving that morning bringing immigrants from Cochin India, and he was determined to get it covered before catching his own plane. His luck held, and he managed to finish directing this sequence a few moments before his own plane was due to take off. By this time, all the airport officials, police and customs men were conditioned to carry out his slightest behest. So it was a small matter for him to be whisked from the immigrant plane tarmac to his waiting plane, the door shut behind him and the pilot signalled to carry him off.

Ed had one more assignment before leaving: coverage of an immigrant ship due to arrive in Haifa next morning. Eight o'clock found him at the port, standing at the foot of the gangplank, microphone in hand, interviewing some of the 852 immigrants from North Africa as they came off the ship. Most of them were going straight from the ship to a farm settlement in the south. Greeting them was a youth orchestra from Haifa, playing folk songs of Israel. Nearby were relatives andffriends, come to welcome them. It was a joyous sight.

As the cameras stopped rolling, the teams were about to utter a silent prayer of thanksgiving on completion of what was a fascinating but most gruelling assignment. The crews said that they had worked at that kind of tempo for two or three days at a time, but never for so sustained a period. But Ed had read the paper that morning. And his eye had caught a small stop-press item. It appears that the previous afternoon, Syrian infiltrators had crossed the border in the north and stolen a flock of 312 sheep belonging to Kibbutz Dan. "Let's go there and find out what happened. Let's set up the cameras at the actual spot where it occurred and interview the shepherd." So that's where the convoy headed for - Kibbutz Dan ("From Dan to Beersheba"), in the northeastern corner of Israel, situated on a finger-tip of land with the Syrians on three sides. Three hours later, Ed and the shepherd were 'on camera,' exactly three hundred yards from the Syrian frontier, and Ed learned that roughly the same time on the previous day, the shepherd had stood there with his flock when three Syrian infiltrators, one of them armed, had come across the border. He himself had been unarmed - as nothing had happened in those parts for a year or more. And so he had rushed back to the kibbutz to summon help, for many shepherds had been killed in Israel in the last few years. When they had returned, the sheep had gone. "Didn't you feel like going after them?" asked Ed. The shepherd smiled. "Of course we'd like to. But we know what happens. We chase them, cross the border in pursuit, and then the United Nations condems us for violating the frontier rather than the Syrians for crossing and rustling our sheep." "Will you get your sheep back?" "Who knows," replied the shepherd. "They stole a herd six months ago from another kibbutz. They've admitted that the cattle are in their hands. But we're still waiting.

The party said Goodbye to Kibbutz Dan - and practically goodbye to Israel, for Ed was on the plane next morning in an effort to make his Friday night "Person To Person" show. The two camera crews were left behind to complete the shooting of background sequences which did not require the presence of Murrow. They left on 21st February, and by 7:30 A.M. on the 22nd, Israel went back to work.

Postscript: Word came though three days after Ed left that the Syrians had returned 292 of Kibbutz Dan's sheep. Only 20 had been lost. This return, so speedily after the theft, is unprecedented. The general kibbutz theory is that it is due either to the Murrow broadcast on the subject, given the same evening, or to the setting up of the cameras, including a telelens, for the interview on the same spot. For the television operation was under Syrian observation from three sides. At all events, Murrow will long continue to be an honoured name in the annals of Kibbutz Dan.
